

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. ADDRESS.

IN submitting to their subscribers this edition of the History, Topography, and Directory of Derbyshire, the Publishers desire to return their sincere thanks for the very liberal support and encouragement they have received during its preparation. The compilation of the work has occupied a longer time than the Publishers anticipated, but as neither expense nor labour has been spared in procuring the latest information—each town and parish having been re-visited and revised immediately before going to press—they confidently believe that the general accuracy of the work has not been impaired by the delay. It would be presumptuous, however, to expect that a work of this kind could be compiled with absolute freedom from error, but it is hoped that any which may occur will not detract from its general utility.

In its arrangement the New Parliamentary Divisions have been adopted instead of the old and nearly obsolete Hundreds; and the parishes in each have been arranged in alphabetical sequence. A copious index will still further facilitate reference.

In the compilation of the work, the various county and local histories have been consulted, frequent references have been made to Dr. Cox's exhaustive work "The Churches of Derbyshire," and much valuable information has been received from many clergymen and gentlemen, to whom the Publishers take this opportunity of gratefully acknowledging their indebtedness. Their especial thanks are due to Mr. John Ward, F.S.A., for his "Notes on the Archæology of Derbyshire," and his interesting sketch of the rise and development of the town of Derby.

HISTORY OF DERBYSHIRE.

N the absence of historic record, it is impossible to point out with certainty either the period of man's first appearance in this island, or the country whence he came. The subject has engaged the attention of antiquarians for many years past, but the widely divergent conclusions at which they have arrived only prove the worthlessness of their speculations. Some, calling to their aid the deductions of geology, would have us believe that man's advent here was coeval with that far-off time when these islands formed an integral part of the continent, and the colossal mammoth, the woolly elephant, the hairy rhinoceros, the cave hyena, the cave bear, and other strange animal forms, whose bones have been found in caves in this country, wended their way hither over dry land, where now roll the waters of the German Ocean. This distant age has been variously estimated at from 60,000 to 600,000 years ago! Such are the wild and reckless guesses as to the time of man's first arrival here; and scarcely less happy have been the conclusions of antiquarians as to the part of the continent from which he came. Finmark, Denmark, Germany, France, Spain have each been named, and arguments more or less plausible advanced in support of their claims. The subject does not possess that general interest that we need enter further into it, suffice it to say that it is now generally admitted that the first inhabitants of this country were not of the Celtic race, nor had their language any affinity to that spoken by any branch of the Celtic race. It became extinct at an early date, but from the few words which have been preserved it has been inferred that it was identical in origin with the Basque.

This primitive race passed away without leaving a history behind, and for what we know of them we are indebted to the spade and not to musty records. The secret of their graves has been unlocked, and from such unpromising materials as the mouldering remains found therein Canon Greenwell, Dr. Thurnam, Professor Rolleston, Thomas Bateman, and others have unravelled the story of this primitive man. He was of short stature, with a head characterised by its length rather than its rotundity. His facial angle, as measured from his skull, and other evidence afforded by it, indicate the possession of a mild and pleasant countenance. He had domesticated the Bos-longifrons, a species of ox, and hunted the boar and red deer, out of whose bones he fabricated some of his weapons. He led a semi-pastoral sort of life, eking out his subsistence by the chase, and was acquainted with the use of fire in cooking his food. He had some knowledge of the potter's art, and when he died rudely formed earthen vessels, with his flint and bone implements, were buried with him, from which it has been inferred that he had some knowledge of a future state, where he would require the weapons he had used heretofore. He had reached but the incipient stages of civilization, and was, as yet, totally unacquainted with the working of metals.

How long these long-headed, or, as they have been technically termed, dolicho-cephalic men, held undisturbed possession of the country it is impossible to say, but at an early period, probably eight or ten centuries before the Christian era, their right was disputed by another race of men, who found their way hither by crossing the narrow sea which separates this island from Gaul, or, as we now call it, France. The new comers were Celtæ, and belonged to the Aryan branch of the human family. They were a superior race, both physically and mentally, and were distinguished from the people they found in possession by the roundness of their skulls. They knew how to fabricate implements of bronze, and possibly had some knowledge of the art of weaving. They had learned also to domesticate the goat and the dog as well as the Bos-longifrons. These invaders called themselves in their own language Gaidhels, pronounced Gaels, and Goidels. They seized the lands of the primitive inhabitants, whom they drove to the north and west; but they, in their turn, were intruded upon, some centuries later, by another Celtic people, speaking a language which differed considerably from that used by the first Celtic invaders. This second group was the Ancient Britons, or, as written in Welsh, Brythons, from whom our country has received the name of Britain. The Goidels retreated to the north and west, where their descendants are found to the present day. There they amalgamated with the Ivernian natives, whom they had driven thither, and in time became one race.

The Brythons had advanced further in civilization than their Goidelic neighbours; they had, at least in the south of the island, an organised system of commerce and a coinage modelled after the gold stater of Philip of Macedonia, and were not unacquainted with the textile art. Relics of these primitive people are abundant in Derbyshire. Their tumuli or burial-mounds are plentifully distributed, many of which were explored by the late Thomas Bateman, Esq., who has given to the world the result of his researches in a volume entitled "Ten Years' Diggings in Celtic and Saxon Grave Hills." Druid circles are still to be met with in many places in the Peak, and the rocking stones and other large monoliths, of which several still remain, are supposed to have been in some way associated with their worship or judicial administration.

These were the people whom the Romans found here on their arrival 55 years before the Christian era, when the regular consecutive history of this country begins; and it is to the leader of that expedition that we owe the first clear description of men and manners then existing in this island. "The Britons," says the Roman Conqueror, "use brass money, or iron rings of a certain weight instead of it. They think it not right to eat hares, poultry, or geese, though they breed them all for amusement. Of all the natives the most civilized are the inhabitants of Cantium (Kent), all that country lying on the sea-coast, and the manners of this differ but little from those of the Gauls. The inland inhabitants for the most part sow no corn, but live on milk and flesh, and clothe themselves with the skins of animals. All the Britons stain themselves with woad, which produces a blue colour, and gives them a horrible appearance in battle. They wear the hair of their head long, but close and bare on every part of their body, except their head and upper lip. * * * Most of them use chariots in battle. They first scour up and down on every side, throwing their darts, creating disorder among the ranks by the terror of their horses and noise of their chariot-wheels; and when they are among the troops of horse, they leap out and fight on foot. Meantime, the charioteers retire to a little distance from the field, and place themselves in such a manner that, if the others are overpowered by the number of the enemy, they may be secure to make good their retreat. Thus they act with the agility of cavalry and the steadiness of infantry in battle, and become so expert by constant practice that, on declivities and precipices, they can stop their horses when going at full speed, and on a sudden check and turn them, run along the pole, stand on the yoke, and then as quickly dart into their chariots again. They frequently retreat on purpose, and after they have drawn our men a little way from the main body, leap from their poles, and wage an unequal war on foot. Their manner of fighting on horseback creates the same danger, both to the retreator and the pursuer. Add to this that they never fight in bodies, but scattered and at great distances, and have parties in reserve supporting one another, and fresh troops ready to relieve the weary."

Cæsar's description refers only to the Britons of the south, for he never passed beyond the Thames, and it is evident that, though the natives had not the discipline of the Roman army, they were not unacquainted with military strategy. The tribe that dwelt further north, in those parts now known as Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Rutland, and Northampton, Cæsar calls Coritani, and the various flint and bronze weapons found in their tumuli show that, though less civilized, they were not less warlike than their southern neighbours.

Cæsar accepted the feigned submission of the southern tribes and returned to Gaul, and Britain retained its independence for about a century longer. The Romans then re-asserted their claim, and gradually the whole island was subdued and brought under Roman dominion. We know from Tacitus and other Roman historians how valiantly they opposed the disciplined armies of Rome, and the numerous earthworks and intrenchments which remain in Derbyshire and other parts of the country show that every foot of ground was stubbornly contested with the conquerors. The Coritani were one of the two tribes forming the kingdom of the Icenî, the capital of which was Camulodunum (supposed to be Lexden, near Colchester); but this part of the little kingdom was very thinly populated, and does not appear to have possessed a single town, and the villages were merely clusters of huts which have left no trace behind.

Under Roman sway the central part of the country, including the district inhabited by the Coritani, formed the province of Flavia Cæsariensis. To secure their conquests the Romans erected stations and constructed roads which, if not in every case, at least in one, followed the line of the former British trackway. This was Ryknield Street, which entered this county on the south-west, near Egginton, where antiquaries have found traces of it, but it is now entirely obliterated by the road which follows it to Littleover. Here, just before reaching the village, it diverges to the left and passes on over Nun's Green and across the Derwent to Little Chester, the Derventio of the Romans. It passed on thence, by Breadsall, over Morley Moor, near Horsley Woodhouse, and on in a north-easterly direction, but no traces are now discoverable.

Another road led from Buxton to the small camp at Brough, and is still known in places as Bathomgate or Bathgate (i.e. the road to the baths). From Brough it has been traced northwards to Melandra Castle, near Glossop. A fourth road has been traced to the south of Buxton a little to the east of the Ashbourne Road, passing near the Druid's Circle, on Arbelows, thence to the south-east over Brassington Moor, and on to Little Chester.

No evidence is forthcoming to show that the ancient Britons were acquainted with the lead which lay in such abundance beneath the surface, but it is certain that these lead mines were worked by the Romans. Pigs of the metal bearing Roman inscriptions have been found in the neighbourhood of Matlock, and one was recently dug up on Tansley Moor bearing the inscription, in raised Roman letters, P. R. ABASCANTI METALLI LVTVDARES. Near the place where it was found is an ancient British trackway, which the Roman used for the conveyance of the lead from the mines. One of the pigs found was inscribed SOCIO ROMÆ ("To my partner at Rome"), from which it has been inferred that the lead was an article of commerce. Many Roman coins and remains have been found at Little Chester, Brough, and Chesterfield, which will be noticed more at length in the topography.

After the departure of the Romans, hordes of semi-barbarous Saxons, Angles, and Jutes from the Baltic coast and the marshlands of Jutland, poured into the country, and eventually appropriated it, dividing it into seven kingdoms. The central portion, including what we now call Derbyshire, was formed into the Kingdom of Mercia, the largest and most powerful of these seven petty monarchies known as the Saxon Heptarchy. The new comers were pagans, and Christianity, which had been introduced during the Roman domination, had no greater enemy than Penda who ruled over the Mercians. Repton was the capital of his kingdom, and after the conversion of Peada an abbey was erected here sometime before A.D. 660, in which several of the Kings of Mercia were buried. After many internecine wars and much bloodshed, the seven kingdoms were consolidated by Egbert of Wessex, Mercia and Northumbria being the last to submit to his rule. But they still continued to possess a nominal royalty in a line of under-lords or tributary kings.

Scarcely had Egbert established his supremacy over the other princes of the heptarchy, when he found himself assailed by hordes of barbarians from the shores of Norway, Denmark, and the islands of the Baltic. They were the near kinsmen of the Jutes and the Angles, and spoke a language not so wildly dissimilar but that the one was intelligible to the other. Unaccustomed to the peaceful art of agriculture, they sought subsistence by plundering neighbouring shores. We know them as Danes, Scandinavians, or Norsemen. Their first invasion was in 789, and after that they made frequent descents, plundering the towns and villages near the coast, and then embarking with their booty. At first they were content with the plunder they could carry off, but soon afterwards they maintained an intention to dispossess the Saxon of the fertile fields of Britain. Northumbria was the first to fall under their sway, and the indifference with which the other kingdoms witnessed its conquest stimulated the Danes to further aggression. In 868, led by Ingvar and Ubba, sons of Ragnar Sodbrog, they advanced into Mercia, and beset Nottingham. Ethelred of Wessex, the over-lord, came to the assistance of the Mercians, but there appears to have been no concerted action, and the latter made peace with the enemy. Three years later the Danes appeared again in Mercia, spreading death and desolation along their track. They advanced against Repton, destroyed the abbey, drove Burhred, the under-king, over the sea, and took possession of his little kingdom, which they gave, says Ingulphus, "in ward to Ceolwulf an unwise thegn who swore fealty to them." A considerable number of them settled in the district, their principal stronghold being the town of Derby, which received from them its present Danish name. Other place-names bear evidence of this Danish settlement, and not a few of the family names common in the county can be traced to a Danish or Scandinavian origin. Besides Derby the Danes held the towns of Nottingham, Leicester, Lincoln, and Stamford. Half Celtic Wessex alone of all the Heptarchy made any effectual resistance to the further encroachments of the heathen invaders. The Angles of Northumbria and East Anglia submitted with scarcely a blow, as if they were indifferent whether they had for their over-lord a West Saxon or a Dane. The latter, indeed, was a nearer kinsman of the Angle than was the Saxon. In their old home they had been near neighbours, and the dialects they spoke were mutually comprehensible, whilst the Saxon was more foreign both in blood and speech.

The renowned Alfred stopped for a while the tide of Danish conquest, and by his splendid victory over Guthrum recovered Wessex and Mercia. Guthrum and his principal officers consenting to become Christians and acknowledge Alfred as King were permitted to hold Northumbria and the northern part of Mercia, and for some years there was comparative quiet. Though the Danes submitted, they chafed under Saxon subjection, and no sooner was Alfred dead than they began to manifest a spirit of revolt. Edward the Elder, who had succeeded to the throne of his father, led the West Saxons against them. His sister Ethelfleda, widow of Ethelred, Ealdorman of Mercia, ruled over a portion of that little kingdom, with the title of Lady of Mercia. The Danes held the north, and this Ethelfleda determined to wrest from them. Imitating the policy of her illustrious father, she erected a line of fortress or burhs for the protection of her dominions at Sarrat, Bridgnorth, Tamworth, Warwick, and other places. Alarmed at such extensive preparations for defence, the Danes invited the Welsh to aid them in maintaining their position. Ethelfleda attacked the combined forces, defeated them, and the invaders fled for refuge to Derby. Thither they were pursued by Ethelfleda, who took the town by storm after a stubborn resistance. Hughau, the Welsh prince, was slain in the conflict; the Danish leader fled into Northumbria; and the castle was entirely destroyed. Her next military success was the capture of Leicester; and she was preparing to subjugate the Danes of Yorkshire when she died in 918 in her royal town of Tamworth. Edward, the overlord, carried forward the successful campaign begun by Ethelfleda, and in 923, at the head of the Mercian host, he captured "Manchester in Northumbria." About this time, the Saxon chronicle tells us, he built a town at Badecanwyllan, in Peaceland, and fortified it with a burh or castle. Badecanwyllan, or the "Bathing-well," is generally supposed to be Bakewell, and the ramparts or earth-work of an ancient fort are still traceable on a hill close to the town.

Mercia, under succeeding kings, still continued to play an active part in the political and military history of the country, but its dukes were as often in league with the Danes as with the King. There is very little recorded having any relation with Derbyshire, but the town of Derby appears to have been a place of some importance, and had the privilege of a mint; coins struck there have, at various times, been discovered.

We may glean from the Domesday Book how Derbyshire fared under the Normans. The stalwart men of Derbyshire were amongst the most obstinate opponents of the Conqueror, and as a consequence their lands were filched from them and bestowed by William upon the lords and knights who had accompanied him from Normandy. To his illegitimate son, William de Peverel, he gave twenty manors in this county, besides extensive possessions in Nottinghamshire. Thirty manors were bestowed upon Ralph Fitzhubert, and one hundred and fourteen on Henry de Ferrers, who had also nearly as many in other parts of the country. The King retained in his own possession one hundred and twelve manors and the town of Derby. The confiscation was most complete, and scarcely a single Englishman was left in possession of the lands he had inherited from his fathers. Having thus profusely distributed the land and property of the country amongst his rapacious followers, the Conqueror erected numerous fortresses to overawe the insulted and oppressed inhabitants. Conscious of the detestation in which he was deservedly held, he entertained a perpetual jealousy of the English, and in the restless apprehensions of his guilty mind he compelled them to rake out their fires and extinguish their lights at the hour of eight every night; and they were reminded of their obligation by the tolling of the curfew bell. The English did not, however, tamely submit to Norman rule; Edric the Wild long held out in Herefordshire, and Hereward le Wake kept them at bay in the fens of Cambridgeshire. Gospatric, Earl of Northumbria, Waltheof, Earl of Huntingdon, and Earls Edwin and Morcar of Mercia raised the standard of revolt in the north, but Derbyshire does not appear to have had any share in the military operations that followed.

The century which followed the Conquest was unmarked by any events of importance. There had been a gradual fusion of the English and Normans, and the country slowly recovered from the devastation inflicted upon it by the Norman army. In 1138 the right of King Stephen to the Crown was disputed by the Empress Matilda, and her cause was espoused by David, King of Scotland. An undisciplined host of Scots crossed the border, and advanced southward into Yorkshire, profaning the churches, burning and pillaging monasteries and villages, and slaughtering promiscuously the young, aged, and defenceless. Thurston, the venerable Archbishop of York, summoned the nobility and gentry to assemble with their retainers to repel the invaders. The chief command was entrusted to Walter l'Espece, who was supported by William de Albemarle, Walter de Gand, Robt. de Brus, Roger de Mowbray, William de Percy, Robt. de Stuteville, and Robert de Ferrers, who led the men of Derbyshire. The two armies met near Northallerton, and the Scots were totally routed. This battle is known in history as the "Battle of the Standard." The Derbyshire men distinguished themselves in the conflict, and Robert de Ferrers was rewarded for his services with the Earldom of Derby.

Never had the country presented such a scene of misery since the invasions of the Danes as it did at this time. The barons, divided in their allegiance between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, fortified their castles, and for the while became freebooters, plundering the country, torturing those whom they suspected had any wealth, whether friend or foe, and committing the most inhuman excesses. Secure within their moated castles and surrounded by a numerous body of retainers, they set at naught the restraints of law and justice, and often hurled defiance at the Crown itself. Both competitors connived at the excesses of their adherents, and both parties were eager to retaliate.

The Peverils, descended from an illegitimate son of the Conqueror, had always been staunchly loyal to the Crown, but the third William de Peveril incurred the displeasure of Henry II., and lost all his broad lands. He was convicted or rather accused of having poisoned Ranulph, Earl of Chester, and the atrocity of the deed was aggravated by the complicity of the victim's faithless wife. Peveril fled for sanctuary to Lenton Priory, and assumed the monastic garb. The rank and power of the Earl demanded vengeance, and Peveril feeling the insecurity of his position, secretly quitted the priory and fled the kingdom. His estates were confiscated, and his Derbyshire manors now form part of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Little is recorded of the county in the troublous reign of King John, yet its leading nobleman, the Earl Ferrers, was one of the witnesses to the charter in which King John surrendered this realm to the Pope; but Derbyshire did not pass unscathed through the turmoil and strife of the following reign. The Magna Charta, which had been wrung from King John, guaranteed the liberties of the people and restrained within certain well defined limits the power of the Crown; but no sooner was Henry III. emancipated from the control of his guardian than he began to evince a strong desire to trample underfoot the provisions of the Great Charter and rule by his own arbitrary will. The barons opposed him, and drew the sword in defence of their rights. One of the most powerful of the confederated barons was Robert Ferrers, Earl of Derby, who exhibited the ferocity of his character by plundering the Jews of Worcester and burning their houses. Prince Henry, the king's nephew, marched an army of foreign mercenaries into Derbyshire, and devastated the estates of all those who were allied with the discontented barons. He then marched towards Tutbury Castle, which he destroyed, and returned into Derbyshire. The Earl of Derby rallied his followers at Duffield, the castle of which he had rebuilt and fortified. There he was joined by Baldwin le Wake and his men from the marshes of Lincolnshire; and the veteran Baron D'Ayville with his Yorkshiremen had reached Dronfield on his way to swell the insurgent forces. To prevent this junction Prince Henry led his royalist army across the lower ridges of the Peak district; and the Earl, after levying contributions from Derby and the surrounding districts, followed in the same direction. His progress was very much impeded by the swollen state of the river Amber, and Prince Henry, considerably in advance, encountering the Yorkshire insurgents near Chesterfield, routed them. Earl Ferrers entered that town with his troops exhausted by forced marches over the hills, and was attacked the same night by the royalists. The conflict was fierce and the slaughter immense on both sides. The Prince fired several buildings and threatened to burn the whole town. The Lincolnshire men taking advantage of the darkness fled in panic. The Earl's men continued the fight in the Market place and adjacent streets until they were completely overpowered, and the Earl with a few of his followers sought refuge in the church. Finding escape impossible he surrendered, and Parliament shortly afterwards decreed the confiscation of all his estates, which were conferred upon Prince Edmund, the King's second son, together with the earldom of Derby. The Earl remained three years in prison, and through the intercession of influential friends he obtained the restitution of the castle and manor of Chartley in Staffordshire and the hamlet of Holbrooke in Derbyshire.

After the death of Henry III. Derbyshire enjoyed a period of repose, for though Edward I. was almost constantly at war, the scene of strife was in the territories of the foe. Intestinal troubles characterized the whole reign of his weak-minded son, Edward II. He bestowed his affections on favourites in whom he confided, and lavished on them titles and vast estates. This irritated the barons, who, headed by the Earl of Lancaster and Derby, rose in rebellion, and both the royal and baronial forces marched through the county pillaging and devastating the districts through which they passed. The Earl's troops from Tutbury Castle encountered the royal forces at Burton, where a sharp conflict took place. The King entered Tutbury Castle without opposition, and the Earl retreated with the remnant of his force to his Castle of Pontefract. Shortly afterwards he suffered a severe defeat at Boroughbridge, was taken prisoner, and led back to Pontefract Castle. Here he was arraigned, convicted, and beheaded.

There is little to record of Derbyshire during the reign of Edward III. The Scots declined to submit to the dictatorship of Edward III., and in considerable force penetrated into the north of England devastating the districts through which they passed; and for the protection of the inhabitants the King issued a writ to the sheriffs of Derby, Nottingham, Lancashire, &c., permitting them to withdraw themselves with their goods and cattle out of the county into the southern parts of the kingdom, and there to remain, wherever they chose, in the King's woods, forests, and pastures during their pleasure. But signal and speedy vengeance was inflicted on the Scots at Hallidon Hill, and the necessity of seeking protection for themselves and their cattle in the King's forests and pastures was happily averted.

Derbyshire passed scatheless through the wars between the rival houses of York and Lancaster, but she was not so fortunate in the war between Charles I. and the Parliament, and many a family of affluence and distinction was reduced to ruin and sank into oblivion. Most of the gentry and burgesses of the county were favourable to the royal cause and thus drew upon themselves the vengeance of the Cromwellites, who raided their houses, singing canticles of praise to the Lord as they carried off the plunder. The royal standard was erected at Nottingham in August, 1642, and the King passed through Derby, where he received from the Corporation a loan of £300 and as many arms and implements of war as could be found, which he promised to return at the conclusion of the war. Three months later Sir John Gell, of Hopton, a Parliamentary leader, with a small regiment of foot marched from Hull to Chesterfield, thence to Wirksworth, and drove Sir Francis Wortley and his handful of royalists out of the town. He then proceeded to Derby, which he garrisoned with very little difficulty, though but a short while before the inhabitants had been loud in their protestations of loyalty. The Earl of Chesterfield fortified his house at Bretby for the king, and Sir John Gell with his augmented force attacked the house and put the small garrison to flight. The Countess remained, and refusing to comply with their demand for money, the house was given up to plunder. There were royalist forces at Tutbury, Lichfield, and Ashby-de-la-Zouch ready to proceed against Derby. A small force of royalists under General Hastings and Sir John Harpur fortified the house of the latter at Swarkston, but they were overpowered by the force sent against them from Derby, though they made a vigorous defence at the bridge over the Trent. Success often decides the wavering, and Sir John Gell's forces daily received accessions of strength. He had companies at Winfield Manor, Wingerworth, and Chatsworth, from which he was able to send detachments to the assistance of Sir Thomas Fairfax. The approach of the Earl of Newcastle with a strong force of royalists turned for a short while the tide of victory. South Winfield Manor House was taken, but the Earl, instead of following up his success, retreated with the greater part of his army into Yorkshire. Sir John Gell, having obtained assistance from the parliamentary forces at Nottingham, laid siege to the little stronghold, but the garrison stubbornly resisted. The royalists of the county assembled their forces at Burton to go to the relief of the manor. Major Sanders was despatched with dragoons to intercept them, and at Boyleston he captured by a stratagem Colonel Eyre and his whole regiment, who had taken up their quarters for the night in the church. The news of this loss damped the spirits of the royalists, who, after a few skirmishes, were driven out of Burton and dispersed. The siege of Winfield was then proceeded with, and the garrison capitulated. Another futile attempt was made by the royalists of the Peak, who, to the number of about 300 horse, assembled at Tissington, where they were speedily routed; and the battle of Naseby, fought soon afterwards, gave the death-blow to royalty for a time.

Cromwell's short reign, harsh and oppressive, with its stern measures for the suppression of every form of amusement, produced a reaction in the popular mind against Puritanical government; and scarcely had the mantle of the Dictator fallen on his son Richard when the people of Derbyshire openly showed their discontent by a tumultuous demonstration in the Market Place at Derby. The insurgents were dispersed by a force of dragoons, but the restoration of Charles II. was accomplished shortly afterwards.

Derbyshire played an important part in the Revolution of 1688, which placed William, Prince of Orange, on the throne of the Stuarts, and drove James II. into exile. The first secret meeting of the conspirators was held at the "Cock and Pynot," a roadside public-house in Whittington, near Chesterfield, and the result of their deliberations was an invitation to the Prince of Orange. The Earl of Devonshire, the ruling spirit of the conspiracy, marched at the head of 500 men to the town of Derby, where "he declared against James II. and in favour of his Dutch son-in-law." The Earl was handsomely rewarded by the new King, who raised him to the highest rank in the peerage.

The Revolution was quietly and, in many places, joyously accepted by the people, but in the reign of Queen Anne a desire was manifested in high places for the restoration of the Stuart dynasty. In 1709 Dr. Sacheverell, a celebrated divine of strong Tory proclivities, preached at All Saints', Derby, and at St. Paul's Cathedral two famous sermons, in which he held up to ridicule the Whig government that had dominated the country since the accession of William III., and stigmatised the Revolution as an unrighteous change. The sermons were voted scandalous and libellous by the Government, and Sacheverell was impeached of high crimes and misdemeanours. His trial lasted three weeks, and the mild sentence passed upon him was received in Derby with acclamations of joy.

When the Earl of Derwentwater unfurled the standard of rebellion in favour of the Pretender he had many sympathisers in Derbyshire, but no active assistance was given, and a few years later, in 1745, when "Bonnie Prince Charlie" made the final attempt to oust the Guelph from the throne, he led his brawny Highlanders as far as Derby on his intended march to London. Two regiments of volunteers were hastily raised for the defence of the town, but their courage sank to zero as the Highlanders approached, and they fled precipitately to Nottingham, leaving the inhabitants to take care of themselves. The Prince's march had so far been a conspicuous success, but now dissensions and jealousies arose amongst his followers. A council of war was held, and a retreat was decided on. Next day the Highland army quitted the town, and the inhabitants, who had suffered little injury either in purse or goods, returned to their usual equanimity.

After the close of the Napoleonic war trade was bad, money scarce, and numbers of the people were clamouring for bread. In 1817 a few Derbyshire stockingers and handloom weavers hatched a plot at Pentrich to overthrow the Government, whom they foolishly believed to be responsible for the general stagnation. Their leader was one Jeremiah Brandreth, who incited them to deeds of violence with such doggerel as this—

No bloody soldiers must we dread,
We must turn out and fight for bread.
The time is come, you plain must see,
The Government opposed must be.

As they passed from village to village their numbers increased to nearly three hundred, and with this mere handful they determined to attack first Nottingham and then Derby. Their march came to a speedy and inglorious termination at Eastwood, where they were dispersed by a troop of hussars. Upwards of 30 were captured and committed to take their trial for high treason. The three ringleaders—Brandreth, Ludlam, and Turner—were found guilty, and sentenced to be hanged, drawn, and quartered.

In later years the state of the county has been one of steady progress, the construction of railways has opened out its mineral resources and extended the trade of local industries.

NOTES ON THE ARCHÆOLOGY OF DERBYSHIRE.

By JOHN WARD, F.S.A.

From an archæological point of view, Derbyshire has long been recognised as one of the most important counties in England. Since the numerous contributions of Major Hayman Rooke and Rev. Dr. Pegge to the pages of "Archæologia" last century, there has been an almost constant stream of investigators of its antiquities, and some of the works they have written rank high in the archæological literature of the country. It must not, however, be concluded from this that any one class of its antiquities is of exceptional value; on the contrary, its interest lies in their great diversity, every class into which English archæology is usually divided being represented, some, as might be expected, more fully than others. The archæological literature is copious. The volumes of "Archæologia" for the last two decades of the last century contain, as above stated, numerous papers by Dr. Pegge and Major Rooke. Glover's "History of Derbyshire" recounts most of the discoveries made during the first thirty years of the present century. Bateman's "Vestiges of the Antiquities of Derbyshire" and "Ten Years' Diggings," are records of extensive investigations among the British, Roman, and Saxon grave-mounds of the county and the adjacent part of Staffordshire, by the late Thomas and William Bateman. The "Reliquary," from the circumstance that it is published at Derby and up till 1890 was edited by Derbyshire antiquaries, is replete with information respecting the district; and this, of course, applies with stronger force to the Journals of the Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society. The ecclesiology is exhaustively treated by Rev. J. C. Cox, LL.D., in "Notes on the Churches of Derbyshire," a work unsurpassed of its kind. The "Quarterly Journal" of the Geological Society, Pennington's "Barrows and Bone Caves of Derbyshire," and Bigsby's "History of Repton," also contain important original contributions on this aspect of the county.

Archæological time in the west of Europe falls readily into two salient and well-defined æons, corresponding with the Pleistocene and Post-pleistocene or Recent eras of the geologist, the latter era extending to our own time. These eras were dissimilar from one another in several respects. The Pleistocene climate oscillated between extremes of arctic coldness and sub-tropical heat, and these were accompanied with corresponding changes in the fauna and flora. The deposits of this era consequently exhibit forms now confined to more northern or to more southern latitudes. A still more marked difference from the present was the presence of mammals which are now extinct. These oscillations of climate were also responsible for great changes in the configuration of the surface, chiefly through glacial action. The Recent period, on the other hand, represents a course of time during which the present conditions as to climate, surface contour, and life have undergone but little change. Although appropriately recent time to the geologist, it nevertheless is of such immense duration as to include all pre-historic time covered by the neolithic, bronze, and early iron ages, and all subsequent historic time.

THE PLEISTOCENE ERA.

The Pleistocene deposits of Derbyshire are insignificant compared with those of most other counties. Here and there in the Peak small patches of glacial drift may be met with, occupying hollows and sheltered slopes, which so far coalesce in the less hilly districts of the southern half of the county as to form a discontinuous superficial veneer; but they have not yielded any remains of man or his handiwork. The river gravels and "terraces" are equally insignificant and devoid of these remains. The third and only class of deposits which have yielded remains of Pleistocene man and animals are those which occur as "fox-earths," breccias, and stalagmites in caverns and fissures. But, considering how very numerous these natural cavities are in the Peak, it must be admitted that the recorded instances of such discoveries are very few indeed, probably because only a few have had their floors scientifically examined. Three small caves—the Pin, Church, and Robin Hood Holes—at Creswell, on the north-east border of the county, however, have yielded archæological results unsurpassed by any other English cave, except the famous Kent's Cavern at Torquay. The discovery that these "caves" contained relics of the past was made by the Rev. Magens Mello, F.G.S., about twenty years ago, and this led to their systematic excavation by this gentleman, aided by Professor Boyd Dawkins, F.S.A., and the late Mr. Heath, of Derby, in 1875 and 1876. Reports of this work were published in the "Journal of the Geological Society" for those years; also in the Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Journal for 1878, in "Barrows and Bone Caves of Derbyshire," and in a brochure by Mr. Heath, "An Abstract Description and History of the Bone Caves of Creswell Crags." Not only did the investigation prove, beyond a doubt, the co-existence of man with the great extinct mammals of the Pleistocene, but it proved also that that era was of immense duration, with clearly marked periods, during which there "were successive races of men exhibiting a progressive civilisation." The implements of the lowest bed (the deposits of the three caves were practically identical) were of the "rudest possible construction"—quartzite pebbles which had been used, without any preparation, as hammers, crushers, and pot-boilers, or rudely chipped, so as to enable them to be more easily handled; or the flakes therefrom, adapted, by a little additional chipping, for use as scrapers, knives, or hatchets. In the higher beds, quartzite was replaced by flint for implements, fabricated into simple forms at first, then more complex as the topmost beds were reached—"well-made lance heads, chipped on both faces," and "delicately made borers and scrapers." With these occurred bone needles, pins, awls, and arrow-heads, such as have been found in Kent's Cavern and in Continental caves. But the most remarkable object was the sketch of an unmistakable Pleistocene horse on a piece of flat bone,—“the first trace of pictorial art yet discovered in Great Britain.” Similar sketches have been found in deposits of the same era in Switzerland and Aquitaine, and this Derbyshire specimen, taken in connection with the general character of the implements with which it was associated, "affords the clearest proof that the hunters of Southern France and Switzerland had found their way along the great eastern valley now covered with the waters of the German Ocean, and wandered as far north as the borders of Yorkshire."

The other Pleistocene discoveries of Derbyshire do not strictly come within the range of archaeology, as they have not been accompanied with traces of man; one, however, that of an immense number of bones of bison, reindeer, and other Pleistocene animals, at Windy Knoll, near Castleton, illustrated the immense lapse of time between that era and the present day. The deposit containing these bones was in a fissure of the limestone, which, in the course of exploration by the late Mr. Rooke Pennington, Professor Boyd Dawkins, and Mr. Tym, in 1874 and 1876, was proved to be an ancient "water-swallow," or opening through which water disappeared into a subterranean channel. The bones were obviously those of animals who resorted to the swallow to drink, and were either swamped or drowned there. Windy Knoll is an elevated neck of land, separating the Winnets and Hope Dale from a valley extending two miles towards Chapel-en-le-Frith, an impossible position for an active water-swallow, now. Hence since these animals met their fate the surface of the district has been greatly altered and generally lowered, and from being in a valley bottom, Windy Knoll is now an elevated tract of ground.

The following is a list of the Pleistocene mammals whose remains have hitherto been found in this county:—mammoth, woolly rhinoceros, bison, urus, cave lion (leo spelæa), machairodus latidens, leopard, arctic fox (canis lagopus), cave hyæna (hyæna spelæa), lynx, glutton, reindeer, Irish elk (cervus megaceras), red deer, roe deer, wild boar, horse, grizzly bear, brown bear, wolf, fox, wild cat, pole cat, water-vole, bat, shrew.

POST-PLEISTOCENE MAN.

Wherever Pleistocene and Post-Pleistocene (or Recent) deposits occur together in Western Europe, there is invariably a sharp line of demarcation between them, probably representing the last glaciation of the Great Ice Age. This break is not repeated in subsequent times. With the return of the temperate climate, which we still enjoy, came the existing fauna and flora, and the ancestors of the older races of men in this part of Europe. From that time to the present there has been no sudden transition. Human culture has made a more or less even progression. Consequently the periods—Neolithic, Bronze, and Early Iron—into which the pre-historic portion of Post-Pleistocene time is usually divided by archæologists, must not in any sense be regarded as sharply defined, nor even, in any given locality, as necessarily consecutive periods. They represent stages in an evolution; hence have been separated by transitional periods. It is equally certain that some tribes were more advanced than their neighbours, and that the latter, while substantially of lower culture, may have obtained implements proper to a higher culture, by barter. This indicates how unwise it is to make the character of implements the sole criterion for the determination of their relative ages. Still it is possible, and with a considerable degree of certainty, to determine the general sequence in time of some of the more important groups of Derbyshire antiquities.

CHAMBERED BARROWS.—At Minginglow (two) and Harborough Rocks, near Brassington, Bole Hill, near Bakewell, Ringham Low, near Moneyash, and Five Wells, near Taddington, are the remains of barrows containing megalithic chambers, such as are with general consent attributed to the neolithic stage of culture. All of these, with the exception of that of Harborough Rocks (which was opened by the writer—D. A. & N. H. Soc.'s Journal, 1889), were examined by the Batemans ("Vestige, &c." and "Ten Years' Diggings"), but were found to have been previously rifled or much disturbed. In every instance in which the original interments remained the skulls were dolichocephalic, and the flint implements, delicate leaf-shaped arrow-heads. The chambers were constructed of slabs of stone, and were occasionally paved and accompanied with remains of galleries. Contrary to the general rule, the mounds appear to have been more or less circular instead of elongated; and in one instance, at least, that of the famous Mininglow barrow, the base was protected with a podium of dry walling.

But the larger number by far of the Derbyshire archaic burial-places belong to succeeding times. Taking into consideration only those which have yielded results of archæological interest, and including a considerable number opened by the late Mr. Thomas Bateman and his Staffordshire colleague, Mr. Carrington, in the parts of that county adjacent to Derbyshire, no less than about 380 of this class have had their contents published. Of these, some 330, mostly opened by the above-mentioned gentlemen, found a place in the pages of "Vestiges, &c." and "Ten Years' Diggings." The number of separate interments, whether of one individual or of several buried together at one time, which have been described, cannot be less than 700. Although presenting the greatest diversity they can be grouped into several more or less distinct classes, which in some measure represent successive portions of time, extending from the neolithic chambers to the dawn of Saxon Christianity. They may be conveniently divided into British, Romano-British, and Saxon.

BRITISH INTERMENTS.—About 280 of the 380 barrows may be classed as British, Celtic, or pre-Roman. Some few of these approach the neolithic chambers, in the large size of their cists, and perhaps should be regarded as transitional, while others seem to synchronize with the Roman occupation. Their builders practised both inhumation and cremation, sometimes together. Whether inhumated or cremated, the interment was either simply buried in the earth, or deposited in a vault roofed with slabs of stone, or in an enclosure formed by slabs of stone set on end, or in a further development of this, the box-like cist, formed by adding a roof of slabs to this enclosure. This receptacle, although similar to the neolithic chamber in construction, differed in having no entrance or gallery, and in not being used for successive interments. The cover-mounds of these different forms of sepulture in Derbyshire also varied. The simplest and most frequent was the bowl-shaped cairn, a heap of stones thrown together; sometimes, however, the stones were laid together with considerable order; sometimes they were intermixed with earth; or the mound consisted of earth or fine materials only. When not bowl-shaped it was flat and table-like, or rendered irregular through the additions of secondary interments. The base of the mound was frequently defined by a ditch, a circle of standing stones, or an annular mound, singly, or combined with one another. The central mound might then decline in size and disappear, and ultimately the barrow would consist simply of a circular area of the natural surface enclosed by these fences.

When simply inhumated, the dead body was invariably consigned to its resting place in a flexed or contracted posture, on its side; sometimes, however, sitting. When cremated, the calcined bones were occasionally allowed to remain as left by the pyre, but more frequently they were collected into a heap on the spot, or were transferred to a depression in the ground, to a cist, or to a flat stone,—free, tied in a cloth, or deposited in a basket or other perishable receptacle, or in an earthen urn. These rude hand-made, half-burnt vessels had in Derbyshire a very constant and characteristic form, not unlike that of a common flower-pot, but with a slightly contracted mouth and a deep over-hanging lip, which was almost invariably decorated. They were buried up-right, with a stone over the mouth, or mouth downwards and resting on a stone.

The objects of human manufacture which have been found with these British interments in Derbyshire have a common likeness, and indicate but little progress in culture. Flint flakes and implements (chiefly arrow and spear heads, and scrapers), almost invariably of rude workmanship, were the most frequent, occurring in, at least 45 per cent. of the interments opened. Bone implements—as borers, pins, arrow-points, net-rules, &c., followed next, although a long way behind—being found in 19 per cent. In 16 per cent., bronze objects occurred, chiefly dagger-blades, which were secured to their handles with three rivets; and also awls, spear-heads, pins, ear-rings, rings, and other small articles of personal use. In $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., jet and amber ornaments occurred, several being very elaborate necklaces. Iron was only sparingly present— $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.—and there are doubts whether, in several of these cases, it was contemporary with the burial. Besides the above, polished basalt and granite hammers and axes, fragments of querns, whet-stones, quartz pebbles, red ochre, and iron ore were occasionally found. The animal remains associated with these interments were those of still-existing species in Europe, and they included the present domestic animals—ox, sheep, goat, hog, horse, and dog. But the most remarkable accompaniments of the British interments are the vessels. These are identical as to paste and decoration with the cinerary urns, but differ in shape. Two varieties are termed “drinking” and “food vessels,” probably rightly so, as there is little doubt that they contained offerings of food and drink; but a third, a very diminutive and inconstant form, is fancifully and certainly incorrectly designated the “incense cup.” The following is an analysis of their occurrence in this county and the adjacent parts of Staffordshire:—

35 drinking cups, associated only with inhumated interments;

70 food vases, associated with 55 inhumated, and 15 unurned cremated interments; and 12 incense cups associated only with urned cremated interments.

This table seems to indicate, that either these different groups of vessels related to different tribes, or were not strictly contemporary with one another. The former quite accords with the known mixture of races in the midlands; but various additional circumstances tend not only to corroborate the latter view, but also to indicate that the order of the table is approximately the order in time. It must not be inferred, however, that the urned interments supplanted inhumation, but that they represent a newer mode which continued side by side with the older. Both modes are known to have continued down to the Roman occupation; but there does not seem to be a recorded instance, in this part of the country at least, in which a drinking cup or food vase was associated with Roman objects.

There are features in these Derbyshire-Staffordshire interments which point to sad British customs. In about 26 interments, the skeleton of an infant was associated with that of an adult, usually a woman and presumably the mother: this seems to indicate infanticide. The occasional presence of a woman's skeleton with a man's, probably points to Sutteeism. More frequently—about 55 cases—burnt human bones accompanied an inhumated skeleton. In these, the skeleton seems to represent the interment proper, the burnt bones being an accessory, probably the relics of a human sacrifice. The almost invariable presence of charcoal has long been considered to point to the use of fire as a religious ceremony to prepare the grave for its occupant. It can hardly be, that this was unaccompanied with sacrifice, indeed the usual presence of animals' bones tends to confirm this; and if so, there is nothing unlikely in human beings being occasionally the victims.

The British barrows are by no means evenly distributed over the area under consideration, a circumstance mainly due to the unequal progress of agriculture. They are most numerous on the moors and hills between Bakewell, Winster, and Hartington; around Eyam, Brassington, and Earl Sterndale; and on the Staffordshire side of Door Dale. It is an interesting point in the distribution that in several localities certain kinds of interments prevail. For instance, on Stanton Moor and its vicinity, cremated interments, urned or otherwise, predominate; while between Eyam, Castleton, and Sheffield the interments have almost invariably belonged to the urned cremated group.

ROMANO-BRITISH BARROWS.—About 50 barrows, interspersed among the foregoing, had a strong family likeness, and various circumstances pointed to their Roman age. The peculiar construction of their mounds was their most noticeable feature:—The materials were invariably fine, as clays of various colours, sand, gravel, and, in one instance, even moss, rarely singly, but usually disposed in layers. The interments were invariably of cremated remains, not enclosed in cists or urns, or protected in any way. In every case the barrow appeared to have occupied the site of the funeral pyre; and more frequently than not, the human remains lay just as the fire left them; when otherwise, they were collected into a heap. As a rule, each barrow covered only one interment. The manufactured objects were singularly few and of little value. Those of flint were the most frequent, but were rarely sufficiently worked to be regarded as implements. In quite 32 per cent. of the interments, potsherds were found. These had been introduced as potsherds, not as perfect vessels; moreover, the vessels they belonged to were not of the British sepulchral type, but were obviously made for common domestic purposes. Many of these were described as hard and as made on the wheel, and occasionally potsherds of more distinct Roman type were found; these leave little room for doubt that these barrows were Romano-British.

ANCIENT NON-ROMAN CAMPS.—While it is certain that these camps are not of Roman origin, it is not easy to determine who their constructors were. Some may have been thrown up by the natives during the English invasion, and possibly some by the English themselves to resist the Danes; but it seems much more likely that, as a class, they are pre-Roman and of great antiquity. The great magnitude of many of them, and the skill exhibited in their construction, indicate that they were not erected as temporary barriers against foreign invasion, but as permanent refuges in a permanent state of insecurity, such as the frequent tribal wars of pre-Roman Britain would give rise to. In neither the number nor magnitude of these camps can Derbyshire vie with some of the western counties; but two—that which conspicuously crests Mam Tor, Castleton, and the Carl's Wark, near Hathersage—of its eight or ten examples are very fine and noteworthy. The former is about 16 acres in extent, and is surrounded with a double trench, three-quarters of a mile in circuit. The Carl's Wark may be described as a natural fortress improved by art. It is a raised flat platform of land on the summit of a gentle hill. All its sides, with the exception of that on its west, are rocky and steep, forming a natural rampart, and any gaps which might render it vulnerable have been filled up with rude masonry. Across the western slope a ditch has been cut, and on its inner side is an earthen rampart faced with a wall 8ft. or 9ft. high, composed of huge stones in their natural shapes. Other entrenchments occur at Fin Cop, Combs Moss, and Craikstone, Alport and Tapton Hills, and at Pilsbury near Hartington, Staden Low near Buxton, Hartle Moor, Calton near Chatsworth, and Camp Green at Hathersage.

CIRCLES.—The smaller of the so-called "Druidical Circles" were undoubtedly sepulchral, and have already been classed as barrows; the larger, however, seem to have had a different use, and their antiquity has been much disputed. There is, however, no apparent reason why the popular theory that they were temples should be discarded. The circle at Arborlow, near Youghreave, is one of the most famous in the country, being surpassed only by those of Avebury and Stonehenge. Its central platform is about 168 feet in diameter, surrounded by a ditch 18 feet wide, and beyond this by a rampart from 15 to 18 feet high and about 820 feet in circumference, both discontinued in two places to form entrances to the platform. Upon the enclosed area is a circle of stones, ranging from 5 or 6 feet to 12 feet in length, and all now fallen; and in the centre are several still larger stones. About 1,000 feet away is a large barrow—Gib Hill—from 70 to 80 feet in diameter. This was opened in 1848 ("Ten Years' Diggings"), when a large cist containing cremated human remains, accompanied by a typical food vase of the pre-Roman British period was discovered. The fact that this barrow is connected with the circle by a serpentine rampart of earth makes it extremely likely that both are of like antiquity. At Wet-Withens, near Eyam, is a circle 99 feet in diameter, consisting of an annular rampart with 16 standing stones on its inner edge; and on Offerton Moor adjacent is another of rather less dimensions, consisting of rampart only. Wood, the historian of Eyam, mentions the former existence of another of similar proportions one mile west of the latter. He was also acquainted with about a dozen small ones on Eyam Moor, but these were undoubtedly sepulchral, urned human remains having been found in most of them. Small circles and encircled mounds occur on Abney Moor, Froggatt Edge, East Moor, Hathersage, and Hordrun Edges, and elsewhere on the wastes on the Yorkshire border. On Stanton and Hartle Moors are several small ones, the largest of these, the "Nine Ladies," being about 36 feet in diameter. It is noteworthy that the distribution of circles in Derbyshire coincides with that of the urned cremated interments.

PRE-ROMAN CAVE REMAINS.—The most important cave discoveries in the county, which relate to post-Pleistocene time anterior to the Roman occupation, have been made at Rains Cave near Brassington, which was excavated under the writer's supervision (Derbyshire Arch. and Nat. Hist. Society's Journal, xi., xiv., and xv.). This work proved that the cave had been used by man at various periods—first, as a dwelling-place, probably as far back as Neolithic times; then as a sepulchre; then as a temporary residence; then again as a sepulchre. The fragments of rude pottery associated with the interments were of the ordinary British barrow type, hence served to fix the period when the cave was used as a burial place. The animal remains of this cave furnish a very complete list of the Derbyshire fauna of the period:—British short-horned ox, urus, sheep, goat, horse, hog (wild), red deer, roe deer, wolf, dog, fox, badger, weasel, hedgehog, water-rat, and hare.

In two small caves in Cave Dale, Castleton, Mr. Rooke Pennington found a similar series of animals' remains associated with pottery, flint-flakes, jet, a broken perforated sand-stone hammer, and a celt of peculiar alloy and form—objects presumably relating to pre-Roman man. The same gentleman obtained from a cave in Hartle Dale, near Bradwell, rude prehistoric pottery ("Barrows and Bone Caves"). Some of the objects recently found in the very prolific cave at Deep Dale, near Buxton (see below), may also be pre-Roman; but, in the case of those at Creswell, apparently nothing intervened between the Pleistocene and the Romano-British remains.

ROMAN STATIONS, ROADS, AND OTHER VESTIGES.—Our knowledge of Roman Derbyshire is not satisfactory. As on none of the more important sites has the spade been used in the interests of archaeology our information of this branch of the subject rests upon such superficial vestiges as have not been levelled by the plough or otherwise obliterated, and such accidental discoveries as have chanced to come under the notice of antiquaries. The most prominent feature of Roman Derbyshire was the extensive lead-mining carried on in the Peak, evidenced by the occasional discovery in this and neighbouring counties of pigs of lead, inscribed or otherwise. The earliest recorded discovery of an inscribed pig in this county was on Cromford Nether Moor in 1777 ("Archæologia," vol. v.); this was followed by another on Matlock Moor in 1783 (ib., vol. viii.); a third, near the last, in 1787 (ib., vol. xiii.); and a fourth, also near the last, in 1894 ("Antiquary," vol. xxix.).

The sites of several stations are known, and their names identified. One was at Little Chester by Derby, which, by a consensus of opinion, is identified with Derbentio of Ravennas. Buxton was certainly Aquæ. Two others, Melandra Castle, near Glossop, and Brough, in Hope Dale, have been identified as Zerdotalia and Navio by the late Mr. W. Thompson Watkin (Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's Journal, vol. vii.). Very few traces of the castrum of Derbentio remain; but in 1721 its outline was sufficiently discernible for Dr. Stukely to determine that it was rectangular, 500 feet by 600 feet. No indications of a castrum can be traced in a modern plan of Buxton; but remains of baths and other buildings have been discovered there in the 17th and 18th centuries (Whittaker, "History of Manchester," and "Archæologia," vol. ix.) on such a scale that it cannot be doubted that it was a place of fashionable resort, and that its thermal waters were held in high esteem. Unlike these two stations, those of Melandra and Brough are in fair preservation, the former being 366 by 336 feet, and the latter 310 by 270 feet. At both places numerous remains have been dug up from time to time ("Archæologia," vol. iii., Bray's "Tour in Derbyshire," Gough's "Cambden's Britannia," 1806, Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's Journal, vol. vii.). Besides these there are two small camps of apparent Roman construction at Parwich and Pentrich, but they are too small to be regarded as stations. Some years ago Mr. Redfern, of Uttoxeter, traced what he believed to be a Roman station at Ballidon in the vicinity of the former. The site of a very important station, Lutudæ, mentioned by Ravennas, and inscribed on all the above pigs of lead, has not yet been identified. It has been supposed to be Chesterfield, but the late Mr. Watkin's theory that it lay in the vicinity of Wirksworth has much more in its favour.

The chief Roman road is the Ryknield Street, which connected York with the Severn and, generally, the south-west of England. It entered the county near Beighton, and, after a course due south (leaving Chesterfield about a mile to the west), it took a south-western direction at Breadsall, and, threading Little Chester, emerged at Monk's Bridge, near Eggington. Another road connected Leicester (Rataë) and the Foss Way with Chesterton (Mediolanum), in Staffordshire, and eventually Chester. It entered the county in the vicinity of the Trent, and, after passing through Little Chester, took an easterly course, passing into Staffordshire at Rocester. Another and more direct route from Leicester to Chester passed through the extreme south of the county, and, crossing the Trent in the vicinity of Burton, may be traced to Uttoxeter. The present highway from Derby to Tutbury probably marks the site of a minor Roman way. It seems to have crossed the Dove at the latter town, for an ancient way (probably its continuation) can be traced to Uttoxeter on the south side of the Dove. A road connecting Lincoln with Chester passed through the north of the county. Its course east of Brough cannot be traced with certainty, but south-west of that point its straight track, known as Batham Gate, can readily be traced across the moors to Buxton, thence to Middlewich and Chester. From Brough a winding north-westerly road—the Doctor's Gate—went to Melandra Castle and Manchester (Mancurio). From Buxton radiated four or five roads of which, at least, two had a Derbyshire course—the one above, to Brough, and another south-east towards Wirksworth. A road inclining towards this can be traced from Little Chester, and is lost between Wirksworth and Ambergate. It is highly probable, especially if Lutudæ was in the vicinity, that these roads fell into an east and west road.

a Roman road can be traced from the Foss Way at East Stoke (in Nottinghamshire) to Mansfield, and it can hardly be doubted that it was continued to the Ricknield Street. A further continuation of it would pass through the districts of Wirksworth, Parwich, Balledon, and Bradbourn—in all of which Roman remains have been found—and then, crossing the Dove, make for Kinderloun (Condale) and Chester.

The foregoing are the more important vestiges of the Roman occupation in Derbyshire, but the following minor "finds" will further indicate how firm the hold was upon the country. Hoards of coins have been found at Fenny Bentley, Alfreton (two), Crich Cliff and Moor, Pleasley, Fritchley, Cullaud Park, Ashbourne, Cromford, and Heanor, during the last century and a half. The district of Middleton-by-Youlgreave has been prolific in remains of this period; and, in less degree, also Oker Hill in Darley Dale, Upper Haddon, Chesterfield, and Eyam. Roman pottery was found upon the site of Duffield Castle during its excavation in 1886, and upon that of ancient buildings at the foot of Rainster Rocks, near Brassington, by the writer in 1890; while in the vicinity of the latter—Hadborough Rocks—he found, in 1888, traces of British dwellings of probably the same period. Several caves have yielded remains of this period—Pool's Hole, Buxton; the upper deposits of the Creswell Caves; a small cave or fissure near Ambergate; and the Thirst Hole, in Deep Dale, near King's Sterndale, the yield of the latter being unprecedented in England (Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's Journal, 1890-5).

POST-ROMAN OR EARLY SAXON INTERMENTS.—The Teutonic invaders (Saxons, Angles, Danes, &c.), like the Britons before them, practised both inhumation and cremation; but it is clear that in Derbyshire, at least, they were not practised together. They probably point to difference of race rather than of time. These interments are found singly, and in groups or cemeteries. In the former case the mound may have been erected at the time of the burial, or the interment have been deposited in an already existing mound—British, for instance. In the latter there may be no traces of mounds at all. Both kinds of interments are strongly marked off in character from the British. In those by inhumation, the corpse was extended at full length, usually on the back, and with the head to the west. Occasionally it was deposited in a wooden chest or coffin, but very rarely in a stone cist. Very frequently it was embedded in "puddled" earth or clay. The male was buried with his iron sword, spear, and knife, and his wooden "war-board" or shield, with iron umbo; the female, with domestic appliances and trinkets, as keys, chatelaines, combs, caskets, thread-boxes, needles, pins, and the like. In either case these were frequently augmented by jewelry of elaborate description, glass tumblers, buckles, whetstones, querns, &c.—all together furnishing much information on the state of culture of the period. The results of about 40 Saxon inhumated interments in Derbyshire have been published. In more than half of these, iron objects, mostly knives, were present. At Bentley Grange, near Newhaven, Tissington, Brushfield, and on Lapwing Hill, near the latter place, were remarkable graves of warriors. The first-mentioned was one of the most important interments of its kind in the country, containing, among other things, the iron frame of a helmet, chain-work for armour, silver fittings of a leathern drinking vessel, circular enamels, carved bone objects, &c. Cowlow, near Buxton, and at Wyaston, near Ashbourne, were the typical interments of ladies of high position. With them were associated, at the former place, two gold pins, with settings of ruby glass, a glass bead, and the remains of a wooden casket, which contained a small glass bowl, a necklace of silver beads and pendants with a central pendant of decorated glass in silver setting, an ivory comb, and some small iron objects; at the latter, a necklace of amber and opaque glass beads, a silver ring and earrings, and a circular brooch. Some other interments, sex uncertain, with equally elaborate accessories, have been found on Winster Moor, at Galley Low on Brassington Moor, and at Standlow near Dove Dale.

When cremation was practised, the human remains were usually placed in an urn, but not always; in Derbyshire, for instance, the late Mr. Bateman found that each mound he excavated of a "tumular cemetery" near Foremark Hall, covered "calcined human bones, which lay in the same place on the natural surface as they occupied when the funeral pile was smothered out by the casting up of the tumulus." The site was covered by about fifty barrows. The manufactured objects found were very few and indeterminate, but sufficiently so to indicate that the cemetery belonged to this era. The Saxon cinerary urns, like the British, were hand-made and imperfectly fired, but their shape (more or less globular with contracted mouth) and style of decoration were very different. The site of a cemetery containing a large number of these urns in a fragmentary condition was discovered at King's Newton in 1867, and is described in the "Reliquary" of the time.

PRE-NORMAN OR LATE SAXON REMAINS.—These consist chiefly of crosses and architectural remains. According to the Rev. Dr. Cox, the earliest cross of this period is an imperfect one in Taddington churchyard, which exhibits much Celtic feeling in its ornamentation. The two finest specimens are at Eyam and Bakewell. Fragments of others occur at the latter place, and at Hope, Blackwell, Spondon, Darley Dale, Aston-in-Trent, and St. Alkmund's, Derby. At Wilne is a remarkable font, which has been made out of a portion of a carved cylindrical pillar of pre-Norman age. The Rev. G. F. Browne, B.D., in a paper upon this font in the Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's "Journal," vol. vii, suggests that this pillar was the permanent "altar" on which the itinerant Saxon priest placed the portable holy table during celebration. In Wirksworth Church is an elaborate coped tombstone of this period, carved with various scenes from the life of Christ; and in the Weston Park Museum, at Sheffield, is another with less detail, removed many years ago from Bakewell. The finest specimen of pre-Norman architecture in the county is the shell of the chancel at Repton, with the crypt below (Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's "Journal," vol. v.). To the same period may be attributed the chancel arches of Sawley and Marston Montgomery, Long Eaton, and Stanton-by-Bridge, and windows at Caldwell.

MEDIEVAL ECCLESIOLOGICAL ANTIQUITIES.—As the Rev. Charles J. Cox, LL.D., is the supreme authority on this branch of Derbyshire archæology, and has given a summary of the "more remarkable features" of the old churches, the liberty will be taken of quoting from him. "This county," he states, "cannot for a moment pretend to vie with Somerset in its towers, with Northamptonshire in its spires, with Norfolk or Suffolk in the size and beauty of so many of their churches, or with Kent in the number of its brasses; but this can, I believe, be fairly claimed for Derbyshire, that no other part of the country of the same size has anything like the same extensive variety of styles and excellent specimens of every period, both in the ecclesiastical fabrics themselves and in the monumental remains and other details they shelter."

The largest churches in the county are those of Ashbourne, Chesterfield, Wirksworth, Tideswell, Bakewell, and Melbourne—all fine examples of mediæval cruciform churches, ranging from 120ft. to nearly 200ft. in length, and each, with the exception of Tideswell, surmounted with a tower or tower and spire at the intersection of the transepts. The spire of Chesterfield is not only the loftiest (228ft.) in the county, but is one of the most remarkable in the kingdom. It is of wood, covered with lead, which through faulty construction has become so warped by the sun's heat as to assume a curious crooked twist. The graceful proportions of the decorated spire of Ashbourne (212ft.) have brought it the epithet, "The Pride of the Peak." The slender Perpendicular spire of Repton (210ft.) is also of great beauty.

The ruined church of Steetley is the most beautiful Norman structure in the county. Those of Melbourne and Whitwell are more extensive and imposing examples, but both exhibit much work of later periods. As a rule, where Norman occurs in this county, it is in the nave-arcades, chancel-arches, and doorways. The chancel-arches of Sandiacre, Castleton, Beighton, and Twyford are particularly fine; as also are the doorways of Breadsall, Allestree, and Killamarsh. The churches of Bakewell, Youlgreave, Longford, Aston-on-Trent, Hault Hucknall, and Morley, contain various interesting features in this style.

The best Derbyshire specimens of 13th century or Early English architecture occur as towers and chancels, as in the towers of Eckington and Breadsall, the chancels of Ashbourne, Dovebridge, Marston-on-Dove, Weston-on-Trent, and the ruined choir of Dale Abbey. St. John's Chapel, Belper, which is almost entirely in the style, and the ruins of Yeaveley Preceptory are also excellent examples of the period. The 14th century, however, was the great era of church re-building and extension in Derbyshire. In the majority of its old churches, the structure generally, or, at least, to a large extent, dates from this, the Decorated period; while later work takes the form of minor additions, and the insertion of windows and doors. Tideswell and Spondon Churches were entirely re-built in this style, and exhibit scarcely any later work. The former is a magnificent specimen of parochial architecture, and the latter is interesting from the circumstance that the date of its erection (1340) is known. The chancels of Sandiacre and Dronfield have been frequently described and figured in works on architecture. The beautiful spire of Ashbourne was referred to above. The churches of Chesterfield, Hathersage, Mackworth, Repton, and St. Peter (Derby), are, to a large extent, in this style; and other examples of considerable merit, are the chancel of Norbury; the chancels and towers of Crich and Brailsford; the towers and spires of Duffield, Bonsall, Marston-on-Dove, and Moneyash; the chancel-arcade of Ilkeston; and the transept of Walton-on-Trent. The Perpendicular architecture of the 15th and earlier half of the 16th centuries, is almost equally well represented in this county; but, as implied above, work of this period occurs more frequently as additions to and insertions in older fabrics, than as re-built structures. It was a prevailing fashion of the time to raise the naves of the ordinary parish churches to form clear-storeys; consequently, as might be expected, these additions, with the new roofs they involved, are the most numerous of the larger works in this style in the county, those of Repton and Longstone being good examples. The improvements in the manufacture of stained glass and its great popularity, led to the frequent replacement of old windows, particularly the east windows of chancels and of chapels, for larger ones with more elaborate tracery. The chancel east windows of St. Peter's (Derby), Ashbourne, Haddon, and Breadsall, are beautiful Perpendicular insertions. Except for the 14th-century tower and spire, the external features of Horsley Church are wholly in this style. The recess, containing the tomb of John Bothe, at Sawley, is an extremely fine specimen of late Perpendicular on a small scale. Of the towers in this style, that of Youlgreave is well-proportioned and of its best period; and those of Elvaston, North Wingfield, Alfreton, and Walton-on-Trent have excellent points. The towers of All Saints' (Derby), Dethic, and Cubley, are typical examples of late Perpendicular, the first-mentioned being one of the loftiest (200ft.) and finest-proportioned towers in the country. At Risley and Wilne are specimens of late debased Perpendicular, mixed up with Renaissance details; while Foremark Church, which was erected in 1662, is interesting as a survival of mediæval architecture in comparative purity.

The Derbyshire churches are not rich in timber work, but the following are of considerable interest and merit:—the 14th-century roof at Tideswell; the 15th-century roofs at Repton and Longstone; a singularly well preserved 15th-century rood-screen at Wingerworth, and screens of the same period at Chesterfield, Fenny Bentley, and Elvaston; stalls at Sawley, and benches at Morley and Youlgreave. There is at Belper a perfect pre-Reformation bracket altar; and altar slabs at Beighton, Haddon, and Alfreton. At Dale Abbey, Morley, and Repton, are extensive and varied series of mediæval encaustic tiles, chiefly of the 15th century; others occur at Newton Solney, Tideswell, Ashbourne, Cubley, Bakewell, Fenny Bentley, Kirk Langley, and Boulton (Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Journal, 1892). "Low-side" windows occur at Spondon, Church Broughton, Croxall, Ravenston, Breaston, Aston-on-Trent, Weston-on-Trent, Clown, Dronfield, Barrow, and elsewhere. Traces of mediæval mural painted decorations or frescoes have been found in many of the churches, but, as a rule, they cannot be described as more than mere traces. At Haddon are remains of various diaper patterns and groups of figures, among which the Holy Family is conspicuous. Others, less extensive, occur at Hault Hucknall, Melbourne, Barrow, and Sudbury. The font at Ashover is a notable lead one of the 12th century; and that at Youlgreave is unique in England, in having a holy-water stoup attached. There is a good 13th-century holy water stoup at Chelmorton, and movable ones at Haddon, Boulton, and Barlborough. "The old stained glass at either Morley or Norbury is well worth a pilgrimage, and there is also much interest about the remains of glass at Eggington. The 14th century pulpit at Mellor, carved out of the solid oak, is a unique relic. The stone gospel lecterns against the chancel walls of Chaddesden, Crich, Etwall, Taddington, Mickleover, and Spondon are of very exceptional occurrence. The sedilia of Dronfield, Ilkeston, Moneyash, Sandiacre, and Whitwell are all remarkably good examples. The stone chancel screens of Ilkeston and Chelmorton, and the stone parclose in Darley Church, are most uncommon and noteworthy" (Cox). Of the pre-Reformation bells, those of Marston-on-Dove, Morley, Hathersage (sanctus bell), and Marston-Montgomery are the most notable. The county does not contain a perfect mediæval churchyard cross. Except a 13th-century shaft at Dovebridge, they are of uncertain age, and rarely consist of more than the steps and the socket-stone. At Wheston in the Peak is an exquisite 14th-century way-side cross, almost perfect, restored some time ago by the Duke of Norfolk.

"No county can compare with Derbyshire in the abundance of early incised slabs, from the 10th century downwards. They are found built into the walls of many of the churches, especially in North and East Derbyshire. The best collections are at Bakewell, Darley, and Chelmorton. Effigies incised on slabs of the local alabaster found at Chellaston are common in the South Derbyshire churches, for the most part of the 15th and 16th centuries. There are remarkable semi-effigial monuments at Brampton, Kedleston, Hartington, and Mackworth. Early stone effigies are found at Darley Eggington, Ilkeston, Melbourne, Norbury, Newton Solney, Sawley, Sudbury, Wingerworth, North Wingfield, Youlgreave, &c. There are some fine alabaster effigies at Ashbourne, Aston-on-Trent, Cubley, Duffield, Kedleston, Longford, Newton Solney, Norbury, and Radbourne. Owing to the prevalence of stone, brasses are not common; but there is an excellent series at Morley, and some good ones at Ashover, Dronfield, Etwall, Hathersage, Mugginton, Norbury, Sawley, Staveley, Tideswell, Walton-on-Trent, and Wilne" (Cox).

The monastic remains of Derbyshire are few and not extensive. The patched-up nave and 14th-century tower of the Premonstratensian Abbey of Beauchief now form the parish church of that place. The abbey of the same order at Dale is richer in picturesque traditions than in visible vestiges. The most conspicuous of its remains is the 13th-century east window arch; the lower courses, however, of much of the church are visible, having been excavated by the Derbyshire Archaeological Natural History Society ("Journal," vols. i. and ii.; Ward's "Dale and its Abbey.") The little building now used as a parish church has an interesting history, and probably formed part of the infirmary of this abbey in monastic times. It exhibits Norman, Early English, and Perpendicular work. The range of Perpendicular windows, with their coeval stained glass, in the north aisle at Morley, formed one side of the cloister; and there is much carved oak at Radbourne from this abbey. A few windows, incorporated into cottages, mark the site of the chief monastic house of Derbyshire, the Augustinian Abbey of Darley. The remains of the priory of the same order at Repton vie with those of Dale in extent and interest. The western range of claustral buildings is now used as the old school house, and the gate-way into the precincts is still standing. The present church at Gresley is a portion of the small Augustinian Priory there. Some picturesque, Early English windows remain of the preceptory of Yeaveley (Knights of St. John); and extensive mounds and lower courses of masonry mark the site of that of Arleston.

MEDIEVAL STRONGHOLDS.—Peak Castle, Castleton, is a characteristic Norman stronghold, although on a small scale. The shell of the keep (27 by 29ft.) is still tolerably perfect, and retains much of its ashlar facing. The curtain wall is probably earlier in date, and exhibits the only herring-bone masonry in the county. The site of Duffield Castle was excavated in 1886, when the foundations of one of the largest Norman keeps (93 by 95ft.) in the kingdom, with walls ranging from 14 to 20ft. in thickness (Derbyshire Arch. and Nat. Hist. Society's Journal, vol. ix., and "Bygone Derbyshire"). Bolsover Castle is partly in ruins, but no traces of the original fortress erected by the Peverels remain. The oldest portion of the existing buildings was erected at the commencement of the 17th century, upon the foundations of the Norman keep. A small portion only of the masonry and moat of Horsley Castle, near Derby, is left, the site having been almost entirely quarried away in the last century. The existing ashlar work seems to relate to a multi-angular keep of the 14th century (Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's "Journal," vol. xii). Gresley Castle is now a mere mound, and Melbourne Castle, scanty foundations and a ruined wall. The Saxon castles of Derby and Bakewell probably consisted of earthworks only; the mound, or burh, of the latter remains, but there are no traces of the former. The existing remains of Codnor Castle show that it was of considerable extent, partaking, however, more of the fortified mansion than feudal fortress. The oldest work belongs to the 13th and 14th centuries; the more recent, to the 16th century.

MEDIEVAL DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE.—Haddon Hall is known throughout the country as one of the best, if not the very best, example of a mediæval English residence. It has work of every period from Norman to the seventeenth century. The ruins of South Wingfield Manor House indicate a mansion of equal importance, and in some respects of greater architectural merit. The banqueting hall, with its vaulted undercroft, is a beautiful specimen of domestic Perpendicular. The Elizabethan mansion on the site of the keep of Bolsover has been classed as a stronghold. At Repton Hall is a remarkable specimen of early brickwork—a two-storey tower—erected 1437-9, which probably formed part of the prior's lodge. Norbury Hall has fourteenth century work, and contains, besides, some fine sixteenth century Dutch stained-glass (Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's Journal, vols. iv., v., and vii.) At Mackworth is an excellent Perpendicular gate-house, popularly known as "Mackworth Castle." Elizabethan and Jacobean architecture can scarcely be classed as mediæval. Among the best examples in the country may be mentioned North Lees Hall, Hazlebadge Hall (1597), Tissington Hall, Hartington Hall, Etwall Hall (much altered in later times), Barlborough Hall (1583), Grammar School, Ashbourne (1583), Weston-on-Trent Hall, Sudbury Hall (an extremely fine mansion of the time of Charles I.), the "Peacock" of Rowsley (1652), and Etwall Almshouses (1681). The Peak is rich in smaller specimens—mostly farmhouses—in these styles. A noticeable characteristic of the domestic architecture of this region is the persistence of Elizabethan, in comparative purity, down to as late as the middle of the last century. The plentifulness of stone has caused that to be the chief material used for building purposes. For this reason timber-frame construction is scarce, confined chiefly to the south and east. At the following places are excellent examples of this class of domestic buildings:—Hilton, Tenant Street, Derby, Norton, Somersall Herbert, Waldley, Marston Montgomery, Repton, Barrow-on-Trent, Ashbourne, and Dale Abbey. At the following places are moats indicating the sites of mediæval mansions:—Wood Hall, near Risley, West Hallam, Cubley, Potlock near Willington, Melbourne, and Hazlewood; and elsewhere are many more or less perfect examples adjoining existing buildings which are the successors of more ancient mansions, as at Weston-on-Trent Hall, Bentley Hall, Stydd Hall, Boyah Grange, near Dale Abbey, Bearwardcoates, Etwall Hall, &c. At Harwick and Haddon Halls, and Burton Closes, near Bakewell, are choice arrays of old tapestry, that of the first-mentioned being probably the first in the country (Derbyshire Archæological and Natural History Society's Journal, vol. xv.). Haddon Hall is rich in by-gone domestic appliances and other accessories.

DERBYSHIRE.—ITS PHYSIOGRAPHY AND POLITY.

Derbyshire, one of the most important of the Midland Counties, is situated about the centre of England, and has for its boundaries the West Riding of Yorkshire on the north, Leicestershire on the south, Nottinghamshire on the east, and Cheshire and Staffordshire on the west. The boundary line is generally arbitrary, excepting along the western side, where the rivers Trent, Dove, and Goyt form the natural line of demarcation. Measured between its extreme points—Woodhead Station, on the borders of Cheshire, and No Man's Heath, where the counties of Derby, Stafford, Warwick, and Leicester meet—its length is 50 miles, and its greatest breadth is 36 miles. The circuit of the county is about 170 miles, embracing within it an area of 1,025½ square miles or 656,243 acres, and a population of 527,886, or 514 to the square mile. The following table exhibits the population at each decennial enumeration since the commencement of the present century :—

Population..	159,672	180,354	223,430	234,324	273,304	313,641	339,327	379,394	461,141	527,886

No county of England, Cumberland and Westmoreland excepted, has a more uneven and diversified surface than Derbyshire, and these bolder features of nature are most conspicuously marked in the northern half of the county. Here terminates the Pennine Chain, otherwise known as the "Backbone of England," which stretches from the Cheviot Hills southward through the northern counties. The chain enters Derbyshire with a diminishing elevation, and sinks into the southern plain a little south of Matlock. From the axial line numerous spurs branch off, with narrow valleys between, which impart to the district a wild and rugged aspect. In some of these mountain glens the scenery is exquisitely beautiful, and scarcely surpassed by some of the much-praised views on the Continent. These beauty spots of nature will be fully noticed under the parishes in which they are situated.

The most elevated peaks of the Pennines occur in the northern part of the range—in Cumberland and Westmoreland—where some of the summits exceed 3,000 feet. In Derbyshire the chain culminates in two huge mountain masses known as the High Peak and The Peak. Kinder Scout, the highest of the latter, attains an altitude of 2,088 feet, and Bleaklow Head, in the former, reaches to a height of 1,880 feet. The other lofty summits in this Alpine district are Axe Edge, near Buxton, 1,810 feet; Mam Tor, Castleton, 1,709 feet; Lose Hill and Win Hill, on the opposite banks of the river Noe, exceed 1,500 feet; Combs Moss, near Buxton, 1,670 feet; Chelmorton Low, 1,474 feet; Wardlow Hay Cop, near Monsall Dale, 1,227 feet; White Edge, near Darley, 1,081 feet; and the High Tor, Matlock, 860 feet.

RIVERS.—Derbyshire is well watered by numerous streams and rivulets which originate amongst the hills of Peakland, and, after short courses through narrow valleys and mountain glens, contribute their waters to swell some other river. The largest river is the Trent, but Derbyshire can claim only a small portion of its course. For a short distance it separates this county from Staffordshire on the south-west, and then flows eastward across the county to Castle Donnington

Park, and thence for nine miles it forms the boundary between Derbyshire and Leicestershire, and Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, finally emptying itself into the Humber. Into this river flow ten-thirteenths of all the waters of Derbyshire. The older etymologists derived its name from the French trente (thirty), from a supposition that it had thirty tributary streams; and thus Milton, in one of his early poems, speaks of the “Trent, who like some earth-born giant, spreads

His thirty arms along the indented meads.”

It has been, however, questioned whether the poet wrote thirty or thirsty, and the latter word is printed in some editions.

The Derwent, though only a tributary of the Trent, is the principal river of the county. It takes its rise on the north-eastern border, having its main source at a place called Trough, in the gritstone ridge that separates Yorkshire from Derbyshire; and its course, about 46 miles, lies wholly within the county. Taking a southerly direction it flows through one of the wildest districts of the Peak, receiving the waters of the Westend from Bleaklow Stones, and after passing the secluded hamlet, to which it gives the name of Derwent, it unites with the Ashop, which drains all the hill country around Kinder Scout. Half a mile further on, it receives the Ladybower brook from a narrow wooded glen on the opposite side, and flows thence through Bamford Vale, just skirting the eastern base of Win Hill. At Mytham Bridge it is joined by the Noe, which drains its waters from the southern slopes of Kinder Scout; thence its course is through a narrow valley between lofty hills which are cleft into narrow gulleys by the streams that pour down their wooded sides. Passing the village of Baslow, it flows through Chatsworth Park to Rowsley, where it receives the Wye which drains the country westward as far as Buxton. The Derwent continues its southward course through the rich pastoral vale of Darley to Matlock, where it is margined by towering rocks and lofty hills clothed with shrubs and trees. After leaving this romantic vale it passes Cromford, and at Ambergate receives the river Amber formed of two branches, one having its source near Ashover and the other near Sutton-in-Ashfield in Nottinghamshire. It then flows on past the manufacturing villages of Belper and Milford, and its waters lose much of the clearness which gave to the river its Celtic name Dur Gwin, the bright clear water. It flows onward through Derby, and about ten miles beyond, near the village of Wilne, its waters unite with the Trent on the borders of Leicestershire. From its source to its confluence with the Trent the scenery along its banks is varied and beautiful, and merits all the praise that has been bestowed upon it by various writers. Mr. Rhodes, in his “Peak Scenery,” has minutely and elegantly described the ever changing beauty of the scene along its course; and Mr. Croston, in his interesting and pleasantly written book, “On Foot through the Peak,” thus sums up its merits:—“Though not possessing the queenly dignity of the Trent, nor those wild features that characterise and give interest to the Dove, the Derwent may, nevertheless, challenge comparison with any river in the kingdom for the rich and varied character of the scenery along its course. Generally its banks are well wooded—the oak, the elm, and the wide-spreading sycamore mingling their rich verdure with the more light and graceful foliage of the ash and the birch; whilst here and there, from amid the luxuriant masses of underwood that adorn its sloping sides, the delicate stems of the osier, and the slender branches of the wild honeysuckle, hang down to the water’s edge, breaking its glassy surface into innumerable ripples. The beauty of the stream is increased by the ever-changing character of the currents: sometimes it bounds hurriedly on, leaping from crag to crag in fairy-like cascades, throwing up the sparkling foam bubbles as it breaks over the fragments of rock which have been toppled down from the overhanging cliffs; anon the troubled waves subside, and the current glides smoothly and leisurely along its surface, scarcely broken by a ripple. But though often gentle, it is never languid, never sluggish. In some places it meanders pleasantly onwards over its pebbly bed, its gentle murmurs blending harmoniously with the rustling of the overshadowing trees.”

The Dove, the Queen of Derbyshire rivers, has its source in the southern slopes of Axe-Edge, a gritstone ridge of considerable elevation, extending southward from Buxton, and forms throughout its whole course the boundary between Staffordshire and Derbyshire. The scenery around its source is wild and dreary; bleak, heath-covered hills, where but few trees can obtain a roothold, tower one above another, culminating in Axe-Edge, 1,800 feet above the sea level, whence is obtained a magnificent panoramic view of the surrounding country, extending as far, it is said, as Lincoln Cathedral and Snowdon. The valley—the far-famed Dovedale—through which the river flows, is generally narrow—a glen rather than a valley—and hemmed in by bold, lofty hills and precipitous rocks. In places the current is rapid and boisterous, the water foaming and bubbling amongst the fragments of rock that have fallen from the beetling cliffs above. A few houses near the source bear the name of Dove-head, and three miles further south the river passes Chrome Hill and Tor Rock, an oddly-shaped stony mass, with a natural arch of limestone near its summit. At Earl Sterndale the valley is more contracted by the near approach of the elevated ridge on either side. After passing the bridge on the road leading to Hartington the river enters Beresford Dale. Near by, on the Staffordshire side, formerly stood Beresford Hall, the early home of the Beresfords. From this family it passed to the Stanhopes of Elvaston, whose daughter and heiress eloped with the thriftless Cotton, and here is a cavern in the rock in which he often sought safety from grasping creditors. A little further down is Pike Pool, with its tower-like mass of rock, and close by is the “little fishing house,” erected by Cotton, the poet angler, as a memento of his association with old Izaak Walton. On a stone over the door is carved “PISCATORIBUS SACRUM, 1674.” Here the two spent much of their time, as recorded in “The Complete Angler,” and from that date to the present the spot has ever been sacred to anglers. In many places in his poems Cotton sings the praises of this river. Thus he says—

“O my beloved nymph, fair Dove,
Princess of rivers, how I love
Upon thy flowery banks to lie,
And view thy silver stream.”

And again he writes—

“The rapid Garonne and the winding Seine
Are both too mean,
Beloved Dove, with thee
To vie priority;
Nay, Tam and Isis, when conjoined, submit,
And lay their trophies at thy silver feet.”

The scenery is extremely beautiful; lofty, craggy cliffs approach the edge of the river, and huge detached masses of rock appear here and there to rise out of the stream, each bearing a name descriptive of its form or appearance. A little further on, the river passes between two rocky eminences, Bunster and Thorpe Cloud, upwards of 1,000 feet in height, which form the entrance to the narrow, gloomy ravine. The valley now expands, the scenery assumes a more pastoral character, and after a course of forty-two miles the Dove empties itself into the Trent at Newton Solney.

The Erewash rises on the borders of Sherwood Forest, in Nottinghamshire, and during the greater part of its course it forms the boundary between that county and Derbyshire. It passes the colliery village of Pinxton, and falls into the Trent about a mile and a half from Long Eaton. The Mease is another tributary of the Trent, which it enters a little below Croxall, after a short course from near Ashby-de-la-Zouch. The upper course of the Rother lies within the county, extending from its source, near Chesterfield, to Beighton, where it enters Yorkshire. The Goyt and the Etherow border the county on the west and north-west, and, uniting their streams, become a tributary of the Mersey.

GEOLOGY AND MINERAL PRODUCTIONS.—Geologically, Derbyshire is one of the most interesting counties in England; for we have here, within its limited area, “the whole structure of the northern half of England epitomised.” We can only glance cursorily at its leading features, with special reference to those strata that bear directly or indirectly on the agriculture or commerce of the county. The oldest of the strata exposed in Derbyshire is the mountain or carboniferous limestone which occupies a tract stretching from Castleton to Ashbourne, and from the valley of the Derwent to the border of Staffordshire. It is to the presence of this rock that Derbyshire owes the beautiful and romantic scenery that has made its name famous. This rock, though now elevated into lofty hills and towering cliffs, was deposited at the bottom of a deep sea that, untold ages ago, stretched from the borders of Scotland to Staffordshire and Leicestershire, and is composed entirely of the fossil remains of animals that dwelt in the primeval waters, and most of which are now extinct. At some undetermined period a tremendous force within the earth upheaved the rock forming the Pennine Chain which culminates in the Peak of Derbyshire. This upheaving force was undoubtedly fire, and traces of its action are seen in the beds of lava, locally known as Trap or Toadstone. Some of these beds are 200 feet in thickness. The stone is generally very hard and compact, and has received its unsavoury name from its bottle-green colour tinged with dirty yellow.

This carboniferous limestone is nearly pure carbonate of lime, but its chemical composition is not uniform. It is usually of a greyish or bluish tint, but other colours are met with. A very dark coloured variety is quarried near Ashford, and forms the celebrated black marble. A red variety of great beauty is obtained from a mine belonging to the Duke of Devonshire, at Hartington. Many of the lighter coloured varieties are beautifully adorned with sections of Madrepores, Entrochites, Ammonites, and other fossils of which they are formed. These marbles are extensively quarried at several places, and worked at Ashford, Bakewell, and Derby.

This limestone also contains several metallic ores. The most important of these, on account of its abundance, is lead, which occurs in veins both rake and pipe, penetrating the limestone to considerable distances. The lead mines of Derbyshire were worked by the Romans, and pigs of lead have been found bearing Latin inscriptions. They were also known and worked by their successors, who named a mine near Castleton after Odin, their chief deity and the ancestor of their princes. St. Guthlac, prior of Croyland, in 714, was buried in a leaden coffin sent from Wirksworth. The lead-mining industry was formerly a source of considerable prosperity to the county, but many of the mines have been exhausted, and in others the working expenses scarcely leave a margin of profit. The total out-put at present is about 4,600 tons of dressed ore per annum, yielding about 70 per cent. of metal. Silver is also obtained from the lead ore. Zinc is met with in various forms. Sulphuret of Zinc, or Blende, called by English miners Black Jack, on account of its colour, is a waste product in Derbyshire, but the Carbonate of Zinc, or Calamine, is sometimes found in quantities sufficient to repay the miner. The principal source is Old Round Low, Brassington, from which two or three tons of ore per annum are obtained. Barytes occurs in various forms; the most abundant is the sulphate, which is manufactured into an inferior white paint, sometimes used to adulterate white lead. The "onyx stone," a barytic ore found only on Arbelow takes a very high polish, and is manufactured into fancy articles. Copper, in the form of carbonate, has been sparingly found at Middleton, Hopton, and Wensley.

One of the most beautiful minerals found in Derbyshire is a rare variety of Fluor Spar, called Blue John, which is manufactured into a number of ornamental articles. This beautiful crystal is composed of lime and fluoric acid, and the colouring matter is supposed to be oxide of manganese. Blue John is found in various places in Derbyshire and Saxony, but it is only in the Blue John Cavern at Castleton that it is found in sufficient abundance to repay the cost of working. It is much less plentiful than formerly, and pieces of sufficient magnitude to work up into large vases, are now seldom, if ever, found. The largest Blue John vase ever made is in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire, and may be seen in the sculpture gallery at Chatsworth.

Bitumen is found in the carboniferous limestone, and it is to the presence of this substance that black marbles owe much of their dark colour. Another and very remarkable substance occasionally met with is Elastic Bitumen, or Mineral Caoutchouc, found in the Windy Knoll quarry, near Castleton. This variety is extremely rare, and there are only three or four places in the world where it has been met with.

Water containing carbonic acid in solution has a solvent power over limestone rocks, and to this erosive action is to be attributed the caverns and subterranean water courses which form one of the wonderful sights of the Peak. These caverns are numerous, but the most extensive and interesting are those at Castleton, Matlock, and Buxton. The water, charged with carbonate of lime, and percolating through the roofs and sides, has, in the course of ages, coated them with innumerable sparkling stalactites, or carpeted the floor with a solid mass of the glittering crystal. Some of these caverns are traversed by underground streams of water, which sometimes journey on for miles before they issue into the light of day. Sometimes streams suddenly disappear down swallow-holes or fissures, and are hidden from view until they emerge again, far away from the place they entered. The beautiful rocky dales which form such an important feature in Derbyshire scenery are supposed to have been caverns, whose roofs have fallen in, or water courses, deepened by the erosive action of the water continued through unnumbered centuries.

The Yoredale group of rocks, subsequent in their formation to the carboniferous limestone, occupies a considerable tract lying to the north of Castleton; another band stretches from Ashbourne and Tissington eastward nearly as far as the river Derwent. This group consists of shales, with thin beds of sandstones, and black shales, with thin beds of black limestone. The hills do not attain so great an altitude, nor is their contour so boldly marked, as in the limestone group. The shale strata, on exposure to the air, disintegrate, and roll down the hillside. One of these landslips may be seen on the flank of Mam Tor, or Shivering Mountain, as it is significantly called.

Millstone Grit forms an important feature in the strata of Derbyshire. It consists of alternating beds of sandstones, or gritstones, and shales, with occasionally a thin band of coal. These gritstones vary in character from fine grained sandstone to a very coarse conglomerate. This formation extends from Yorkshire southward through the centre of the county as far as Duffield, separating the carboniferous limestone from the coal measures. It forms the mass of Kinder Scout, and it is again met with stretching round the north-western corner of the county, from Burbage to Barrow Stones. This gritstone has been formed from the disintegrated particles of granitic and other crystalline rocks brought down by rivers, and deposited at the bottom of a somewhat shallow sea, and afterwards upheaved by some mighty force within the earth. These beds of grit vary from 80 to 150 feet in thickness, and are separated from each other by beds of shale. It is not productive of minerals, but is extensively quarried for building stone and mill stones. Water, which is only sparingly found in the limestone formation, is generally met with in abundance and of excellent quality in the gritstone.

The Coal Measures stretch along the eastern side of the county, overlying the Millstone Grit and forming part of the Midland coal-field. They consist of alternating strata or beds of sandstones or flagstones, shales, clays, ironstones, and coal. The seams or beds of the latter vary in thickness from a few inches to seven or eight feet, and differ much in quality. A coal which is suitable for steam purposes in one part of the area will be more fitted for household purposes in another; and that which is the mainstay of a colliery in one locality may be barely traceable in another. The following table illustrates the position, thickness, and order of occurrence of the various strata in a section of the coal-field extending from Wingfield to the escarpment of the magnesia limestone, a distance of nearly seven miles:—

From the above it will be seen that in a total thickness of 3,808 feet down to the limestone grit there are about 40 feet of workable coal. The terms hard and soft coal indicate their respective qualities, the former being adapted for steam purposes and the latter for the household. The clod or black shale is a valuable seam equivalent to the Silkstone of Yorkshire; but the finest Derbyshire coal is the Kilburne, which, for household use, will compare favourably with the best sea coals of the Newcastle district. A small quantity of cannel coal is obtained from the mines at Swanwick, Clay Cross, Renishaw, West Hallam, and a few other places. The area of the Derbyshire coalfield is computed at 230 square miles. Assuming there is an average workable thickness of 40 feet, the total amount of coal within the area would be (computed on the basis that 29 cubic feet weigh one ton) 8,832,000,000 tons. The average yearly output is about 9,000,000 tons.

Associated with the coal measures are bands of ironstone called "Rakes." Many of these are very thin. The most important occur between the "Top Hard" and "Black Shale" seams of coal, and yield from 2,000 to 7,000 tons of ironstone per acre. This ironstone was formerly worked at several collieries to a considerable extent, and produced excellent iron. The iron industry was introduced into the county before 1740, in which year there were two furnaces making charcoal pig iron to the amount of 225 tons each. In 1780, a furnace was erected at Morley Park, in which coke was exclusively employed, and a few years later Mr. Francis Hurt, the proprietor, introduced the steam engine to work the "blast." About the same time two furnaces were erected at Chesterfield, and these were followed by works at Wingerworth, Staveley, and Dale Abbey. In 1792, furnaces were erected at Butterley and Renishaw, and others were built before the close of the century. These furnaces used only Derbyshire ironstone, and the 12 furnaces in operation in 1796 produced 9,656 tons of pig iron. In 1855 there were 24 furnaces in blast out of a total of 33, and the amount of pig iron made that year was 116,550 tons; in 1870 there were 43 furnaces, of which 30 were in blast, producing 179,772 tons. In 1880 the number of furnaces was 54, of which 14 were idle, and the pig iron made amounted to 366,792 tons. Since that time there has been considerable depression in the iron trade, and the annual production now only amounts to 343,115 tons. The local ironstone has been almost entirely superseded by the more easily reducible ores of Northamptonshire and other places, and now something less than 6,000 tons of ironstone is raised per annum.

The sandstones of the coal measures yield good building stone, and flagstones for flooring and roofing. The clays are also applied to various purposes, bricks are made on an extensive scale, and pottery, either plain or artistic, is manufactured at Brampton, Newbold, Langley Mill, Denby, and Swadlincote.

The Magnesian limestone of the Permian series stretches along the north-eastern border of the coal measures. This rock consists of an upper and lower limestone divided from each other by red marls and sandstones. The upper stratum is thin and of no economic value, but the lower limestone, which attains a thickness of about 100 feet, produces some of the most durable building stone in the kingdom. Southwell Cathedral, built in Norman times of stone from Bolsover Moor, is still in excellent preservation. The new Houses of Parliament and the Museum of Practical Geology, in Jermyn Street, London, are modern instances of its use. An analysis of this stone shows that its components are silica 3·6, carbonate of lime 51·1, carbonate of magnesia 40·2, iron alumina 1·8, and water and loss 3·3. Professor Ramsay states that "The best varieties of magnesian limestone are those in which there is at least 40 per cent. of carbonate of magnesia, and 4 or 5 per cent. of silica."

Beds of gypsum, or alabaster, occur amongst the red marls of South Derbyshire. It is found in immense quantities at Chellaston, where many tons are quarried annually and exported to various places as plaster of Paris. It is also extensively used in sculpture and for ornamental purposes in architecture. The gypsum bed is about 14 feet thick, and is covered by 30 or 40 feet of marl. A fibrous kind called satin stone is found at Sawley and one or two other places. When cut and polished it is much admired.

CLIMATE.—The climate of Derbyshire is considerably influenced by local circumstances. In the north-west, where the whole surface is elevated into bold hills and lofty moorlands, the climate is colder and the winters of longer duration than in the low plain occupying the south and east of the county. The rainfall also is greater. In the south the yearly average fall varies from about 20 to 33 inches, whilst in the hilly north it varies from 40 to 50 inches; and the number of days on which rain falls is also relatively greater. The quantity is influenced by the situation. At Buxton, 1,000 feet above the sea level, and surrounded by still higher ground, the rainfall ranges from 5 to 10 inches above the average of the district.

SOIL AND AGRICULTURE.—The soil varies in different places according to the prevailing strata of the district. On the shaly gritstone tract stretching from Glossop to Woodlands, and southwards to Mam Tor, the soil is poor and yields but a scanty herbage. On the new red sandstone that occupies all that part of the county lying south of a line drawn from Ashbourne to Sandiacre, the land is red marl, with patches of gravel. The marly portions form excellent agricultural land, being rich in alum, magnesia, potash, soda, iron, and phosphate of lime, so necessary for the growth of cereals and other crops. On the Coal and Iron Measures the soil is inclined to clay and varies much in quality, being in some places good loam and in others very inferior land; and these extremes may be occasionally met with on the same farm. In the river valleys the soil is chiefly alluvial.

The farms vary much in size in different parts of the county, but taken on an average they run about 40 acres, which is about 18 acres below the average size of English farms in general.

The total area of the county, including water surface, is 656,243 acres, and the total quantity of land under all kinds of crops (exclusive of nursery grounds and woods), bare fallow and grass is 514,573 acres, which are held by 13,371 occupiers, of whom 11,559 rent the land, 1,204 are owners, and 608 both rent and own land. The following table from the "Agricultural Returns of Great Britain" exhibits the extent of land under the various kinds of crops in 1890:—

PHYSIOGRAPHY AND POLITY OF DERBYSHIRE.

CORN CROPS.		GREEN CROPS.
	Acres.		Acres.
Wheat	17,314	Potatoes.....	2,842
Barley or Bere	9,306	Turnips and Swedes	12,002

Clover, sainfoin and grasses under rotation		25,947
Permanent pasture or grass not broken up in rotation (exclusive of heath and mountain land)		410,320
Woods and woodlands ..		25,189

From the above table it will be seen that the land is chiefly in meadow or pasture for dairy purposes. Considerable attention is given to the breeding of cattle and horses, and good stud farms have been established in various parts of the county. The following table from "Agricultural Returns of Great Britain" shows the number of horses, cattle and sheep in Derbyshire in 1890:—

No. of horses used solely for agricultural purposes	13,938
No. of unbroken horses.....	7,116
No. of mares kept solely for breeding	1,303
Total.....	22,357
No. of cows and heifers in milk or in calf	71,186
No. of other cattle : above two years	21,644
, under two years	50,402

GOVERNMENT AND DIVISIONS.—After the consolidation of the kingdom, the Saxon Monarchs found it necessary to appoint officers to assist them in the maintenance of their authority. These officers were called Ealdormen, and the districts committed to their care were, in the first instance, probably coincident with those over which the kings of the heptarchy had ruled^c. These governors became, from the extent of their territories, dangerously powerful and aggressive. The earldom of Northumbria stretched from the Humber nearly to the Forth; and Mercia and Wessex, though both less extensive, were scarcely less powerful, and not unfrequently endangered the existence of the monarchy. Subsequent kings abridged the power of these ealdormen by a sub-division of their earldoms, and hence originated our shires. During Danish ascendancy the title was changed into jarl or eorle, an equivalent term in their language. The Normans substituted the name count, and the shire or district over which he ruled was called a county, which term remains in use to the present day. But the title is now one of honour and dignity only, unconnected with county government. The frequent attendance of the earls on the king's person necessitated the appointment of a deputy, or vice comes, styled in Saxon phraseology, shire-reeve, who probably at first acted only in the earl's absence, but subsequently to him was committed the whole burden of county government. In the early period of our history the sheriffs continued in office for a number of years, and sometimes for the whole term of their life; but since the 28th Edward III. (1354), the appointment has been made annually, and is held directly by letters patent from the Crown. The usual mode of election is for the judges, having met in the Exchequer Chamber on the morrow of St. Martin (Nov. 12), to return the names of three persons, residents in the county, to the king, who, with a small instrument, pricks the name of one of the three, usually the first on the list, as sheriff. His duties are onerous and his powers extensive.

In his judicial capacity the sheriff presided in the county court upon all causes of 40s. value and under; but this duty has been modified by the establishment of county court judgeships. By the sheriff all county meetings are summoned; and he decides the elections of knights of the shire and of coroners. As the keeper of the king's peace he takes precedence of the highest noble in the shire, and is armed with such ample powers for the defence of the county against the king's enemies, that he may command all the people residing within it to attend him: these form the posse comitatus. In his ministerial capacity he executes all writs and other processes directed to him from the courts; he summons and returns all juries, and is responsible for the due execution of the judgment of the courts, both civil and criminal. As the king's bailiff he must strictly guard the rights of the Crown within his bailiwick; he must seize all lands devolving on the Crown by attainder or escheat, levy all fines and forfeitures, and take care of all waifs and strays, &c. To execute these various duties, the sheriff is aided by several officers of inferior rank, an under-sheriff, coroners, justices of the peace, a county treasurer, a clerk of the peace, sheriff's officers, and constables.

Henry VIII., in the early years of his reign, created a new office, the Lieutenancy, which gradually superseded the ancient commission of array, in levying and organising the local troops in the various counties. The holder of the office is styled the Lord Lieutenant, who may be regarded as the chief magistrate of the county, in whom is vested the entire control of the militia and the selection of the officers. The appointment is one of the privileges of the Crown, but the honour is rarely conferred upon any but supporters of the existing Government. The office, which is held during pleasure, became general throughout the country about 1549.

To render more certain and easy the due administration of the law and the maintenance of peace and order, each shire was sub-divided into smaller portions, which are variously named in different localities. In Yorkshire they are called Wapentakes; but Derbyshire and the greater number of counties were divided into tithings and hundreds, each word being definitive of the number of free men, householders, and their families within the division. A tithing was the portion allotted to ten families, and twelve tithings (120 the Saxon hundred) constituted a hundred. Hereunder we enumerate the hundreds, and the parishes and townships contained therein:—

Appletree Hundred.—Alkmonston, Ash, Barton-Blount, Bearwardcote, Belper, Boylestone, Bradley, Brailsford, Breadsall, Burnaston, Chaddeaden, Church Broughton, Cubley, Dalbury Lees, Doveridge, Duffield, Edlaston-with-Wyaston, Etwall, Hatton, Hazlewood, Heage, Hilton, Holbrooke, Hollington, Hoon, Hungry Bentley, Kedleston, Longford, Marston-on-Dove, Marston Montgomery, Mercaston, Mugginton, Norbury-with-Roston, Osleston and Thurvaston, Osmaston, Radbourne, Ravensdale Park, Rodsley, Scropton-with-Foston, Shirley, Shottle and Postern, Snelston, Somersall Herbert, Spondon, Stanley, Stydd, Sudbury, Sutton-on-the-Hill, Trusley, Turnditch, Weston Underwood, Windley, Yeavley.

High Peak Hundred.—Abney and Abney Grange, Alport, Ashford, Aston, Bakewell, Banford, Baslow-with-Bubnell, Beeley, Birchover, Blackwell, Bowden Edge, Bradshaw Edge, Bradwell, Brough and Shatton, Brushfield, Buxton, Calver, Castleton, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Charlesworth, Chelmorton, Chinley-Bugs-worth and Brownside, Chisworth, Chunall, Combs Edge, Curbar, Darley, Derwent, Dinting, Edale, Edensor-with-Chatsworth, Elton, Eyam, Eyam Woodlands, Fairfield, Fernilee, Flagg, Foolow, Froggat, Glossop, Gratton, Grindlow, Haddon (Over and Nether), Hadfield, Harthill, Hassop, Hathersage, Hayfield, Hazlebadge, Highlow, Hope, Hope Woodlands, Hucklow Great, Hucklow Little, Litton, Longstone Great-with-Holme, Longstone Little, Ludworth, Mellor, Middleton and Smerrill, Moneyash, Offerton, Outseats, Padfield, Padley Nether, Peak Forest, Pilsley, Rowland, Rowsley Great, Sheldon, Simondley, Stanton, Stoke, Stoney Middleton, Taddington and Priestcliffe, Thornhill, Tideswell, Wardlow, Wensley and Snitterton, Wheston, Whitfield, Winster, Wormhill, Youlgrave.

Morleston and Litchurch Hundred.—Allestree, Aston-on-Trent, Barrow-on-Trent, Breaston, Codnor-with-Loscoe, Codnor Park, Crich, Dale Abbey, Denby, Draycott, Egginton, Elvaston, Findern, Hallam West, Heanor, Hopwell, Horsley, Horsley Woodhouse, Ilkeston, Kilburn, Kirk Hallam, Kirk Langley-with-Meynell Langley, Littleover, Long Eaton, Mackworth, Mapperley, Markeaton, Mickleover, Morley, Ockbrook, Pentrich, Quarndon, Ripley, Risley, Sandiacre, Sawley-with-Wilsthorpe, Shardlow, Shipley, Sinfen and Arleston, Smalley, Stanton-by-Dale, Tansley, Twyford and Stenson, Wessington, Weston-on-Trent, Willington, Wilne Little.

Repton and Gresley Hundred.—Appleby, Brethy, Burton-on-Trent, Caldwell, Calke, Castle Gresley, Catton, Chellaston, Chilcote, Church Gresley, Cotton-in-the-Elms, Croxall, Derby Hills, Donnithorpe, Drakelow, Foremark, Hartshorn-with-Woodville, Ingleby, Linton, Lullington, Measham, Melbourne, Newton Solney, Normanton, Osmaston, Packington, Ravenstone, Repton, Rosliston, Smishy, Stanton and Newhall, Stanton-by-Bridge, Stapenhill, Stretton-in-the-Field, Swadlincote, Ticknall, Walton-on-Trent, Winshall.

Scarsdale Hundred.—Alfreton, Ashover, Ault or Hault-Hucknall, Barborough, Barlow Great, Barlow Little, Beauchief Abbey, Beighton, Blackwell, Bolsover, Brackenfield and Woolley, Brampton, Brimington, Calow, Chesterfield, Clay Lane or Clay Cross, Clown, Coal Aston, Dore, Dronfield, Eckington, Elinton-with-Cresswell Hamlet, Glapwell, Hasland Heath, Killamarsh, Langwith, Morton, Newbold and Dunstan, Normanton South, Norton, Pilsley, Pinxton, Pleasley, Scarcliffe, Shirland, Staveley, Stretton, Sutton-cum-Duckmanton, Tapton, Temple or North Normanton, Tibshelf, Totley, Tupton, Unstone, Walton, Whittington, Whitwell, Wingerworth, Wingfield North, Wingfield South, Woodthorpe.

Wirksworth Hundred.—Alderwasley, Aldwark, Alsop-le-Dale and Eaton, Ashbourn, Ashleyhay, Atlow, Ballidon, Bentley Fenny, Biggin, Bonsall, Bradbourn, Brassington, Callow, Carsington, Clifton and Compton, Cromford, Griffe Grange, Hartington Upper Quarter, Hartington Middle Quarter, Hartington Nether Quarter, Hartington Town Quarter, Hognaston, Hopton, Hulland, Hulland Ward, Hulland Ward Intakes, Ible, Idridgehay and Alton, Ireton Wood, Ivonbrook Grange, Kirk Ireton, Kniveton, Lea Hall Hamlet, Mapleton, Matlock, Middleton, Newton Grange, Offcote, Underwood, Parwich, Sturston, Thorpe, Tissington, Wirksworth, Yeldersley.

PARLIAMENTARY DIVISIONS.—Previous to 1832 Derbyshire returned two knights of the shire, but by the Reform Bill of that year the county was divided into two parts—the Northern Division and the Southern Division—and two members were allotted to each. A further partition of the county into three parts, with two members to each, came into operation in 1868. No further change was in the Parliamentary representation till the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill in 1885, by which the above divisions were abolished, and the county divided into seven parts, with one member each, viz.:—Chesterfield Parliamentary Division: area, 57,870 acres; population, 61,294; number of voters, 9,950. High Peak Parliamentary Division: area, 124,301 acres; population, 60,740; number of voters, 10,259. Ilkeston Parliamentary Division: area, 39,063 acres; population, 69,192; number of voters, 12,428. Mid Parliamentary Division: area, 47,164 acres; population, 59,716; number of voters, 10,175. North-Eastern Parliamentary Division: area, 55,870 acres; population, 61,895; number of voters, 10,456. Southern Parliamentary Division: area, 112,590 acres; population, 63,816; number of voters, 12,798. Western Parliamentary Division: area, 193,129 acres; population, 56,917; number of voters, 10,629.

The borough of Derby, with a population of 94,146, returns two members to Parliament.

COUNTY COUNCIL.—This body was constituted in accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1888, which decreed that in every administrative county, as defined by the act, an elective body called a County Council shall be established, which shall be entrusted with the management of the administrative and financial business of the county, hitherto transacted by the magistrates at the Quarter Sessions. Under this Act, Derbyshire is divided into 53 electoral divisions, each of which returns one councillor, except Glossop, which has three, and Chesterfield, Ilkeston, Alfreton, Belper and Heage, and Eckington, two each. The borough of Derby is by this Act a separate administrative county, under the title of county borough. Each council consists of a chairman, aldermen (one-half of whom retire in rotation every third year), and councillors. The Act came into operation on the 1st of April, 1889, and the elections are triennial. An extension of this principle of local government was carried out by the passing of the Parish and District Councils Act of 1894, which enacted that in every rural parish having a population of 300 or upwards a council shall be elected for the management of parochial affairs; and that parishes having less than 300 inhabitants may be grouped with others for purposes of the act, the united population being not less than 300. The elections are annual, and the term of office commences on the 15th day of April in each year.

The following are the divisions for the election of members of the County Council, with the parishes and townships contained in them :—

Alfreton.—The urban sanitary district of Alfreton.

Alvaston.—Alvaston and Boulton, Aston-on-Trent, Chaddesden, Elvaston, Osmaston, Shardlow, and Great Wilne, Spondon.

Ashbourne.—Ashbourne, Biggin, Bradley, Clifton, Edlaston and Wyaston, Hulland, Hulland Ward, Mapleton, Norbury and Roston, Offcote and Underwood, Osmaston, Shirley Snelston, Sturston, Yeldersley.

Ashover.—Ashover, North Wingfield, Tupton, Wingerworth.

Bakewell.—Ashford, Bakewell, Beeley, Haddon Over, Haddon Nether, Harthill, Hassop, Longstone Great, Longstone Little, Middleton and Smerrill, Rowland, Stanton, Youlgrave.

Baslow.—Abney and Abney Grange, Baslow and Bubnell, Calver, Chatsworth, Curbar, Edensor, Eyam, Eyam Woodlands, Foolow, Froggatt, Hathersage, Highlow, Nether Padley, Offerton, Outseats, Pilsley, Stoke, Stoney Middleton.

Beighton.—Beighton, Killamarsh.

Belper and Heage.—Belper, Heage.

Blackwell.—Blackwell, Pinxton, South Normanton.

Bolsover.—Barlborough, Bolsover, Clowne, Elmtun, Whitwell.

Brailsford.—Allestree, Brailsford, Breadsall, Dalbury-Lees, Darley Abbey, Kedleston, Kirk Langley, Little Eaton, Mackworth, Markeaton, Mercaston, Quarndon, Radbourne, Ravensdale Park, Weston Underwood.

Brampton.—Brampton, Walton.

Brimington.—Brimington, Tapton.

Buxton.—Buxton urban sanitary district.

Castleton.—Aston, Bamford, Bradwell, Brough and Shatton, Castleton, Derwent, Edale, Hope, Thornhill, Woodlands.

Chapel-en-le-Frith.—Chapel-en-le-Frith, Chinley.

Chesterfield.—The municipal borough of Chesterfield.

Church Gresley.—Church Gresley.

Clay Cross.—Clay Lane, Stretton, Woodthorpe.

Codnor.—Codnor and Loscoe, Codnor Park.

Crich.—Alderwasley, Ashleyhay, Brackenfield, Crich, South Wingfield, Wessington.

Dronfield.—Coal Aston, Dronfield, Unstone.

Duffield.—Duffield, Hazlewood, Holbrook, Kilburn, Shottle and Postern, Turnditch, Windley.

Eckington.—The township is divided into two parts, each returning one member.

Etwall.—Ash, Beardwardcote, Burnaston, Egginton, Etwall, Findern, Littleover, Mickleover, Normanton, Trusley, Twyford and Stenson, Willington.

CHESTERFIELD PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

ASHOVER.

THIS is an extensive parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale, petty sessional division and county court district of Alfreton; union, rural district and deanery of Chesterfield. For carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, eight parish councillors and two district councillors have been assigned to Ashover. The area of the parish, according to the rate-books, is 9,245 acres, besides which there are 42 miles of highways and 16 miles of main road. The ratable value is £11,146, and the population 2,353. The principal landowners are the exors. of W. de B. Jessop, Esq., Overton Hall; Messrs. Joseph William and John Lee, Bunting Field and Wilkin House; Miss Lee, Chesterfield; Mrs. Batteson, Chesterfield; Thomas Green, Northedge House; George Blackshaw, Sheffield; J. B. Gregory, Raven's Nest; John Henry Twigg, Amber House; Rev. J. B. Nodder; the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke; Samuel Burkitt, Esq., J.P., Wingerworth; Chesterfield Charity Trustees; James Addy, Esq.; Mrs. Emma Suffolk Wallace; John Tomlinson, Ashover; Joseph Wheatcroft, Wirksworth; William Turbutt, Esq., Ogston Hall; Richard Holmes, Ashover; Mrs. Rosanna Holmes, Ashover; and Michael Humber, Esq.

The manor of Esseover (Ashover) at the time of the Domesday Survey was held by Serlo under Ralph Fitzhubert, and it had then its priest and church. About the beginning of the thirteenth century it was divided between two heiresses, who married a Willoughby and a Deincourt. The latter moiety was subsequently inherited by two sisters, who married Reresby of Lincolnshire and Masters of Nottinghamshire; and the share of the Masters was shortly afterwards divided between two sons, from one of whom a portion passed to the Piereponts. The original manor of Ashover was thus divided into four, which became known as New Hall, Old Hall or Reresby's, Muster's, and Pierepont's manors. The Reresbys also acquired Willoughby's share in exchange for their interest in the manor of Pleasley. They were a family of some distinction, and on several occasions filled the office of high sheriff. Newhall, afterwards called Eastwood Hall, remained in the possession of the Reresbys till 1623, when the trustees of Sir Thomas Reresby sold it, together with the advowson of the church, to the Rev. Emanuel Bourne, then rector of Ashover; and by intermarriage they descended to the Noddors. A portion of the estate was sold to the Milneses, and the hall and some land were purchased by the governors of Queen Anne's Bounty to augment the living of Brimington, near Chesterfield. The last occupant of Eastwood Hall, long the residence of the Reresbys, was the Rev. Emanuel Bourne, who had been presented to the rectory two years prior to his purchase of the manor. When the contentions between Charles I. and his parliament began, he very discreetly held aloof till the fuller development of circumstances indicated the probable result of the contest. But his neutrality rendered him an object of suspicion to both sides, and black mail to the amount of £10 was levied on him for the king's use, by a few royal soldiers, despatched to Ashover to watch the roads. He suffered still more from a company of Cromwell's dragoons, who took possession of the hall in the name of the parliament, and after failing to blow it down by three small pieces of ordnance placed on Fabric Hill, they accomplished its destruction by firing a barrel of gunpowder in the tower. "After that," says the reverend gentleman in a letter to his cousin, Mr. William Bourne, Manchester, "they sang a psalm and marched to the church. The scout, Master Smedley, ascended the pulpit and preached for two hours, about popery, priestcraft, and kingcraft, then singing a psalm were preparing to go, when one of the pioneers noticed the stained-glass window exhibiting the Crucifixion, and once belonging to the Reresbys, which they smashed, both glass and stonework. The prayer-book, surplice, and registers they carried to the Market Place, where they were publicly burnt. Wheatcroft, my parish clerk, wrote the following rhymes:—

'The Roundheads came down upon Eastwood Old Hall,
And they tried it with mattock and tried it with ball,
And they tore off the lead work and splintered the wood,
But as firmly as ever the battlements stood,
Till a barrel of powder at last did the thing,
And then they sang psalms for the fall of the king.'

When the royal cause became utterly hopeless, he gave his influence to the Roundheads, and was rewarded with an appointment as Commissioner of Sequestration. He was determined not to sacrifice his rectories (he held also Aylestone in Leicestershire) for a few abstract opinions, and accepted all the ordinances of the Puritans, laying aside both surplice and prayer-book, and leaving the celebration of marriages to the civil power. When episcopacy was re-established, he discarded his Presbyterianism and complied with the Act of Uniformity, passed in 1662.

The hall is now a picturesque ivy-covered ruin, its huge fire-place, still intact, at which four oxen might be roasted abreast, telling of the hospitality of our old English forefathers.

The Old Hall manor was conveyed in 1337 to Roger de Wynfield, and subsequently passed by marriage to the Rollestons. The male line of this family failed in the reign of Elizabeth, and the estate descended to the Pershalls, of Horsley, Staffordshire. It was subsequently sold in portions.

Muster's manor also belonged to the Wynfields, who resided at Edelstowe Hall. In later years the hall and estate belonged to a branch of the Gladwin family; they passed thence by an heiress to the Bournes, from whom they were purchased in 1808, by Mr. John Milnes, of Ashover. The hall, which has long been converted into a farmhouse, is now the property of Mr. John Twigg, of Amber House.

Pierepont's manor came to the Babingtons, from whom it was purchased by the Reresbys, and was sold with the other estates of Sir Thomas Reresby in several portions.

The parish is watered by the Amber river, from which the ground on either side rises steeply into lofty rugged hills, fir and pine-clad in places, the bare flinty rock protruding in others, or lying scattered in huge masses along the hill sides. One of these stones, called by the country people Robin Hood's Mark, measures 26 feet in circumference, and is supposed to weigh about 14 tons. Its extraordinary position favours the opinion that it was so placed by art; but how this was accomplished in prehistoric times, when the inhabitants of this country had scarcely advanced beyond the initial stage of civilisation, is a mystery that will probably never be solved. Near this is another rocking stone, designated the Turning Stone, which is supposed to have been in some way connected with Druidical worship. Another mass of rock, which stands prominently out from the general outline of Overton Tor, has been named Gladstone's Nose from its fancied resemblance to the nasal organ of that veteran statesman. This scene of rugged grandeur is scarcely surpassed by any other in the country; and were it more easily accessible it would doubtless receive a much greater share of attention from tourists and others in search of the beautiful.

The soil is various, and almost entirely laid down in pasture. Limestone for agricultural purposes is abundant, and gritstone is quarried in several places. This stone is of excellent quality and in considerable demand for grindstones; but the absence of railway communication, and the cost of carting the stone some three miles before it can be trucked, are very great obstacles to the further development of the trade. Frame-work knitting was formerly carried on to a small extent, and there was a cotton-doubling factory where several hands were employed; but these industries have been abandoned.

The village of Ashover, locally pronounced Ash'er, is romantically situated in a deep narrow valley, 19 miles N.W. from Derby, 7 from Alfreton, the same from Chesterfield, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Stretton, the nearest railway station. Leonard Wheatercroft, who was parish clerk, poet, tailor, and schoolmaster, and died in 1706, wrote an account of the parish in manuscript, in which he says:—"Few villages are better situated for excellent water. The river Amber rises in this parish, and bears that name for ten miles; and there are besides eighty springs." The water is of exceptional purity, and the air bracing and conspicuously free from fogs. The place possesses many advantages as a health resort combined with beautiful scenery, and it has now two hydropathic establishments at which there are excellent domestic arrangements and moderate charges. Ashover House, the largest of these, erected by the Ashover Hydropathic Company, Limited, is a handsome and commodious structure, fitted up for the luxurious comfort of visitors and patients requiring the hydropathic treatment. It is delightfully situated on an eminence, yet sheltered by lofty hills from the north and east, and commands from its elevated situation beautiful prospects of the picturesque valley of Ashover. The grounds are beautifully laid out, and contain lawn tennis and croquet grounds, bowling green, &c. The internal arrangements are most complete: the rooms most comfortably furnished, and both rooms and corridors are heated by an elaborate hot-water system. Ambervale House is another establishment of the same kind.

The village is supplied with water by the Ashover Water Company; and the Chesterfield Sanitary Authority, Alfreton Local Board, and the Clay Cross Company have reservoirs and filter beds in the parish. The weekly market, which was granted at an early period, has long been discontinued; but fairs are held on April 25th, October 15th, and the Monday before Martinmas. The latter is also a statute hiring for servants. The feast is held the first Sunday in July.

The Church (All Saints'), an ancient edifice of stone in the Gothic style, consists of chancel, nave with north and south aisles, south porch and western tower surmounted by a very elegant spire. Not a vestige of the Norman church remains. The present structure, according to Wheatercroft's MS. history, was rebuilt about the year 1419; and tradition attributes the erection of the tower and spire to the Babingtons. The church was once very rich in stained glass, representing sacred subjects and armorial bearings; but much of this was destroyed by Cromwell's soldiers, and what they left has disappeared in the several restorations effected during the last century. The chancel is separated from the nave by a very fine screen of carved wood-work, said to have been erected by Thomas Babington, and the arms of that family appear on a shield above the doorway. In the north wall of the chancel are two shallow recesses under ogee-shaped arches, six feet wide by five feet high. Such recesses are very unusual on the north side, and their original purpose is now a matter of conjecture. The aisles are five bays in length, and at the east end of the south aisle was a chantry founded by Thomas Babington, in 1811, and endowed with an income valued, in 1547, at £5 1s. 4d., for the maintenance of a priest to sing mass. This chapel was enclosed by a screen of carved wood, which has long been removed and destroyed except the two shields of arms, since placed on the rood screen. There was also an altar at the east end of the north aisle. At the west end stands an ancient and very interesting font. The base is of stone, hexagonal in form, and comparatively modern; the upper part is of lead, cylindrical in shape, and ornamented by twenty embossed figures, loosely draped. Each figure stands under a semi-circular arched niche, with a book in the left hand. This font is said by Lysons and Glover to be of Saxon date, but other authorities, with greater probability, assign it to the late Norman period.

Other objects of interest within the church are two well executed brasses and an altar tomb. One brass bears a tonsured figure clad in eucharistic vestments, the trimming of the chasuble, maniple and stole, and the lacework of the alb being very minutely delineated. The slab bearing this brass had once a marginal inscription to Philip Eyre, who was rector of the parish from 1471 till his death in 1504. The other brass is in excellent preservation, and bears the effigies of James Rolleston, of Lea, esquire, and Anna, his wife, with their nine daughters and four sons. He is clad in plate armour, over which is a cuirass; the lady in a long flowing robe, with tight sleeves, and angular head-dress. He erected the monument after the death of his wife in 1507, leaving a blank for the insertion of the date of his own death, which his descendants neglected to fill in. There is an altar tomb of alabaster bearing the recumbent effigies of Thomas Babington, founder of the chantry, and Edith, his wife. There are also several modern memorials, mural and stained glass, to members of the families of Bourne, Milnes, Dakeyne, Nodder, Colmore, and Moon.

The spire, which rises from within the embattled parapet of the tower, is tall and graceful, and forms a charming feature in the landscape from whichever side the village is approached. A portion of the spire, measuring about 21 feet, was blown down, and re-built in 1715. There are six bells in the tower. The interior of the church suffered much from the bad taste of the restorers in 1798 and 1843, and since 1880, upwards of £1,000 has been spent in retrieving it from those barbarous alterations and improvements (?). The coats of plaster and whitewash have been removed from the walls; the tower arch has been opened to the church; the rood loft staircase, north doorway, and hagioscope opened out, and a new organ and chamber for its reception have been built. The bells have been re-hung, one re-cast, and one presented by Mr. F. J. Fenton, of Amber Villa. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's Book at £12 3s. 1½d., now worth £380, held by the patron, the Rev. John Bourne Nodder, M.A. There are 84½ acres of glebe.

The earliest registers were burnt by Cromwell's soldiers in 1646; the present ones date from 1653. The following entry occurs under 1660:—"Dorothy Mately, supposed wife of Jno. Flint of this parish, foreswore herself; whereupon the ground opened and she sanke over hed Mar. 23rd, and, being found dead, she was buried March 25th." John Bunyan, who probably heard all the details of this remarkable incident during one of his preaching journeys in the district, has utilised it in his "Life and Death of Mr. Badman," first published in 1680, and re-issued in his collected works by Blackie & Son in 1855:—"But above all take that dreadful story of Dorothy Mately, an inhabitant of Ashover, in the county of Derby. This Dorothy Mately, saith the relater, was noted by the people of the town to be a great swearer, and curser, and liar, and thief; just like Mr. Badman; and the labor that she did usually follow was to wash the rubbish that came forth of the lead mines, and there to get sparks of lead ore; her usual way of asserting of things was with these kinds of imprecations, 'I would I might sink into the earth if it be not so,' or, 'I would God would make the earth open and swallow me up.' Now upon the 23rd March, 1660, this Dorothy was washing of ore, upon the top of a steep hill, about a quarter of a mile from Ashover, and was there taxed by a lad for taking of two single pence out of his pocket, for he had laid his breeches by, and was at work in his drawers; but she violently denied it, wishing that the earth might swallow her up if she had them; she also used the same wicked words on several other occasions that day. Now, one George Hodgkinson, of Ashover, a man of good report there, came accidentally by where this Dorothy was, and stood still awhile to talk with her, as she was washing her ore. There stood also a little child by her tub side, and another a distance from her, calling aloud to her to come away; wherefore the said George took the girl by the hand to lead her away to her that called her; but behold they had not gone above ten yards from Dorothy, but they heard her crying out for help, so looking back he saw the woman, and her tub and sieve twirling round, and sinking into the ground. Then saith the man, 'Pray to God to pardon thy sin, for thou art never like to be seen alive any longer.' So she and her tub twirled round and round till they sunk three yards into the earth, and there for a while stayed. Then she called again for help, thinking, as she said, she should stay there. Now the man, though greatly amazed, did begin to think which way to help her; but immediately a great stone, which had appeared in the earth, fell upon her head and broke her skull, and then the earth broke in upon her, and covered her. She was afterwards digged up, and found about four yards within the ground, with the boy's two single pence in her pocket, but her tub and sieve could not be found."

A new cemetery, comprising 1 acre 3 roods, adjoining the churchyard was purchased and laid out in 1876 at a cost of £800. It is under the management of a board of nine members.

The parish is divided into four quarters or districts, each containing a number of scattered hamlets and farms. Ashover Quarter includes Appletree Knowl, Butts House, Eastwood Hall, Eastwood Grange, Hillside, Marsh Green, Meadow Lane, and Rattle; Mill Town Quarter includes Mill Town, Butterley, Gorse Hall, Overton Hall, Stubben Edge Hall, High Oredish, and Littlemoor; Upper End Quarter includes the north-western part of the township containing Overton and Kelstedge; Alton Quarter embraces the northern and north-eastern part of the parish, and includes Alton, Northedge, and Presse.

Nonconformity is an important factor in the religious life of the parish. A new Wesleyan Methodist Chapel was erected on the Moor in 1874, by four brothers of the Bassett family, in lieu of the old chapel at Rattle, which is now used as a Sunday School. There is another Wesleyan Chapel at Upper Town, built in 1868 at a cost of £100, exclusive of the site, which was given by Mr. John Holmes, and a deal of gratuitous labour. It will seat 100 persons, and is in the Matlock Bridge circuit.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel at Ashover Hay, built in 1824, and enlarged and altered in 1870; and they have also another at Littlemoor, built in 1858. Mount Zion Chapel (Wesleyan Reform), at Spitewinter, was erected in 1886 at a cost of £200, and will seat 100 persons. It is in the Clay Cross circuit. The members of the Methodist Free Church have a place of worship at Butts, a neat stone structure with square tower.

There are two schools in the parish—one under the Ashover School Board, the other endowed. The latter was originally founded at Hillside in 1703, and the present premises were erected at Upper Town in 1882, at a cost of £540. Its endowments amount to about £50 per annum. It is also used as a Church Mission Room. A Working Men's Institute and Reading Room was built in 1876 at a cost of £300, raised by voluntary subscriptions. It comprises reading, recreation, and billiard rooms, and a library of over 500 volumes.

Overton, an estate three-quarters of a mile south of Ashover, belonged anciently to a family that took their name from the place. From the Overtons it passed in 1327 to the Hunts, who possessed it till 1599, when it was sold in portions. The hall, with some land, was purchased by the Hodgkinsons of Northedge Hall, from whom it passed by the marriage of an heiress to the Banks, and descended to Sir Joseph Banks, the distinguished naturalist, and President of the Royal Society. In 1768 he and Dr. Solander accompanied Captain Cook on a voyage to the South Seas, and returned to England, after an absence of nearly three years, with a large collection of specimens illustrative of natural history. He also made a voyage to Iceland with the same object. He died in 1820, leaving a widow but no family, and after the death of Lady Banks this property was inherited by her nephew, Sir Edward Knatchbull, Bart., who sold it in 1829 in shares to Dr. Bright, of London, and Wm. Milnes, Esq. Dr. Bright's purchase included the hall, in which he occasionally resided. The estate was purchased by the late William de Burgh Jessop, Esq., J.P., in 1884. Whilst making a tennis ground here in 1887, 26 skeletons were found a few inches below the sward. They appeared to have been buried indiscriminately, as if hastily, and many of them were in good preservation, but no other relics were found to show how or when the interments took place. About thirty yards distant some coins, bearing the date 1742, were also turned up.

At the base of the hills, opposite Overton Hall, is Raven's Nest—an estate purchased by Mr. John Gregory in 1600, and it is now the property of his descendant, Mr. John Bassett Gregory, to whom we acknowledge our indebtedness for much interesting information. Veins of lead occur among the flinty hills, and mining operations were carried on at the Gregory mines for many years. The enterprise was for some years unremunerative, but during the second half of the 18th century, when improved machinery had been introduced, the mine proved a little El Dorado, and yielded the proprietors from £12,000 to £20,000 yearly. The mines were finally closed in 1804. The mounds of white sparry debris, looking like acres of snow, have been sifted again and again for ore, and the remains are now carted away for use in the manufacture of glass and china.

Stubben Edge Hall is an ancient mansion one and a half miles south-east from Ashover. The hall, with a considerable portion of land, formerly belonged to the family of Crich, but in the reign of Elizabeth it became the property of William Dakeyne, who married the widow of William Criche. Cornelius Criche, the last of the family, died, in reduced circumstances, in 1789, at the age of 102, and is buried in the chancel of the church. William Dakeyne married for his second wife, Katherine Strange, maid of honour to Mary Queen of Scots, whom she attended on the scaffold. There is a tablet in Ashover Church to several members of this family, headed by "Gulielm. Dakeyn. Norroy." But it does not appear that William Dakeyne ever held the position of Norroy King-at-Arms of the Herald's College; another William Dakeyn, grandson of the above, was apprehended by warrant for issuing false pedigrees and grants of arms. The estate remained in the possession of this family till 1720, when Frances, only daughter and heiress of Arthur Dakeyn, married William Hopkinson, of Bonsall. It subsequently passed through various hands to the Milneses, and was purchased from the Exors. of the late William Milnes, in 1874, by J. P. Jackson, Esq., J.P., the present owner.

Kelstedge is a hamlet one-and-a-quarter miles north-west from Ashover. Here is the large saw and turning mills of Cundy Brothers. Alton is a village one mile north-east. In the neighbourhood are several gritstone quarries.

CHARITIES.—John Thompson, late of Dove Cote, Ashover, in 1881 gave £500 (consols), the dividends to be appropriated annually (1) in providing prizes, bibles and prayer books, for proficiency in Scripture knowledge, good attendance and good conduct for children at the day and Sunday schools; (2) in six sums of 20s. each to destitute poor not receiving parish relief; and (3) the residue of the income to be distributed in sums of 5s. each to aged poor parishioners. Mrs. Ann Kaye Jackson, in 1880, left the dividends of £200 (consols) to be distributed in warm clothing, or otherwise, at the discretion of the rector and churchwardens. Mrs. Waterhouse, in 1884, left £4 16s. 8d. yearly to be distributed at Christmas amongst the poor who are church-goers. The sum of £6 12s. 11d. is received yearly from the Rev. F. Gisborne's Flannel Charity; and there are other small bequests amounting to about £4 10s. yearly.

AULT HUCKNALL.

This parish comprises the villages, hamlets, and manors of Ault Hucknall, Astwith, Doe Lea, Hardwick, Hardstoft, Rowthorne, and Stainsby, embracing an area of 4,330 acres; ratable value, £12,767; and population, 1,388. It lies on the border of Nottinghamshire, and is in Mansfield union and county court district, Scarsdale hundred, county council division of Heath, petty sessional division and deanery of Chesterfield, and Blackwell rural district. In carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894 seven parish councillors have been assigned to Ault Hucknall, and one guardian and rural district councillor. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and owner of nearly the whole parish. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway and the Doe Lea branch of the Midland system, pass through the parish. The latter was opened for traffic in 1892. Three or four trains stop daily at Glapwell and Rowthorne and Hardwick stations, which are both within this parish. A bed of coal underlies the parish, and is worked by the Sheepbridge Coal and Iron Company, Ltd. Glapwell Colliery was commenced in 1882. There are two shafts sunk to a depth of 290 yards, where the top hard seam is reached. The output is 1,400 tons per day, giving employment to over 800 hands, for whose accommodation 136 cottages have been erected at Doe Lea, on the border of the parish. The Clay Cross, Pilsley, and Stanton Colliery Companies have workings under the parish.

This place is not mentioned in Domesday Book, nor is there any manor of the name. The village, which consists of the church, one farm, and two cottages, is situated 7 miles S.E. from Chesterfield, 5 N.W. from Mansfield, and $\frac{1}{2}$ mile from Rowthorne and Hardwick station. The name is more generally written Hault Hucknall, but the initial "H" in Hault is clearly an intrusion, as the word is undoubtedly a contraction of the Latin altus, signifying high. The church, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient edifice of stone, comprising chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and an embattled tower, with pinnacles between the nave and chancel. There is no record of its erection, but the semi-circular arches of the north aisle, the tower arch, and the arch leading into the chancel are early Norman work, the rest of the edifice is chiefly in the later Gothic style. The church was thoroughly restored in 1887. The south aisle was undershored, and the floor of the church lowered to a uniform level, and re-laid with parquetry work. The old pews were replaced by new seats, and the bells adjusted. The chancel floor is laid with tessellated tiles, arranged in a pretty design, and the communion table is of marble and Caen stone. The south aisle extends along the side of the chancel, forming a south chapel, where there was formerly an altar; and there was probably another at the east end of the north aisle. In the south chapel is the altar-tomb of Anne, first wife of Sir William Cavendish, afterwards Earl of Devonshire. She died in 1598, and the monument was erected by her son William, the second earl, in 1627. Near this is a black marble slab covering the bones of Thomas Hobbes, of Malsbury, who was tutor to two Earls of Devonshire, and resided with the family till his death in 1679, at the age of 91. He was a famous philosopher, and the author of several works; but his thoughts were so far in advance of the age in which he lived that many regarded him as an atheist, and Parliament in 1665 passed a censure on his writings. His principal work was the celebrated "Leviathan," which is full of paradoxical doctrines. He was also the author of a descriptive Latin poem on the wonders of the Peak, called "De Mirabilibus Pecci." The east window of the chancel and the west window of the south aisle were filled with stained glass by the tenants of Hardwick estate and other friends in memory of the late John Gregory Cottingham, steward to the sixth and seventh Dukes of Devonshire. He died in 1878. The font, a beautiful piece of work in white and variegated marble, was given by the late Rev. Canon Cottingham, brother of the above. In the west end of the nave is a Norman doorway, now built up, having a tympanum, and another bearing very quaintly-carved allegorical figures. There are five bells in the tower, all of 16th and 17th century dates. The registers commence in the year 1660, but are defective in the early portion. A new burial ground, half-an-acre in extent, opposite the church, was laid out in 1887.

The church of "Hokenhall" formed part of the endowment of Newstead Priory, Nottinghamshire, and the living was in the gift of the prior of that house till the Reformation. In 1544 Henry VIII. granted the advowson of the vicarage and the rectorial tithes to Sir Francis Leake, and they were purchased from his descendant, the last Earl of Scarsdale, by the Duke of Devonshire. The living valued in the King's Book at £6 0s. 5d., is now worth £145 net with residence, and is held in conjunction with Heath by the Rev. F. Broadhurst, M.A.

Hardwick is an estate and manor on the border of Nottinghamshire. It was given by King John to Andrew de Beauchamp in 1203; it afterwards belonged to the Savages, of whom it was held by the Stainsbys, by the annual render of three pounds of cinnamon, and one of pepper. Subsequently it came into the possession of the Hardwicks. Elizabeth, better known as "Bess of Hardwick," third daughter and co-heiress of John Hardwick, Esq., brought this manor to her second husband, Sir William Cavendish, from whom it has descended to the Duke of Devonshire. The celebrated Bess was led four times to the hymeneal altar, and by each marriage she increased her wealth and influence. Her last husband was the Earl of Shrewsbury, to whose custody the beautiful but much maligned Mary Queen of Scots was entrusted by a jealous and cruel sister queen. She built Hardwick Hall, and her initials "E.S." appears in the carved stonework that crowns the towers.

The hall is seated on an eminence commanding an extensive and varied prospect, and was built from stones quarried out of the hill-side. The beholder is at once impressed by the magnitude of the mansion and the number of windows, and he realizes the truth of the distych—

"Hardwick Hall, more glass than wall."

It stands now much the same as it was when Bess of Hardwick was the presiding genius of the place, a new wing and servants' offices being the only change made for a very long time. The Entrance Hall is a noble apartment, with a gallery at the west end. The walls are hung with fine modern tapestry, and facing the entrance is a beautiful life-size statue of Mary Queen of Scots, by Westmacott. The Chapel, on the first floor, contains the curious old chairs and cushions covered with very fine needlework. The Dining Room is a spacious apartment, wainscoted with dark oak, and has an elaborate mantelpiece, above which is a coronet with the initials, "E.S.," and the motto, "The conclusion of all things is to feare God and to keepe His commandmentes." On the walls are numerous portraits of persons who, doubtless, were distinguished in their time. Adjoining, is the best bedroom, which has been rehung with tapestry illustrating rural sports. The Drawing Room is an elegantly furnished apartment, with the Hardwick arms carved in very high relief over the fireplace. The tapestry above the wainscot illustrates the story of Esther and Ahasuerus, but it is now almost wholly covered with portraits. The State Room or Presence Chamber is a noble apartment, 65 feet by 33 feet and 26 feet high, with an immense bay or recess which of itself would form a capacious apartment. The walls are covered with tapestry on which are depicted the principal scenes in the Odyssey. Above this is a deep frieze of plaster bearing various figures in bas-relief, curious certainly, but not beautiful, amongst which are Diana and her nymphs. The furniture is of Elizabethan date and style, elaborately ornamented with crimson and black velvet richly embroidered with gold and silver thread. At the north end is a lofty canopy, its black velvet covering being emblazoned with heraldic devices in needlework. In the recess are several pieces of ancient furniture curiously carved and richly upholstered. The Library is entered from the State room. Here, as elsewhere, the Countess, desirous that her name and work should live in the memory of posterity, has left her initials "E.S." on the gorgeously embroidered fire-screens. The various bedrooms are all hung with rare and valuable tapestry. One of these is called Marie Stuart's Room, and her name is associated with the various objects in it. Over the door are the arms of Scotland, carved in wood, with the initials "M.R." and the inscription: "MARIE STEWART PAR LA GRACE DE DIEU, ROYNE DE SCOSSE, DOUAIRIERE DE FRANCE." Here is the bedstead on which she slept; it is draped with curtains of velvet embroidered with flowers in coloured silk, said to have been the work of the unfortunate Queen. Mrs. Ratcliffe has told the story of Marie's captivity here, in her own fascinating way; but unfortunately for the truth of it, the present hall was not built till after her death; and it is almost as certain that she was never confined in the old one. It is, however, very probable that some of the articles identified with her name are authentic, and have been brought here from Chatsworth, where she was for some years a prisoner. The Picture Gallery is, without doubt, the noblest and most interesting room in the mansion, and is perhaps unequalled by any other in the kingdom. It is nearly 170 feet long, 23 feet wide, 26 feet high, and occupies the entire length of the eastern front with the exception of the towers. It is lighted by immense windows, 20 feet in height and 18 in number, each of which is said to contain 1,500 panes of glass. The walls are literally covered with family and other portraits of various exalted and historical personages, amongst which are those of Queen Elizabeth and the victim of her jealousy, Mary Queen of Scots; the famous "Bess of Hardwick," the builder of three noble mansions; Lady Jane Grey, Sir Thomas More, Cardinal Pole, Arabella Stuart, the first Duke of Devonshire on horseback, and Thomas Hobbes, the philosopher. There are also many valuable paintings in various parts of the house.

The Old Hall, the former home of the Hardwicks, stands a melancholy ruin hard by the present mansion. It has been dismantled at various times, and much of the carved wood and stone work was used in the erection of Chatsworth; but the remains show that it was a magnificent structure. One room, called the Giants' Chamber, long stood entire, but is now open to the winds of heaven. The worm-eaten balustrades and the mutilated plaster ornamentation may still be seen. The park is a noble expanse, famous for its venerable oaks, and stocked with red and fallow deer.

Ostwith is a village containing several farms and cottages, two miles south-west from the parish church.

Hardsoft, or Hardstaff, is an agricultural village on the Chesterfield and Tibshelf road, three miles south-west from the church. The Wesleyans had a chapel here formerly. A school was built in 1858. It is attended by about 60 children. It is also used as a Sunday school, and church service is held in it on the Sunday evenings. The village feast is held on the Sunday before Midsummer Day.

Rowthorne is an ancient manor and village, one mile east from the church. Near by is a station on the Doe Lea extension of the Midland Railway for Rowthorne and Hardwick. There are three passenger trains daily each way, and one goods train. From Glapwell Station to Rowthorne the gradient is 1 in 50, and up this steep ascent only thirteen wagons of coal can be brought at one time, and sometimes not even that number. A school was erected here in 1855. It is now under the Ault Hucknall School Board, and is attended by about 60 children.

The manor of Rugetorn (Rowthorne) at the time of the Domesday Survey belonged to Roger Busli. It was afterwards held by the family of Tilly, whose heiress married Savage. Robert de Lexington, in the reign of Henry III., conveyed the manor to the Priory of Newstead. After the dissolution of the priory at the Reformation it was granted to Roger Greenhalgh; and in 1563 it was vested in his co-heiress. A few years afterwards it was conveyed, probably by purchase, to Sir William Cavendish, ancestor to the present noble owner.

Stainsby is an ancient manor and small village one mile west from the church. A school was erected about 30 years ago by the Duke of Devonshire, in lieu of one that stood near Hardwick Hall. It has been under the management of the School Board since 1890, and is attended by 107 boys. It is endowed with 20 acres of land, left by Thomas Whitehead, in 1720, to the school formerly at Hardwick.

The manor of Stainsby was given by William the Conqueror to Roger de Poitou. In the reign of King John it came into the family of Savage, who held it by the service of rendering annually a sore hawk, that is a hawk of the first year. Sir John Savage was knighted at the battle of Agincourt, and his grandson, Thomas Savage, was transferred from the bishopric of London to the archiepiscopal see of York in 1501. He was more of a courtier and a sportsman than an ecclesiastic, and it is said of him that his chief delight was "in the sound of the huntsman's horn and the baying of his dogs." The manor remained with his family till 1580, when Sir John Savage conveyed the estate to Lord Chancellor Bromley, by whom it was transferred to Sir William Cavendish. There was, according to tradition, an ancient chapel here, but not a trace of it now remains.

A School Board of seven members was formed in 1890 for the united district of Ault Hucknall, Glapwell and Heath, and the various schools were taken over on the 1st of November, 1890.

CHARITIES.—William Derry, in 1794, left all his personal property, amounting to £59 8s. 10d.; for the benefit of the poor. The money was invested in the three per cent. consols, and the dividends (£3 8s. 6d.) are given to the poor. The sum of £5 10s. is received from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's charity, and distributed in warm clothing.

GREAT BARLOW.

This is a parish and township containing 3,884 acres, including about 500 acres of moorland, taken in a few years ago, and also a portion of the township of Little Barlow, added about twelve years ago. The ratable value is £4,315, and the population in 1891 was 1,107. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale; county council division of Newbold; petty sessional division, county court district, union and rural district of Chesterfield; and deanery of Dronfield. In accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act (1894), seven parish councillors and one district councillor have been elected for the management of parochial affairs. The surface is picturesquely diversified with wooded hills and deep ravines. Several seams of coal underlie the parish, and have been worked to a considerable extent; but the collieries have been recently laid in. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor and principal landowner; there are also several small freeholders.

At the time of the Domesday survey this manor was held by Ascut Musard. In the reign of Edward I. it belonged to the family of Abitot; and a little later a family bearing the name of the place were in possession. It remained with the Barlows, or Barleys, till 1593, when the estate was purchased by George, Earl of Shrewsbury. A little later it passed by sale to the Earl of Newcastle, from whom it descended to the Duke of Portland, who, in 1813, exchanged it for the manor of Whitwell, with an ancestor of the present owner.

The village of Barlow occupies an elevated situation four miles north-west from Chesterfield and ten miles south from Sheffield. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is a small structure of stone, erected soon after the Conquest, and still retaining a few traces of the original Norman work. The semicircular headed doorway within the porch, and a deeply splayed single-light window in the north wall, belong to that period. The chancel was added in 1870, at a cost of £500. At the west end of the nave is a clumsy wooden turret, containing one bell. The stained east window is a memorial of Thomas Milnes Smith-Milnes and his wife, and there are also memorial windows to Miss Margaret Smith, of Dunston Hall, and Elizabeth Mary Shipton, daughter of a late incumbent. The ancient monuments have almost all disappeared. Fixed against the wall is a stone coffin lid, on which is sculptured in relief a floriated cross of elegant design. There is a much worn inscription in Norman French to the memory of Juliana, wife of Adam Fraunceis, and an indulgence of 40 days to all who should offer up a prayer for her soul. There is no date, but it is believed to belong to the 13th century. One monument to the Barley family remains—an alabaster slab, bearing the full length figures of a man, in plate armour, and his wife, under pointed canopies. It once covered the tomb of Robert Barley, who died in 1467, and Margaret his wife, parents of Robert Barley, the first husband of the famous Bess of Hardwick. The registers date back to 1573. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the gift of the rector of Staveley, and held by the Rev. Cornelius Dyson, M.A. Its gross annual value is £192, with residence, erected by the Duke of Rutland in 1824, and enlarged in 1872.

New schools, with teacher's house, were built in 1872, by subscription, at a cost of £750, exclusive of the site, which was given by the Duke of Rutland. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with a total accommodation for 166 children. It is endowed with £2 14s. yearly, left by Susannah Stephenson in 1752. "Evening Continuation Schools" are also carried on.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel at Commonsides, built by subscription in 1893, at a cost of £408; and there is also a United Methodist Free Church, built in 1867, at a cost of £430. It is in the Whittington circuit.

About three-quarters of a mile south of the village is Bole Hill, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country, including, it is said, 20 parish churches. Montgomery, the poet, who was for some time the editor of the Sheffield Iris, has sung the praises of "Bole Hill Trees." A day and boarding school was conducted here by the late Mr. Edward Straw for a period of 50 years.

Barlow Woodseats Hall, two miles N.W. from the church, was formerly the residence of the Franceys family, one of whom is commemorated by a monument in the church. It is now the property of Mrs. Thorold, of Welham Hall, Retford, and has long been occupied as a farmhouse.

There are in the parish several scattered hamlets, the names of which are given in the directory.

Charities.—Robert Mower, in 1775, left the sum of 20s. yearly for the poor. Poor housekeepers receive £6 1s. 3d. from the bequest of Thomas Stephenson, and £4 7s. from the rent of land, left by Susannah Stephenson. The sum of £6 11s. is received from the Rev. F. Gisborne's Flannel Charity, and £2 15s. 4d. yearly from the bequest of Isaac Tomlinson for deserving poor attending the parish church. There are also two small charities amounting to 21s. yearly, left by John Crashaw and John Bargh.

BRAMPTON.

THIS is an extensive parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale, Chesterfield union, petty sessional division, county court district and deanery, and it gives a name to a division for the election of a county councillor. A portion of the parish, comprising 415 acres, was included in Chesterfield when the boundaries of that borough were extended in 1892. The remaining portion under the new Local Government Act forms an urban parish, to which one guardian has been assigned. The parish extends 5 miles lengthwise and $3\frac{1}{2}$ crosswise, and embraces an area of 7,956 acres; ratable value, £10,133 14s. The population in 1891 was 6,895, an increase of 510 since 1881. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal owner, and the following also own land in the parish:—Sir George Sitwell, Bart., Renishaw Hall, Eckington; Bernard Lucas, Esq., J.P., Hasland Hall, Chesterfield; the Duke of Rutland, Belvoir Castle, Grantham; Alfred Barnes, Esq., J.P., D.L., Ashgate Lodge, Chesterfield; E. Wilson Barnes, Esq., J.P., Teversall Manor, Mansfield; John Wilcockson, Esq., Brampton; Samuel Wilcockson, Esq., Brampton; Thomas Greaves, Esq., Brampton; and J. H. Drabble, Esq., Brampton.

Brown earthenware is extensively made at New Brampton, and there are also collieries and ironworks in the district.

Wade and Branwine were the owners of Brampton in the Confessor's reign. When the Domesday Survey was taken there were three manors in Brantune and Wadecel (Brampton and Wadshelf), two of which belonged to Ascut Musard and one to Walter Deincourt. The two former were united at an early period, and given by Henry II. to Peter de Brampton. Thomas, the son of Ralph de Brampton, took the surname of de Caus about the year 1216. The family were lords of the manor of Caus or Caushall in the township of Brampton until the extinction of the male line in the year 1460. Two of the co-heiresses married Ash and Baguley or Balguy. The descendants of the former were still in possession of one-fifth of the manor in the reign of Elizabeth, but about this time the whole manor became by purchase the property of the Earl of Shrewsbury, who subsequently sold it to William Cavendish, Marquis of Newcastle. It passed successively through heiresses to the families of Holles, Harley, and Bentinck, and was included in an exchange with the Duke of Devonshire in the early part of the present century. The third manor, which had belonged to the Deincourts, passed with Sutton to the Leakes, from whom it was purchased by the Clarkes, of Somersall. The first of the family that settled here was Nicholas Clarke, who died in 1589. Godfrey Clarke, in 1740, purchased Sutton Hall, which thenceforth became his principal seat. Somersall Hall was afterwards the property of Samuel Johnson, Esq., and is now owned and occupied by Thomas Greaves, Esq. Caus Hall, which gave a name to the manor of Brampton, has long disappeared; a farm house now occupies its site, but some of the stones of the old mansion may be seen built into the walls of one of the barns.

The Bullocks had an ancient mansion and estate here in the 17th century. James Bullock, gentleman, was churchwarden of Brampton when the first register was commenced in 1658. His daughter and heiress married Cornelius Jackson, who died in 1675. The estate passed by marriage of the Jackson heiress to Henry Beresford, who died before 1710. Subsequently it changed owners several times, and was purchased, about a century ago, by Mr. Dixon, of Whittington, from whom it has descended to the present owner. The house is now known as Brampton Hall. There is no record of its erection, but the front was remodelled about 250 years ago. The ceiling of the drawing room is similar to that of the ball room at Haddon Hall, and is ornamented in relief, in different panels, with stacks of battle-axes, clusters of strawberries, and snakes. Another room contains a shield of arms displaying a hand bearing a heart in the palm. The arms of Caus were three hearts, and perhaps this shield may have some reference to that family.

The village of Brampton is pleasantly situated about four miles west of Chesterfield. The church is an ancient edifice of stone, rebuilt in the Early English style in 1253, and subsequently restored in the Decorated and Perpendicular periods. It stands on an elevated site north of the village, and consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, porch and tower surmounted by an octagonal spire. Roughly carved on the outer wall are the effigies of St. Peter and St. Paul, to whom the church is dedicated, and at the east end are the incised figures of Christ seated under a canopy, with pierced hands and feet, and the Virgin and Child. These are now partially covered with ivy. Inside the porch, over the entrance door into the church, is a figure, newly cut, representing St. Christopher carrying the Infant Saviour on his shoulder. The church was repaired and hideously deformed in 1825 by the erection of west and north galleries and other barbarous alterations. A thorough restoration was initiated in 1868, when the unsightly galleries were removed and the interior restored to its original appearance, at a cost of £400. In 1880, the old leaden roof of the nave, then very much out of repair, was taken off and replaced by a lighter one of slate. A heating apparatus was put in and other improvements effected in 1884, and the following year the lych gate and church porch were built by Miss Shipton, daughter of the late vicar. The most interesting object within the church is a sepulchral slab fixed against the wall near the baptistry, which is said by tradition to have been discovered when digging a grave in the early part of last century. It belongs to that class in which the figure is represented as within the coffin, portions only being exposed to view. Sunk below the surface of the stone, are shown the head and shoulders of a female, sculptured in bas-relief within a quatrefoil, and at the bottom of the slab are seen through a narrow oblong opening the feet and lower part of the drapery. The inscription, in Lombardic characters, reads as follows:—"Hic jacet Matilda le Caus, orate pro anima ej: Pat: Noster:." Genealogists are not agreed as to the identity of this lady. On a stone slab placed above the monument, October 26th, 1801, it is stated that it perpetuates the memory of Matilda le Caus, one of the family of Sir Thomas le Caus, who, it appears by ancient records, was son of Ralph de Brampton, lord of the manor of Caushall in this township, about the year 1216, in whose family it remained for more than 200 years. There are in the north aisle several monuments to the Clarkes of Somersall, the former position of which was changed in 1821. The east window of three lights was filled with stained glass, in 1881, in memory of John Gorrell Barnes and his wife. A chantry was founded in this church by Hugh Ingram in the 13th century. There are five bells in the tower, one having been added in 1887 in commemoration of the Queen's jubilee.

Brampton was originally a chapelry to Chesterfield, and with that church was appropriated by William Rufus to the deanery of Lincoln. It has long been regarded as a separate parish, and was formally constituted a vicarage in 1867. It is in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Arthur Hardy, B.A. (Camb). The present gross value is £292, derived as follows:—From the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, £177; Queen Anne's Bounty, £6 12s.; present value of tithes, £67 9s.; rent of glebe (20 acres), £20; ecclesiastical charities, £16 6s.; fees, &c., £5.

A new school was erected a few years ago in lieu of the old one, built in 1830. It is now under the management of the school board, who have the premises on a lease. There are two departments, and about 80 children in attendance.

Ashgate, an ancient mansion, one mile east of the village of Brampton, formerly belonged to the Clarkes, and is now the property and residence of Mrs. Barnes. The Chesterfield Union Schools are situated on the Ashgate road. They were erected in 1881, at a cost of £16,000, to accommodate 200 children. The buildings comprise a central block, which includes the superintendent's apartments, office, surgery, and refectory; the workshops, washhouse, and laundry continue in a line to the rear. The west wing contains the boys' school and dormitories, and the girls are located in the east wing. Each wing is connected with the central block by covered corridors. Between the schools and workshops are two playgrounds, and behind the buildings is a field of five acres, where the youngsters can indulge in football, cricket, and other athletic games. A garden of four acres graces the front and east side of the building.

Birley Grange, as the latter part of the name indicates, was monastic land. Cutthorpe is a village and district one and a half miles north by east from Brampton. The old hall, now a farmhouse, was the residence of Ralph Clarke, who died here in 1660. There is another modern mansion styled Cutthorpe Hall, the residence of James Wood, Esq. The Primitive Methodists erected a chapel here in 1837, and enlarged it in 1867 at a cost of upwards of £100, raised by subscription. A school was built by the late John Brown in 1865. This was superseded by the present Board school, erected in 1884. The latter is of brick, and in a pleasing style of architecture. There are 142 children in average attendance. The old school is used for church service on Sundays. A reading room and library was established here by Miss Shipton in 1885, and carried on at her expense until her removal from the district in 1893. It is now managed by a committee, and is well supported by the inhabitants. Hollins is a farm, the property of Mr. Drabble. Hollins Hall, in later years an inn, was pulled down by the grandfather of the present owner in 1826, and the present farmhouse erected on the opposite side of the yard. Over the entrance to one of the cart sheds is a stone from the old hall inscribed "A. T. C. 1626." Adjacent to the house is a chapel built by Mr. Drabble in 1846, and used by members of the United Methodist Free Church. The same body has also a chapel at Pratt Hall. Both are supplied from Chesterfield.

Holy Moorside is an elevated district and large village, forming the southern side of the township. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the sewing cotton manufactory of Messrs. Manlove, in the adjoining township of Walton. The firm erected a school here in 1874, which was transferred to the school board in 1877. There are 156 children in average attendance. The two lower rooms of the building are occupied as a Working Men's Institute, which is well supplied with means for recreation. Holy Moorside is ecclesiastically in the new parish of St. Thomas', and there is a mission room here belonging to that church. The Primitive Methodists have also a small chapel, built in 1888. Linacre, formerly regarded as a subordinate manor, was anciently the property and residence of a family bearing that name. Hugh de Linacre, about the middle of the 13th century, added about 11 acres to the endowment of the chantry in Brampton Church. Robert Linacre, who died in 1512, was seized of Linacre Hall and a manor in Brampton. Twenty descents of this family are described in "Vincent's Derbyshire Pedigrees." Dr. Linacre, the celebrated physician and philologist, who founded the college of physicians, and died in 1524, is said to have belonged to this family. Glover says he was born here;

Hutton assigns the honour to Derby; whilst others claim Canterbury as the place of his birth. The family appears to have become extinct about the year 1600. The hall was the residence of Roger Foljambe in 1526. The house is now occupied by a farmer. The Chesterfield Waterworks Company have two reservoirs at Linacre, constructed in 1855-6. The fishing rights are reserved by the Duke of Devonshire, lord of the manor. Wadshelf, Wadescel in Domesday Book, took its name from Wade, the Saxon owner, who lived in the reign of Edward the Confessor. At the time of the Norman survey the manor belonged to Walter Deincourt, and subsequently it was given by the Musards to Beauchief Abbey. The village is small, and is situated at the south-west extremity of the parish. There is a mission room here. A Wesleyan chapel was erected in 1834, and was thoroughly renovated in 1894. Wigley, a small village half-a-mile north from Wadshelf, was the original home of the Wigleys, who, subsequently in the 15th century, were settled at Wigwell and Middleton. Belmont, a fine old mansion with a tower, surrounded by a park, is the residence of J. E. and W. M. Manlove, Esqrs.; and Hall Cliffe is occupied by Mr. James Potter. The old hall, taken down in 1872, bore the initials and date, T. W., 1683, on the overmantel.

The populous district of Brampton Moor and New Brampton was included in the borough of Chesterfield by the Borough Extension Bill, which received the Royal assent June 28, 1892.

Charities.—Endowments, amounting to £9 8s. yearly, have been left to the school by various persons; but since the adoption of the Free Education Act in 1892, the money accruing from these bequests is in the hands of the bankers awaiting disposal by the Charity Commissioners. The dividends from Sir Gilbert Clarke's bequest, left in 1701, amount to £5 10s. yearly, of which three-eighths is received by the vicar, two-eighths by the poor, and the remainder by the school. A rent-charge of £10, out of land at Freebitch, is divided as follows:—To the minister, £3 19s. 6d.; school, £1 15s.; poor, £4 3s. John Akroyd, in 1705, gave £300, which was invested in land now producing £14 14s. 6d., which is thus distributed:—To the minister, £9 14s. 6d.; poor, £3 10s.; school, £1 10s. The sum of £84 2s. 8d. is received from Foljambe's charity, £6 from Shaw's, 20s. from Hatley's, 20s. from Boote's, 12s. from Andrew's, the interest of £17 from Tomlinson's, and £6 12s. 11d. from Gisborne's.

BRIMINGTON.

Brimington, an ancient chapelry of Chesterfield, was, by an Order of Council (3rd September, 1844), constituted a distinct parish for all civil and ecclesiastical purposes. Its area, according to the Overseers' returns, is 1,373 acres, the ratable value £7,983, and the population in 1891 was 4,034. It is in Scarsdale hundred, Chesterfield petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district and deanery; and gives a name to a county council electoral division. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, ten parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Brimington. The Midland, and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railways pass through the parish, and on the latter is Brimington and Sheepbridge Station, about three quarters of a mile distant from the church; the nearest station on the Midland is Whittington, about one mile distant. J. J. Barrow, Esq., Holmewood, Kent, is lord of the manor and an extensive landowner; the other proprietors are E. S. P. Burnell, Esq., Winkburn Hall, near Southwell; Mr. John Lingard, Brimington; R. F. Mills, Esq., C.C., Tapton Grove, Chesterfield; and Mr. Charles Baker, Barlborough.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Brimington was a berewick of Newbold, then in the hands of the king. For several generations it was held by the owners of the manor of Chesterfield, and then passed successively through the families of Breton, Loudham, and Foljambe. From the latter it was purchased, about the year 1800, by John Dutton, Esq.; and it subsequently passed into the possession of the Barrow family.

The village is situated on the Barlborough road, two miles south from Chesterfield. The old chapel, dedicated to St. Michael, was pulled down (with the exception of the tower) in 1808, and rebuilt at a cost of £850; the tower having been previously rebuilt by Joshua Jebb in 1796. It was again rebuilt and enlarged, and the tower considerably raised, in 1846. There is sitting accommodation for 572, and 365 seats are free and unappropriated in consequence of a grant of £200 from the Incorporated Society for Building Churches. The interior of the roof was repaired in 1892, and the chancel arch re-decorated at a cost of £180, by subscription. The east window—a memorial of the late Mrs. Mills, of Tapton Grove—was inserted in 1894. The living is a rectory, worth £200 yearly (with residence), in the gift of the vicar of Chesterfield, and held by the Rev. E. K. Blumhardt, B.A. There is a Mission Church—a corrugated iron structure—dedicated to St. Mary, on Brimington Common, in charge of the curate, the Rev. L. S. Currey, B.A.

The first Nonconformist chapel was erected by the Wesleyans in 1806. A new school chapel was erected in 1881, at a cost of £660. The structure is also used for lectures, entertainments, &c. The Primitive Methodists have chapels at Brimington, New Brimington, and Brimington Common; and there is also a United Methodist Free Church, built in 1861.

The educational affairs of the parish are in the hands of a School Board of five members, by whom two commodious schools, with houses for the teachers, have been erected, one on Brimington Common, opened January 8th, 1877, and the other at Brimington in 1878. The Burial Board consists of nine members. The cemetery was laid out in 1879. Brimington Hall, an ancient mansion on the south side of the village, was once the property of Major-General Gell, the famous Cromwellian officer. In later times it belonged to Colonel E. T. Coke, from whom it was purchased by the Barrows, who sold it a few years ago to the Staveley Coal & Iron Co., Limited, and is the residence of the company's general manager.

Tapton Grove is a mansion and estate one-and-a-half miles north-east from Chesterfield. The house, which occupies a charming situation on the verge of an eminence, was erected by Avery Jebb, Esq., whose daughter and heiress married Godfrey Meynell. It is now the seat and property of R. F. Mills, Esq.

CHARITIES.—Joshua Jebb, in 1794, left a rent-charge of £5 yearly, payable out of his estate at Tapton, to five poor old women in Tapton and Brimington. About £20 is received from Godfrey Foljambe's bequest, and £7 5s. from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's charity, which is distributed in warm clothing.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank, &c., at Mr. John Hazard's. Letters delivered at 7-0 a.m., week-day and Sunday, and despatched at 6-35 p.m. and 3-35 p.m. on Sunday.

CHESTERFIELD.

Chesterfield is an extensive parish, comprising the townships of Chesterfield, Calow, Hasland, Newbold-with-Dunstan, Tapton, Temple Normanton and Walton, and formerly also included the chapelry of Brimington. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale, and is the head of a petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union, and rural deanery.

CHESTERFIELD is an ancient borough and market town, seated on an eminence at the confluence of the rivulets Hipper and Rother, 24 miles north by east from Derby, 12 north-west from Mansfield, and 12 south-south-east from Sheffield. It is the capital of the Scarsdale hundred, the head of a Parliamentary division, and the second town in the county in magnitude and commercial importance. In 1892, under powers of an Act of Parliament obtained that year, the boundaries of the borough were considerably extended, by which the area was increased from 322 acres to about 1,300 acres. The population of the old borough in 1891 was 13,242, and of the enlarged borough 22,824, and the ratable value raised from £44,902 to £70,179. The extended area includes portions of Brampton, Newbold, and Hasland. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, five urban district guardians have been allotted to the borough.

The town dates its origin from the time of the Romans, as is clearly evidenced by the first part of its name, Chester, the Saxon or old English form of the Latin castrum, a camp, and even in those early times, says Mr. Pendleton, it was "an important mart for lead and wool." Though no remains of Roman masonry have been met with, there is little doubt that the Romans had an encampment at Tapton Hill on the north-east side of the town. The name of this station is not known with certainty, but there are strong reasons for believing it was Lutudarum, which, according to Ravennas, was the station next in order to Derventio, or Little Chester. Several pigs of lead bearing the name of that station have been found in the neighbourhood of Matlock, and Roman coins have been dug up at various times in and around Chesterfield, some of which are described in Ford's "History of Chesterfield."

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Cestrefeld was a berewick or hamlet of Newbold, which then formed part of the demesne of the Crown. Shortly afterwards it was granted to the Peverels, but was resumed by Henry II. when William Peverel the younger poisoned the Earl of Chester. King John in 1204 granted the manor of Chesterfield and the whole wapentake of Scarsdale to William Briwere. After one descent the male line terminated, and the vast estates of the family were divided amongst five co-heiresses; the manors of Chesterfield, Brimington, and Whittington, falling to the lot of Isabel, wife of Baldwin-le-Wake. From the Wakes the manor passed by marriage to Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, and thence to the Hollands, Earls of Kent. On the death of Thomas and Joanna Holland in 1442 without issue, the descent of the manor became much involved by a multiplicity of heirs; their several claims were examined by an inquisition held at Derby, and eventually Chesterfield came into the possession of Richard Neville, Earl of Salisbury, in right of Alice his wife. In the reign of Elizabeth, Margaret, Countess of Salisbury, granted this and other manors to George Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury, in exchange for other lands. From this family it was purchased by William Cavendish, Earl of Newcastle, from whom it descended in the same manner as Bolsover to the Duke of Portland. In 1792 the manor of Chesterfield and the hundred of Scarsdale were exchanged for estates in Nottinghamshire with the Duke of Devonshire, in which family they still remain.

The position held by Chesterfield at the time of the Norman Survey was a subordinate one—a berewick of the superior manor of Newbold—and it was also in all probability ecclesiastically subject to Newbold. Gradually their relative positions changed; Chesterfield assumed superior importance, and in 1204 King John by charter made it a free borough, with a weekly market on Saturday, and a fair of eight days at the festival of the Holy Rood. The charter ordained that the burgesses should have the same privileges which were enjoyed by those of Nottingham; but it does not appear that any members were ever returned to Parliament. The government of the town was vested in an alderman and twelve brethren, and the governing body was thus constituted until 1594, when a charter of incorporation was granted by Queen Elizabeth, whereby the civil power was vested in a body corporate consisting of a mayor, six aldermen, six brethren, and twelve capital burgesses or common council men, assisted by a town clerk, a chamberlain, a master butcher, a master brazier, and other officers. Severe by-laws were framed and rigorously enforced for the protection of local trade. Some of these we quote from Mr. Pendleton's "History of Derbyshire":—"No manner of person or persons, being a foreigner (stranger) or victualler, shall set up any stand or standing upon any markett day, to forestall any shop or shops within the aforesaid towne of Chesterfield, in paine to forfeit for every such offence to the Corporation the sume of 3s. 4d. That no inhabitant within this towne shall suffer any person or persons dwelling forth of the towne, to sell any manner of graine upon any markett day, in any house or chamber within the said towne, to the hindrance of the markett, before such time as proclamation be made for such purpose, or in the markett before the markett bell be rung, in paine to forfeit to the Corporation for every such offence 2s. No inn-holder or alehouse keeper within this town, shall keep or lodge any stranger above the space of one day and one night together, without notice thereof first given to the mayor, in paine to forfeit for every time so offending, to the Corporation, 40s." The iron trade was then as now an important industry in the town, and bells bearing the founders mark of Ralph Heathcote, an eminent bell founder at Chesterfield in the early part of the 16th century, may still be seen in a few Derbyshire churches.

After the passing of the Municipal Reform Act in 1835 the reorganised council consisted of the mayor, four aldermen, and twelve councillors, and on the extension of the borough boundary in 1892 the corporate body was increased to six aldermen and eighteen councillors, and the borough divided into three wards.

Chesterfield possesses but little historic interest. The only momentous event in its local annals, is the battle fought here in the reign of Henry III. When that monarch threw off the restraints which the Magna Charta had imposed on the Crown, the barons, headed by Simon de Montfort, rose in rebellion, in defence of their rights. Robert Ferrers, Earl of Derby, joined the baronial league, and, assembling his followers at his castle of Duffield, where he was joined by Baldwin de Wake, Lord of Chesterfield, he led them over the lower ridges of the Peak district, and at Chesterfield effected a junction with the men of Yorkshire, under Baron D'Ayville. Here he was attacked by the royal troops under Prince Henry, and, after a short and stubbornly contested fight, the Derbyshire men were overpowered, and Earl Ferrers fled to the church and concealed himself amongst the bags of wool that had been deposited there for safety by the traders at the Whit-sun-tide fair. The place of his retreat was known to a woman who, it is said, treacherously betrayed him, and he was sent under an escort to Windsor. The confiscation of his estates followed. Duffield Castle was rased to the ground, and the title and lands passed from the Ferrers family.

In the troublous reign of Henry VI., Thomas Beresford, of Fenny Bentley, raised a troop of horse at Chesterfield for the service of the king; and the tramp of war was heard again in 1643, when the Earl of Newcastle passed twice through Chesterfield with his cavalier troops; and on one of these occasions, he is said to have defeated the parliamentary forces, in the vicinity of the town.

Chesterfield gives the title of earl to the Stanhope family, conferred by Charles I. in 1628, but they possess no property within the parish.

The only interesting object in the town is the church, with its crooked spire. A writer in the "Gentleman's Magazine," in 1774, described Chesterfield as "a large town with nothing worthy of notice but the church, and that only for its ugliness; it is old and built of bad stone, but rendered most disgusting by its wooden spire (covered with lead) being so much warped that I discerned its crookedness at three miles distance." Though this spiral appendage cannot possibly be regarded as a "thing of beauty," it is most undoubtedly a unique feature, and has attracted almost as much curiosity as the famed leaning tower of Pisa. There was no church at Chesterfield when the Domesday Book was compiled, but one must have been erected shortly afterwards, as William II., who died A.D. 1100, gave the church of Chesterfield, together with its chapels, to the dean and chapter of Lincoln. That early Norman edifice was entirely removed, and the present handsome fabric erected, probably in the thirteenth century. It is a spacious cruciform structure, dedicated to St. Mary and All Saints, and comprises chancel, with aisles and chapels on each side, nave, side aisles, north and south transepts, and central tower springing from four arches at the intersection of the cross. The tower is well proportioned, with corner pinnacles, and surmounted by the curiously twisted spire before mentioned, rising to a height of 230 feet. This unique appendage is built of timber covered with lead, and is so constructed that a horizontal section at any part shows an octagonal or eight-pointed star. Several writers of repute have asserted that its crookedness is only apparent, not real—a visual deception, arising from this peculiar construction; but actual measurements taken in 1818, and quoted by the Rev. G. Hall in his "History of Chesterfield," show that the ball on the weathercock leaned towards the south, six feet from the perpendicular of its base. Besides this deviation from the perpendicular, there is an unshapely twist in the spire which adds to its deformity. Various theories have been propounded to account for this eccentricity. It is said by some to have been caused by lightning; legendary lore attributes it to the Evil One; and others regard it as the whim of an architectural wag, but this is most improbable, for no architect would have been allowed to perpetrate such a piece of deformity on any ecclesiastical building. The theory which finds most acceptance, attributes the crookedness to the heat of the sun warping the green timbers, and the consequent shrinkage was increased by the clinging pressure of the lead; and, in support of this argument, it is pointed out that the deflection is on the side most exposed to the sun's heat. "There is no necessity to imagine," says Dr. Cox in his "Notes on the Churches of Derbyshire," "that this subsidence and distortion took place suddenly, still less, as some have supposed, that it only came about of late years; the most reasonable supposition is that it assumed very nearly, if not precisely, its present singularity within two or three years of its erection, but that the displacement went on gradually during that period." The spire is the only piece of incongruity in the edifice; in all other parts "the proportions are justly balanced, and have a symmetrical and harmonious effect."

The edifice is chiefly in the Decorated Gothic style of architecture which prevailed in the first half of the 14th century; but traces of older work—the Early English of the 13th century—may be seen in both transepts, and later Perpendicular work in some of the windows. The church has undergone many restorations which have, unfortunately, not always been carried out in harmony with the original design. The west end was rebuilt in the first half of the 16th century; the chancel was enlarged in 1718; and in 1738 a gallery was erected in the north aisle to correspond with an older one on the opposite side. The north transept was rebuilt in 1769 at an expense of £372, and in 1842-3 the interior of the church was thoroughly restored and reseated with open benches.

The chancel, which is lighted by a handsome stained glass window in the Decorated style, rebuilt in 1842, is separated from the chapel on either side, by two lofty Gothic arches springing from a massive central pillar. The chapel on the south side, known in later years as the Calton chapel, had formerly its altar, as is shown by the piscina niche which still remains. The Foljambe chapel is also on the south side, and two arches with central massive column, divide each chapel from the adjoining transept. The east window of each chapel is a good specimen of Decorated work; that in St. Catherine's chapel is filled with stained glass of gorgeous colouring. The transepts are entered through lofty Gothic arches springing from the four massive clustered pillars that support the tower. The north transept is occupied by a fine organ built by Schnetzler in 1746 at a cost of £500, and behind this is the clerk's vestry. Spanning the two arches of the south transept, is an oaken screen so elaborately and delicately carved, that at a distance the tracery seems as fine as a spider's web. The aisles are separated from the nave by six pointed arches on each side, supported by clustered columns, and are lighted by five large pointed windows of three lights with traceried heads. Running the whole length of each aisle and the west end, are galleries, which will accommodate comfortably 700 persons, and the nave and aisles will seat upwards of 1,000. The nave is lighted by six two-light windows in the clerestory on each side, and the west end is filled by a handsome stained glass window, about 40 feet in height by 20 in width. All the stalls and benches are of oak, neatly moulded and carved, and the pulpit is of the same material, curiously carved, and apparently of considerable antiquity. There is some interesting old woodwork ornamented with the arms of many ancient Derbyshire families, and there are also several curious monuments and monumental inscriptions. The Foljambes were buried in the chapel that bears their name, where some of their tombs still remain; and here also has been preserved, from time immemorial, a huge bone which tradition says is a rib of the famous dun cow slain by Guy, Earl of Warwick. On it, engraved in old English characters, is "Thomas Fletcher," whose family were owners of the neighbouring manor of Walton in the 17th century. There is a peal of ten bells in the tower which took the place of an older peal of eight in 1819, and in addition to the peal there is a small bell which, whatever may have been its original purpose, is now only rung on Shrove Tuesday and is known as the Pancake bell. The disintegrating effects of the winds and weather are painfully apparent in various parts of the edifice where the stones are mouldering away. The registers commence in 1558, and under the date October, 1586, is written "Here began the great plague of Chesterfield," and the pestilence made its appearance again in 1608. The living is a vicarage worth £300 per annum, formerly in the gift of the Dean of Lincoln, now in the patronage of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Hon. and Rev. C. J. Littleton, M.A.

In connection with the church there was formerly a guild dedicated to "Our Blessed Ladye and the Holy Crosse," founded in the reign of Richard I., and endowed with lands and tenements worth £19 yearly, for the maintenance of two or three priests to celebrate Mass and other Divine services. These guilds were societies or fraternities instituted for the protection of trade, the individual rights of the members, and the support of needy brethren. They consisted of employers and employes, and were, in fact, the prototypes of the modern trades unions, differing only in this, that they possessed all the advantages of the latter, without their evils. There were also in the church two chantries dedicated respectively to St. Mary Magdalen and St. Michael; and the guild had its chapel of the Holy Cross.

There were within the town and in the immediate vicinity, other chapels and religious houses, but these were swept away at the Reformation. The Hospital of St. Leonard, which was devoted to the care of lepers, stood near the Rother, on a site which still bears the name of Spittal. The chapel of St. Helen stood on the site of the present grammar school; another, dedicated to St. Thomas, was situated in Holywell Street, and a third was at Lord's Mill Bridge.

The church of All Saints' sufficed for the wants of the town until 1837, when Holy Trinity Church was erected on Newbold Road. This edifice is a neat Gothic structure consisting of a very small chancel, nave, and a western tower. The latter is surmounted by an arcaded parapet with corner pinnacles, and contains a clock and one bell. The site was given by the Duke of Devonshire, and the total cost of erection was £3,700. In 1889 the sum of £1,500 was expended in repairs and improvements. The organ was the gift of Dr. Hart, and cost £250. The chancel is lighted by three handsome stained glass windows, the central one being a memorial of George Stephenson, of railway celebrity, who died at Tapton House in 1846, and lies buried here. The parish comprises parts of Chesterfield, Newbold, and Tapton. The living is a rectory worth £310 a year, with residence, in the gift of three trustees, and held by the Rev. Noel Lake Aspinall, M.A.

Christ Church, a chapel-of-ease to Holy Trinity Church, situated at Stone Gravels, was erected in 1869. It is a small edifice of stone in the Norman style, consisting of chancel and nave, with bell turret. Adjoining is a burial ground. There is also a Mission Room in Albert Street.

The Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Mary of the Annunciation, is a substantial stone edifice in the Gothic style, and considerably enlarged about 20 years ago, at a cost of £5,000. The tower remains incomplete through lack of funds. The interior comprises sanctuary, nave, and north and south aisles, each divided from the nave by six arches. A noble Gothic arch forms the entrance to the sanctuary, where stands the high altar, flanked on either side by statues of the Blessed Virgin and St. Joseph. The altar with its high pinnacled tabernacle is plain but graceful; and behind it is a beautiful pictorial window, inscribed "To the glory of God. W. P. Arkwright, of Sutton Scarsdale, and Agnes Mary, his wife, 1884. Pray for us." On the south side of the high altar is the Lady altar, ornamented with curiously carved figures on oak panels. A statue of our Saviour stands at the right hand side of the chancel arch. This is an exquisite piece of sculpture in marble and cost £120; at the opposite side is the pulpit of marble and gritstone, elaborately carved. At the east end of the south aisle is the altar of St. Joseph, and above it is a stained glass window displaying St. George and St. Augustine, a memorial of Anthony and Mary Payton. Along the north wall are St. Ignatius, the Blessed Virgin, and the Pieta. The gallery at the west end contains a handsome organ, built by Willis, of London, at a cost of £1,200, and presented to the church by W. P. Arkwright, Esq. Adjoining the church is the presbytery, erected in 1866. The mission is under the care of the Jesuit Fathers, the Revs. Joseph Jackson and Edmund Von Wurtzburg.

All the prominent forms of dissent are represented in the town. The Baptists have a chapel in Brewery Street—a plain brick building with school on the ground floor. There is accommodation for 370. The Friends' Meeting House, in Saltergate, dates from 1696, two years after the death of George Fox, the founder of the sect. The building was enlarged and faced with brick in 1770, and again enlarged in 1800. Adjoining is a small burial ground, but both here and in the chapel rigid plainness is the leading characteristic. The Congregational Chapel, in Soresby Street, was built by the Independents in 1823, and enlarged in 1834 and 1860. It is a substantial edifice of stone, but without any pretension to architectural beauty. The ground floor is seated for 300 persons, and the gallery, which is carried round three sides, provides 250 additional seats. The chapel is adorned by a handsome organ erected by Brindley & Foster, of Sheffield, at a cost of £900. A mural tablet on the south wall is inscribed, "Chas. Shaw's charity, £100, 4% preference stock, Midland Railway, 1881. Dividends to be given to four poor people of this congregation half yearly. Dryhurst, Tapton, 1885." The adjoining burial ground is now closed. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, in Holywell Street, a brick building in the Gothic style, was erected in 1881 to supersede an older one in Beetwell Street. A stone removed from the latter perpetuates the memory of Jeremiah Gilbert, who was the pioneer of Primitive Methodism in Chesterfield and neighbourhood. Attached to the chapel is a well-lighted and furnished Sunday school. Another chapel was erected at Stone Gravels in 1890, at a cost of £780, as a memorial of the Rev. George Booth, who for 21 years preached the Gospel in this and other circuits of the Chesterfield Primitive Methodist Connexion. The United Methodist Free Church, Marsden Street, is a handsome brick building in the Norman style, built in 1869, at a cost, including purchase of site, of £3,300. The interior is elegantly decorated and furnished, all the woodwork being pitchpine. The ground floor will seat 450, and about 400 more can be accommodated in the gallery, which is carried round the whole building. An organ, by Young & Son, of Manchester, was added in 1882, at a cost of £325. Adjoining, is the Sunday school with caretaker's house, built in 1874, at a cost of £1,400. The Wesleyan Methodists erected their first chapel in Saltergate about the end of last century, and enlarged it in 1822. This chapel was taken down and the present one erected on its site in 1869-70. It is a handsome edifice of brick with a stone front in the Grecian style. The interior is elegantly fitted up, all the woodwork being of pitchpine. The total cost was upwards of £3,000. The Unitarian Chapel, in Saltergate, built in 1694, was the first dissenting place of worship in the town, and it has apparently undergone little change for many years. It was built by Cornelius Clarke, Esq., of Norton, at an expense of £230. Two of the windows were filled with stained glass in 1892, in memory of Lewis Shaw and Anne his wife; and there are memorial tablets on the walls to the Croft family, the Rev. Thomas Astley, and Robert and Elizabeth Malkin. Adjoining the chapel is a burial ground.

SCHOOLS.—The Grammar School was founded by the Corporation and Godfrey Foljambe in 1594, under powers of the Charter of Queen Elizabeth. The school premises were rebuilt in 1710 and again in 1846. The endowment amounts to upwards of £700 per annum. The school is conducted under a new scheme drawn up by the Charity Commissioners. Twenty boys are educated free, and ten county council scholarships have been allotted to the school. The National Schools, Soresby Street, were erected in 1814, and are supported by Government grant and voluntary subscriptions. There are three departments, with an average attendance of 170 boys, 110 girls, and 80 infants. Christ Church Schools, built at the same time as the church, consist of two departments, mixed and infants, with an average attendance of 178. The Victoria National Schools, in Vicar Lane, were built in commemoration of the Queen's visit in 1844. They are appropriated to girls and infants, and have an average attendance of 129. The Catholic Schools form a substantial block of buildings adjoining the church. There are three departments having an average attendance of 106 boys, 92 girls, and 96 infants.

A School Board was formed in January, 1871, and excellent school buildings have been erected in Hipper Street for the accommodation of 626 children, at a cost of £5,046; St. Helen's Street School, with accommodation for 681 children, cost £5,312; Durant Road School, accommodating 268 children, cost £1,209; and Brampton School, with accommodation for 784 children, cost £5,898. The average attendance at the four schools for the year ended February 28th, 1894, was 2,341; the School Board rate was 9½d. in the pound, and the cost of each child from the rates £1 2s. 6½d.

In 1770 an Act of Parliament was obtained for the construction of the Chesterfield Canal, by which a waterway to the Trent was obtained. The line was surveyed by the celebrated James Brindley, the engineer of the Bridgewater and other canals. The total length is 46 miles, and the cost of the undertaking was close upon £160,000. This canal provided a cheap means of transit for the mineral and manufactured productions of the neighbourhood, and a considerable increase of trade was the result. The opening of the Midland Railway in 1840 gave a further impetus to local industries, the population rapidly increased, new streets were built, and several improvements effected. The Municipal Hall, in Beetwell Street, was erected by the Corporation in 1847, and ten years later a commodious Market Hall was built by a private company, at a cost of about £8,000, and in 1872 the rights of the Market Company were purchased by the Corporation.

To commemorate the residence amongst them of George Stephenson, the great engineer and father of the railway system, who spent the latter years of his life at Tapton House, where he died in 1848, a Memorial Hall was erected in 1877-9, at a cost of £13,000, of which the sum of £7,500 was raised by public subscription, and the remainder by loans. These loans have been repaid by the Corporation, to whom the hall now belongs. The building is in the Gothic style, and is not only ornamental in its design, but useful in its purpose, for here, at fees little more than nominal, the various arts and sciences are most efficiently taught, and here also is located the Free Library. The Public Hall is let for entertainments, concerts, balls, &c. This room measures 69 feet by 47 feet, and has a gallery that will seat 330 persons; the Lecture Hall measures 40 feet by 33 feet; the Free Library 39 feet by 20 feet. There are several other spacious rooms.

To honour the Queen's Jubilee it was decided to provide a public recreation ground, to be called Queen's Park. A plot of land, containing 22 acres, was purchased by public subscription, and vested in the Corporation, by whom it has been very tastefully laid out. A serpentine lake, three acres in extent, with its miniature island and rustic bridges, adds additional charms. Football and cricket grounds have been set out, and there are also a bicycle track and a gymnasium.

Notwithstanding these several improvements there is nothing attractive about the appearance of the town. The streets are narrow and vie with the famous steeple in their crookedness. The buildings which edge each side are very irregular, and their dinginess presents the aspect of age, but the picturesqueness of 17th and 18th century architecture is scarcely anywhere to be seen. The most prominent object of ugliness, not even excepting the crooked spire, is the Shambles, which Mr. Pendleton thus describes in his "Old and New Chesterfield": "The extraordinary jumble of peculiar property at the east end of the Market Place has, I believe, no equal in England—there is such method in its inconvenience, and such a premeditated attempt to make people uncomfortable in its narrow alleys and singular dwellings. It is a museum of dark-roomed taverns, with swinging signs; and of curious butchers' shops with gigantic meat-boards and thick, sloping shutters, and heavy awnings, that almost shut out the daylight from the pavement they overshadow in their efforts to shake hands with each other. It is a collection of many storied houses; of antique cottages, which have been thrust ignominiously into whimsical corners; of stone steps that lead into the oddest places, and of interesting oak carvings that carry the mind back to the time when the Knights Templars marched along its darkened ways, in their white habits, adorned with the red cross."

The Water Works and Gas Light Company was incorporated in 1825, with a capital of £8,000, and the gas works were erected the following year. To meet the increased consumption extensive new premises have been built. The nominal capital of the company is now £300,000, of which upwards of one-half has been expended. The electric light was substituted for gas in 1883 as the illuminant of the streets, but was discontinued the following year. Extensive sewage works have been erected and a complete system of drainage carried out by the Corporation at a cost of £25,000.

The Chesterfield Union Workhouse is a commodious building on the Newbold road, erected in 1840 at a cost of £10,000. There is accommodation for 320 paupers, and 204 children can be accommodated in the schools. The union embraces 138 square miles, with a population of 108,888, and includes the following parishes:—Ashover, Barlow, Bolsover, Brackenfield, Brampton, Brimington, Calow, Chesterfield, Clay Lane, Coal Aston, Dronfield, Eckington, Hasland, Heath, Holmesfield, Killamarsh, Morton, Newbold and Dunston, North Wingfield, Pilsley, Shirland and Higham, Staveley, Stretton, Sutton-cum-Duckmanton, Tapton, Temple Normanton, Tupton, Unstone, Walton, Westington, Whittington, Wingerworth, Woodthorpe.

The populous district of Brampton Moor and New Brampton was included in the borough by the Borough Extension Bill, which received the Royal Assent June 28th, 1892. A church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was erected at New Brampton in 1830, at a cost of £2,930, and in 1891 it was enlarged and re-pewed at an expense of about £2,000. The living is a rectory worth £245, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. E. S. Shuttleworth, M.A. The parish includes New Brampton, Walton, Holymoorside, and part of Newbold. The Congregationalists and Primitive Methodists have chapels here on Chatsworth road, and the latter sect has also a place of worship at Brampton Moor.

Two excellent newspapers cater for the reading public, "The Derbyshire Courier," established in 1828, which claims to be the oldest newspaper in Derbyshire outside the county town, and "The Derbyshire Times," in 1854. The latter has had an eventful history, and was the first newspaper in the county to reduce the price to one penny. It was established by Mr. F. A. Hatton, father of the celebrated and popular novelist, Mr. Joseph Hatton, whose earliest experience of newspaper work was gained here. After the death of Mr. Hatton it was carried on by the widow and children with considerable difficulty. In 1862, it passed into the hands of Mr. E. B. Palmer, and in 1866 the late Mr. Wilfred Edmunds joined Mr. Palmer as partner and editor. This gentleman infused new life into the paper and enlarged it from six columns to seven columns per page. Several new and interesting features were introduced, notably, a series of articles on the churches of Derbyshire, by Dr. Cox, and sketches by "Strephon," Mr. Edward Bradbury. After the death of Mr. Palmer, Mr. Edmunds became sole proprietor, and conducted the paper with unwonted ability till his death in 1889. It is now carried on by the widow and sons, the eldest of whom is editor and manager. In consequence of the increasing circulation new plant was put down in 1890, and the same year the paper was enlarged by $7\frac{1}{2}$ columns, in 1892 a further enlargement of eight columns took place, and the "Times," originally a small four page sheet of 24 columns, now consists of eight pages and 64 long columns. The circulation has also increased in like ratio, and 15,000 copies are issued weekly. The premises have been very considerably enlarged, the most improved machinery has been laid down, and the works are now amongst the most complete in the country.

CHESTERFIELD OUT-TOWNSHIPS.

CALOW township contains 1,281 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Earl Manvers, who is also lord of the manor; Messrs. Clarke and Mr. Hopkinson have also small estates here. The rateable value is £2,534, and the population in 1891 was 609. The soil is various, blue and yellow clay, and in some places very stony. Both coal and iron were formerly worked in the township, and for some time there was a blast furnace in operation. Coal was also supplied to the furnaces at Duckmanton. There is reason to believe that sufficient coal remains to leave a margin of profit in working it; and the experiment is now under trial, by John Blair & Sons, of Brampton, at Allpits colliery.

The village of Calow is situated on the Clowne road, two miles east from Chesterfield. A church, dedicated to St. Peter, was erected here in 1865. It consists of nave, chancel, with a bell cot and tower at the west end surmounted by a spire. The tower and spire, from the string course upwards, were completed in 1887, and three bells procured at an expense of £600, which was defrayed by the late Mrs. Walker, of Calow House. The same lady subsequently inserted a stained glass window in memory of her niece, Helen Mona Charlton. Surrounding the church is a burial ground, which is restricted to residents in the township. The Rev. E. W. W. Templeton is curate-in-charge. The Congregationalists and Primitive Methodists have also chapels in the village; to that of the former is attached a small cemetery. The national school, built in 1855 and enlarged in 1878, has accommodation for 126 children, and an average attendance of 121.

Adjoining the high road is Cavalry Field, where the yeomanry cavalry of the Chesterfield district used to train. The view from this field is extensive, and includes many places of interest, Bolsover Castle, Hardwick Hall, Crich Stand, Clay Cross Church, and Wingerworth Hall.

WALTON is a township and civil parish, extending about four miles south-westerly from Chesterfield. It embraces 2,388 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke, Wingerworth Hall, and had in 1891 a population of 1,444, most of whom are employed in the collieries and potteries. The parish is under the jurisdiction of an Urban Council of twelve members, which has taken the place of the Local Board.

The earliest name connected with Walton is that of Hundulph, who held the manor under Edward the Confessor. Soon after the Norman Conquest it was in the possession of the ancient family of Breton. They had a chapel in the manor, and Sir Roger le Breton is said to have obtained a license for a chantry in his chapel of Walton in the reign of Henry III. The family was seated here for several generations, when the direct male line terminated, and Isabel, the heiress, conveyed the estate in marriage to Sir John Loudham. Their daughter and heiress married a Foljambe about the time of Richard II., and Walton remained in the possession of that family till sold by Sir Francis Foljambe, sometime before his death in 1640, to Sir Arthur Ingram. The next owners were the Fletchers, who were succeeded by the Jenkinsons. William Woodyears, who had married the widow of Sir Paul Jenkinson, sold it in 1813, and subsequently it came into the possession of the Hunlokes, of Wingerworth. The hall, "wherein great contynewall housekeeping was mayntayned before in Mr. Foljambe's tyme," is now a farmstead, and every vestige of the chapel has disappeared. In matters ecclesiastical, Walton is under St. Thomas's, New Brampton, and Divine service is held here in a Mission Room.

TAPTON is a small township, embracing 636 acres of land, adjoining the borough of Chesterfield on the N.-E. side. The rateable value is £5,953, and the number of inhabitants 227. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Tapton was one of the six berewicks or hamlets of the manor of Newbold, then in the possession of the Crown. Subsequently Tapton was held under the Briweres by the Brimingtons, from whom it passed, about the reign of Edward III., to the Stuffins of Shirbrooke. At a later period it was owned by the Durants, and passed thence by an heiress to the Alsops. The latter family in 1673 sold the manor to George Taylor, Esq., whose heir, Sir Charles Scrimshaw, sold the estate to Thomas Gladwin, Esq. In 1746 it was purchased by Dr. Adam Slater, of Chesterfield, whose descendants owned it for three or four generations. It is now the property of Samuel Burkitt, Esq., J.P. The Manor House is an Elizabethan structure, somewhat modernised in recent years, but still retaining the old oak panelling in the rooms on the ground floor. The Milnes, family ancestors of Lord Houghton, settled at Tapton Hall early in the 17th century. Tapton House was the residence of George Stephenson, the eminent engineer, in the latter years of his life. He is a luminous example of innate genius and self culture. The father of "Railways" was born at Wylam, in Northumberland, in 1781, and, as all the world knows, his early days were clouded in poverty. At 14 years of age he gave up herding cows for a fireman's place under his father. When 17 years old he was an engineman at a neighbouring colliery; and here he began to study the mechanism of the engine, and soon acquired a thorough knowledge of its construction. Unable to read or write he applied himself assiduously at a night school, and quickly learned the rudiments of elementary education. When employed as a brakesman at Killingworth Pit in 1810 his great powers as an engineer were first brought into notice. The Newcomen pumping-engine being unable to keep the water down, and having baffled the skill of the best local engineers, George said "he thought he could alter it, and in a week's time allow the men to go to the bottom." He tried, succeeded admirably, and was forthwith appointed engine-wright, at a salary of £100 a year. He next turned his attention to the production of a locomotive engine, and, being patronised by Lord Ravensworth, he produced his first engine. In 1815 he constructed a greatly improved one; he also put down a new and more efficient railroad at Killingworth, and experiments were made that justified him in preaching a new crusade throughout England. Thoroughly convinced of the superiority of the new system of travelling over the old "coach and horses," the projector of railways went about his work in no lukewarm fashion. Before Committees of both Houses of Parliament he was equally imperturbable; and once when under a rather rough cross-examination, being asked what would happen if a cow got on the line he coolly replied in his rich Doric, "I wadn't like to be the coo." It would be difficult to say what part of Stephenson's character was most admirable, his wonderful patience under opposition, or his headlong impetuosity when free from restraints. As engineer of the Stockton and Darlington Railway, he projected the Liverpool and Manchester line. Some of the engineering difficulties in this undertaking will bear favourable comparison with anything of modern date. Nor did Stephenson confine his attention to railways alone. Brought up amongst miners, he was well aware of the dangers attending that hazardous employment. Singularly enough another scientific man was devoting his attention to this subject at the same time. They both succeeded in producing, simultaneously, a safety lamp that would prevent, to a great extent, explosions in mines. Although there was much in common between the two lamps, there was quite sufficient difference to account for the double appearance of a safety lamp. That brought out by Stephenson is still known in his native county as the "Geordy," and is a great favourite with the miners. In the fulness of years and honours the great engineer died at Tapton House, in 1848, and was buried in Trinity Church, Chesterfield, where a handsome Memorial Hall will keep his memory green for ages to come.

CLAY CROSS.

Clay Cross or Clay Lane, formerly a township in the parish of North Wingfield, is now for all civil and ecclesiastical purposes independent. The area of the civil parish is 1,292 acres, ratable value £15,848, and the population in 1891 was 7,143. The boundaries of the ecclesiastical parish are not coincident with those of the civil parish, and embrace 3,926 acres, with a population of 6,977. The Clay Cross Coal and Iron Co. and W. Gladwyn Turbutt are the principal landowners. The parish is in Scarsdale hundred; petty sessional division of Alfreton; union, county court district and deanery of Chesterfield.

Clay Cross lies within the great midland coalfield, with its wealth of iron ore, and to this circumstance the place owes its prosperity. At the commencement of the present century, Clay Lane was a purely agricultural district with houses thinly scattered over it, now it is a busy hive of industry. The coal and iron are extensively worked by the Clay Cross Coal and Iron Co., who employ upwards of 1,500 men and boys.

The village is situated one mile south-west from North Wingfield, and about the same distance from Clay Cross station on the Midland railway. A church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, was erected in 1851 at a cost of £2,500, towards which the Clay Cross Company contributed £600 and also gave the site. It is in the Early English style, and comprises chancel, nave, side aisles, south-western porch, and a western tower surmounted by an octagonal spire. The tower contains a peal of six bells. The Aisle arcades are six bays in length, and rest on five massive columns. Several of the windows are filled with stained glass, beneath one of which is inscribed—"In memory of Wm. Howe, who perfected the link motion for locomotives, and was for 32 years engineer to the Clay Cross Co. He died on the 16th January, 1879. This window was placed here by his friends." The living is a vicarage worth £290, with residence, in the gift of the Rector of North Wingfield, and held by the Rev. H. S. Oldham, A.K.C., since 1888. For the better convenience of the parishioners, mission churches have been erected at Handley and Danesmoor.

The spiritual needs of those that do not belong to the Established Church are also well supplied. The Wesleyans have had a chapel here since 1848. The New Connexion Chapel dates from the same year. The United Methodist Free Church was built in 1887, at a cost of £3,400. This is a handsome stone edifice, in the Gothic style, capable of seating 400 persons. The Catholics established a mission here in 1862, and built their present church in 1882 at a cost £1,000. It is a neat structure of brick, with stone facings, in the Gothic style, and comprises chancel, nave, porch, and bell turret. The altar, chaste and unostentatious, stands between the statues of St. Patrick and St. Brigid, to whom the church is dedicated. On either side of the chancel arch, stand the statues of St. Joseph and the Sacred Heart. The Lady chapel forms a transept on the north side of the nave, from which it is separated by two fine Gothic arches, springing from a central column with foliated capital. The stations of the Cross are worthy of attention. The figures stand out in high relief and are remarkably life-like in their pose. The Rev. D. W. Meenagh is the priest-in-charge, through whose indefatigable exertions both the church and the adjoining presbytery were built.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected in 1848, at a cost of £700, and the Baptist Chapel in 1867, at an expense of £500. Besides these there is a Gospel Mission Hall, which is not connected with any particular denomination.

The National Schools were built in 1853, at a cost of £400, and two years later the Clay Cross Company erected a handsome block of buildings, comprising a public hall and schools, at a cost of over £3,000. A School Board of seven members was formed in 1878, and commodious schools are in course of erection to replace the temporary ones now in use. There are four departments, a junior (mixed), girls' senior, boys' senior, and a higher grade. The average attendance in the four departments is about 820.

The village is under the jurisdiction of an Urban District Council (late Local Board), and is lighted with gas from the Clay Cross Company's works. A market hall was erected by a company of shareholders, in 1869, at a cost of £400; and ten years later a commodious lecture hall was built at a cost of £1,000.

Post, Money Order, Savings, Telegraph, Insurance, and Annuity Office, High street; post mistress, Miss Maria Edge. Letters, via Chesterfield, arrive at 6-40 a.m. and 4-15 p.m., and are despatched at 10-40 a.m., 6-25 and 8-0 p.m. Wall Letter Boxes—Egston, cleared 10-15 a.m. and 5-50 p.m.; South End, cleared 9-45 a.m. and 6-0 p.m. only; Clay Lane, cleared 5-30 p.m., week days only.

HASLAND.

THIS is a parish and large village two miles S.E. from Chesterfield, containing 2,065 acres of land and 5,817 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in the collieries. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union, and deanery of Chesterfield; and gives name to a division for the election of a member of the county council. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, it has a parish council of ten members, and it elects one member of the rural district council. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, was erected in 1850, at a cost of £900, and it was subsequently enlarged by the addition of a north aisle at a further cost of £600. The living was constituted a rectory in 1867, net value £260, in the gift of the Vicar of Chesterfield, and held by the Rev. W. Barnes, who is also Rural Dean. The National School, at Grassmoor, was built in 1857, by Archdeacon Hill, at a cost of £300, and eight years later the school at Hasland was erected. A school board of five members was formed a few years ago, and commodious schools erected in Derby Lane. The Primitive Methodists have chapels at Hasland and Grassmoor; there is also a Gospel Mission Chapel at the latter place.

Hasland was included in the extensive grant of land which King John made to William Briwere, and it subsequently passed by an heiress to Ralph de Midleham. A younger branch of the Leakes was for many generations settled at Hasland Old hall.

At Spital, in this parish, formerly stood the leper hospital of St. Leonard, noticed under Chesterfield.

Grassmoor is a scattered hamlet extending from one to two miles.

HEATH.

This is a small parish and township embracing 1,613 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Devonshire (who is lord of the manor), the Earl of Manvers, and the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke. The total ratable value is £2,700, and the population in 1891 was 403. A branch of the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway, opened January 2, 1892, passes through the township, and a station called Heath Junction has been erected a little less than a mile from the village. A seam of hard coal underlies the parish, and has been wrought by the Hardwick Colliery Company since 1870. The parish is located in Scarsdale hundred; Chesterfield union, rural district, petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery; and gives name to a division for the election of a county councillor. Under the new Local Government Act five parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Heath.

The manor of Heath, otherwise Lowne or Lund (its original name), was given by Robert de Ferrers to the monks of Gerendon in Leicestershire, by whom it was held till the Reformation, when it was probably granted to the Earl of Shrewsbury, fourth husband of Bess of Hardwicke, whose second husband was Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the Duke of Devonshire, the present owner. Lowne and Heath are mentioned as distinct places in the reign of Elizabeth, but the former has disappeared or lost its identity in the more modern village of Heath.

This village is situated on the Chesterfield and Mansfield road, four and a half miles south-east from the former, and seven north-west from the latter. The church of Lound is mentioned in 1162, when it was appropriated to the Abbey of Croxton, in Leicestershire; and the rectory remained in the possession of that monastery till the Reformation. Queen Mary, in the first year of her reign, says Dr. Pegge, gave the advowson to the burgesses of Derby; but if they ever possessed it, it must have been for a very short time, as the Cavendish family have presented to the living for 300 years, or very nearly. The old church, which stood a quarter of a mile from the village, was taken down, with the exception of the porch, in 1853, and the present edifice erected on a more convenient site, at a cost of £1,800, of which £700, together with the site, was given by the Duke of Devonshire. It is a handsome structure, dedicated to All Saints, and consists of chancel, nave, and western tower with spire, containing five bells, three of which were in the old church. It has been finely restored by Mr. W. Butterfield, architect, the whole expense being defrayed by the patron. The old churchyard is still used, a small mortuary chapel having been built out of the materials of the old church, and in the walls are preserved some curiously incised slabs of stone crucifixes of very ancient date. The living is a vicarage, valued in the King's Book at £4 18s. 9d., now worth £174, and held by the Rev. Frederick Brodhurst, M.A., Cambridge, whose curate is the Rev. J. F. Alexander. The living of Ault Hucknall is held in conjunction with Heath.

A school was founded here in 1687. The present premises were erected in 1821, and greatly enlarged and improved in 1868. A classroom was added in 1880. The school is attended by about 80 children, and is liberally supported by his Grace the Duke of Devonshire.

About a mile from the village is Owlcotes, a farm in the occupation of Mr. William Whetton. Here stood one of the three stately mansions erected by the Countess of Shrewsbury, who was known in her time as Bess of Hardwick. The mansion and estate passed by the marriage of Frances Cavendish, her daughter, to Sir H. Pierrepont, ancestor of Lord Manvers, the present owner. Francis Pierrepont, Esq., who died in 1707, was the last of that branch of the family; and it is probable that the house was taken down after his death.

Doe Lea Cottages is a small colliery village, partly in this parish and partly in Ault Hucknall. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, built in 1892.

Heath is one of the parishes benefitted by the Flannel Charity, left by the Rev. Francis Gisborne. The sum of £5 10s. is received yearly, and is distributed in warm clothing amongst poor women.

LANGWITH BASSETT,

Or UPPER LANGWITH, is a parish, township, and village on the border of Nottinghamshire, containing 1,463 acres, including 261 acres of woodland. The ratable value is £2,566, and the population in 1891 was 274. The Midland Railway passes through the parish, and the new East-to-West line now in course of construction also intersects it. The Duke of Devonshire, Earl Bathurst, and Messrs. W. & S. Burkitt, of Chesterfield, are the principal landowners. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Heath, petty sessional division of Chesterfield, union and county court district of Mansfield, rural district of Blackwell, and deanery of Staveley. One rural district councillor has been assigned to Langwith.

Langwith is not one of the Domesday manors. The earliest mention of the place is in the reign of Henry II., when Ralph Deincourt gave the advowson of the church to the newly-founded priory of Thurgarton, in Nottinghamshire. In the fourteenth century the manor belonged to the Bassetts, and that name was added to Langwith to distinguish it from another Langwith, in Nottinghamshire. It subsequently passed by marriage to the Greys of Codnor, and was conveyed by Lord Grey to the Vavasours in 1493. The Hardwicks were the next owners, and, through the heiress of that family, it passed to Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the Duke of Devonshire.

The village, small and scattered, stands near the border of the county, six miles south-by-west from Mansfield, and about one mile from the station of its own name, on the Mansfield and Retford branch of the Midland railway. The church is an ancient structure, dating from Norman times, but was considerably restored and enlarged in 1878, under the direction of Norman Shaw, Esq., architect, London. The west gallery was removed, the tower taken down, and the nave lengthened one bay in that direction. The chancel was also extended and widened, and an organ chamber and vestry added. A bell turret was substituted for the tower, and contains two bells. The interior was entirely re-seated and re-furnished. In the churchyard is a coffin-shaped slab, formerly in the south wall of the chancel, bearing an incised cross, chalice, and book. The church was re-consecrated on the 30th of September, 1878, and the dedication changed from St. Helen to Holy Cross. The living is a rectory, net value £183, derived from tithe rent-charge and 40 acres of glebe, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held (in conjunction with Scarcliffe) by the Rev. E. H. Mullins.

The school is the property of, and supported by, the Duke of Devonshire. It is appropriated to infants; the older children attend Scarcliffe. Near the railway station are the large malt-kilns of Messrs. Burkitt, erected about 20 years ago.

CHARITIES.—The poor partake in the Devonshire Charities, left for the benefit of Chatsworth, Edensor, Hardwick, Heath, Stainsby, Harstoft, Astwith, Rowthorn, Langwith, Houghton, Pentrich, Peak Forest, Shottle, and Postern. Kilthe Vaughan left £3 yearly for clothing for the poor of Langwith, to be distributed on the 21st of September.

NEWBOLD AND DUNSTAN

Form a civil parish, containing 2,996 acres of land, and 6,877 inhabitants. Its ratable value is £17,211. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and owner of a considerable portion of land. The other large landowners are the Exors. of W. B. Smith Milnes, late of Dunstan Hall; J. C. Bromehead, barrister-at-law; Exors. of H. F. Barker; Exors. of Godfrey Booker; Exors. of Mrs. Broadhurst; Exors. of John Brown; Exors. of E. W. Fox; Mrs. Hardwick, and Exors. of Mrs. Lucas. It includes part of Whittington Moor, and until recently also Stone-gravels, now in the borough of Chesterfield. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division, county court district and poor-law union of Chesterfield; deanery of Dronfield; and gives name to a division for the election of a county councillor. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, the old Local Board has given place to an Urban District Council of nine members, and the parish also returns two guardians.

The township lies within the southern extension of the Great Midland coal-field, and is also equally rich in ironstone. Both the coal and the ironstone are worked by the Sheepbridge Coal and Iron Company, Limited, who have here eight puddling furnaces and two rolling mills. The manufacture of stoneware is also extensively carried on here by Messrs. Pearson & Co. and S. M. Lancaster. The business of the former firm was established upwards of a century ago, and gives employment to over 500 hands. Messrs. Pearson & Co. are also proprietors of Highfield Colliery.

When the Norman Survey was taken the manor of Newbold formed part of the demesne of the Crown. Its importance at that time may be inferred from its extent, for it included the berewicks or hamlets of Chesterfield, Boythorpe, Brimington, Eckington, Tipton, and Whittington. It passed out of the royal possession in the reign of John, who gave it with several other manors to William Briwere. It afterwards passed by the marriage of a co-heiress to Baldwin Wake, whose descendant gave it to the monks of Welbeck. The Abbot of Beauchief also held some lands in Newbold at the time of the dissolution of religious houses, but it is not known how they came into his possession. Henry VIII. granted Newbold to Sir William West, whose son Edmund sold it in 1570 to Anthony and Gervase Eyre. This family is one of the numerous offshoots from the Eyres of Hope, but unlike many of the other branches, it has maintained through all the days of persecution, an unwavering attachment to the old religion. The manor and estate passed into other hands about sixty years ago, but the family still retains possession of the old chapel. This edifice bears unmistakable signs of great antiquity, and was in all probability the mother church of Chesterfield. It is very plain and of small dimensions, 36 feet by 15 feet. There is no record of a church at Newbold in Domesday Book, but this old chapel must have been erected soon after the completion of that interesting document, as the carved semi-circular tympanum over one of the small entrances belongs undoubtedly to the Norman period. The windows belong to the 14th century. The sacred edifice has long been in a dilapidated condition, and was for sometime used as a cowhouse. It stands in a field near the village, and has recently been surrounded with a railing, and a tall stone cross erected in the enclosed ground. It is used as a burial place by the Eyres; and on the walls are sixteen mural tablets to various members of the family. The Eyres maintained the Catholic worship here in the days when their religion was proscribed, and mass is still said on the anniversaries of those members whose remains are here deposited. In one of those outbursts of religious intolerance which characterised the reign of William III., a Protestant mob attacked the chapel, broke the monuments and tombstones and almost demolished the building.

The village of Newbold, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W. from Chesterfield, is pleasantly situated on an eminence, which commands extensive views of the well-wooded country around. The parish church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is situated at Littlemoor. It is a small stone building, erected in 1857, at a cost of about £1,000. The south porch is surmounted by an octagonal spire containing one bell. The style is Gothic, but the fabric does not possess any architectural pretensions. The east window is filled with richly stained glass, representing amongst other subjects the Crucifixion; and beneath this, is an old oak reredos bearing the date 1698. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £280, with residence, in the gift of the Vicar of Chesterfield, and held by the Rev. Llewellyn Cutlack, B.A.

The Wesleyans have a chapel at Littlemoor, and another at Newbold Moor. At the latter place there is a capacious Congregational Church, built in 1877, at a cost of £1,500; and the Primitive Methodists have a small chapel at Newbold, erected in 1890, at a cost of £450.

The earliest provision for educational purposes was made by Geo. Milnes, Esq., who, in 1784, divided 2 acres 3 roods of land, to which the lord of the manor added 7 acres 2 roods of waste, on which a school with master's residence was built in 1805. New school premises were erected in 1860, capable of accommodating 240 children. A School Board of seven members was formed about ten years ago, and a school for girls and infants erected. The accommodation provided is now fully occupied, and a new school is in course of erection.

Elizabeth Tomlinson, in 1779, divided three cottages and a croft as almshouses for three poor women, and she left the sum of £400 for the reparation of the property and the maintenance of the inmates.

Dunstan is a scattered hamlet, forming a joint township with Newbold.

NORTH WINGFIELD.

This parish includes the township of its own name and also those of Clay Lane, Stretton, Tupton, and Woodthorpe, in the hundred of Scarsdale, and Poor Law union and rural deanery of Chesterfield. The parish was formerly of much greater extent, and included the township of Pilsley.

North Wingfield, or, more correctly, Winfield township, includes the hamlet of Williamthorpe, and embraces an area of 1,584 acres, chiefly the property of the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke, Wingerworth Hall; Joseph Drabble, Esq., Bank Close, Chesterfield; and G. W. Turner, Esq., North Wingfield. It is valued for rating purposes at £9,374, and had in 1891 a population of 2,395. A parish council of eight members has been assigned to it, and it also elects one rural district councillor. Seams of coal extend into North Wingfield. The Alma colliery was commenced by the late Mr. T. Holdsworth, and it passed into the possession of G. W. Turner in 1893. There are three shafts. The coal is adapted for steam and household purposes, and about 600 hands are employed.

The manor, called Winnefelt in Domesday Book, was held by Walter de Ayncurt, or Deincourt, as the name was afterwards written, at the time of the Survey. There was a church here then, which, a little later, was given to Thurgarton Priory, in Nottinghamshire. About the same time the manor, or, rather, a considerable portion of it, was given by Roger Deincourt to Welbeck Abbey. The family had a mansion here, which, together with the demesne lands, remained in their possession till the extinction of the male line in 1422. Sir Nicholas Longford and Sir John Bussey were joint holders of the manor in the reign of Henry VII., probably by lease from the monks of Welbeck. After the dissolution of monasteries it came into the possession of the Leakes, and was sold after the death of Nicholas Leake, Earl of Scarsdale, to the Greens.

The village of North Wingfield is situated on an eminence $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles south-east from Chesterfield, and a quarter of a mile from Clay Cross station, on the Midland railway. The church, dedicated to St. Lawrence, is an ancient edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, side aisles, two side chapels on the north side, and a lofty embattled tower. It was rebuilt in the Norman period, but the character of the architecture was almost entirely changed during subsequent restorations, when the Decorated and Perpendicular styles prevailed. In the north aisle, the oldest part of the building, some traces of undoubted Norman work still remain. The semicircular archway leading into the chapel belongs to that period, and the small window, now blocked up, ornamented with mouldings of the dogtooth pattern, is also of the same age. The chancel was restored at the expense of the rector in 1850, and ten years later the south aisle was rebuilt. During the work a piece of sculpture was discovered in the south wall near the east end, representing the martyrdom of St. Lawrence on the gridiron. It is now well exposed to view. The north aisle was restored in 1872, and a further restoration of the church took place in 1878-80. In taking down some of the old walls several fragments of incised and sculptured stones were found, and another very unexpected object was brought to light. It was a full-sized live toad, which had through some means or other become encased in the masonry. A piscina and ogee-arched recess were opened out on the north side of the chancel. The crocketed work of the latter was repaired, and a recumbent stone figure of a knight, formerly in the churchyard, now lies in the recess. The leper's window and a hagioscope were also opened out to view. The gallery, which effectually blocked up the lofty arch between the tower and the church was taken down, and the fine west window of six lights exposed to view. The lower floor is now used as a baptistry, and contains an octagonal font bearing the date 1662. An old font, believed to be of Saxon date, stands at the west end of the north aisle.

On the north side of the chancel is a chapel, now called St. Mary's Vestry, long used as the parish school. On the walls are two pieces of sculpture in high relief under Decorated canopies. One represents an angel addressing a female, both life size, probably intended to symbolise the Annunciation; the other shows two figures, one very corpulent below the diaphragm, and has evidently reference to the Visitation and Birth of St. John. At the east end of the north aisle is the chapel of St. Helen, which was probably the chantry founded by John Babington and Ralph Savage, and endowed with eight marks yearly and a mansion house for the priest. When the chantry lands were sold by Edward VI., the mansion house was bought in by the Savages, and a branch of the family resided here for several generations. This house, now the Blue Bell Inn, was modernised a few years ago, but still retains both externally and internally many marks of antiquity.

Ten stained glass windows have been inserted during the past 13 years by the late rector, the Rev. G. W. Darby and his family. Four of these are memorials of the family, and at the base of each is placed a small crown, made of thorns, brought by Miss Edith E. B. Darby from the Mount of Olives. The same amiable young lady presented the church with two altar cloths of "fair" linen, edged with lace about eight inches in depth. In the linen is worked "Greek lace, 200 years old, brought from Athens by Edith E. B. Darby, and presented to North Wingfield Church, Derbyshire, July 31, 1893." The organ, a fine instrument, was built in 1892, by Lloyd & Co., of Nottingham, at a cost of over £400, defrayed by the late and present rectors.

The tower is a handsome piece of work in the Perpendicular style, upwards of 100 feet in height. There is a peal of six bells. No. I., or treble bell, bears an inscription showing that it was made for Staveley Church in 1811; No. II. bears the post-Reformation motto "God Save His Church," and the date 1611; No. III. has neither inscription nor trade mark, and is a wretched piece of casting; No. IV., originally cast in 1617, by George Oldfield, was re-cast in 1878 by Taylor, of Loughborough, but the old inscription has not been reproduced; No. V. bears a Latin inscription in Lombardic letters, and is supposed to be of 14th century date; No. VI., or tenor bell, bears the date 1661, and originally belonged to Chesterfield, whence it was brought in 1820, when a new peal was put in that church. The bells were re-hung in 1878, chiefly at the expense of the late rector; and in 1893 a new illuminated clock, with two dials, was placed in the tower by the parishioners at a cost of £200, in his memory. The tower is surmounted by an embattled parapet, as also are the chancel, nave, and aisles. The porch is entered by a fine ogee arch of considerable width. At the apex of the gable is a niche containing a mutilated statue, and there are also two niches at the corners. In the outer chancel wall, on this side of the church, is a recess under a low ogee-shaped arch in which lies the much mutilated effigy of a knight, supposed to be the monument of one the Deincourts. It formerly lay in St. Mary's Chapel, which was until recently, occupied as the parish schoolroom, and this stone effigy was used as a footrest by the boys. It was removed hither at the late restoration, and the effigy previously in the recess, a cross-legged knight in chain armour, and less mutilated than the other, has been placed in the arched recess in the chancel before-mentioned.

The living is a rectory, the patronage of which descended with the manor, until alienated, after the death of the last Earl of Scarsdale. It has since passed through several hands, and now belongs to G. B. Darby, Esq. It is worth about £800, with residence, and is held by the Rev. Joseph Oldham, B.D.; Rev. Edward Ormisher, B.A., curate. The tithes of the township are commuted for £117, and there are about 80 acres of glebe.

An estate containing about 37 acres of land was left in 1705 to trustees, the rents thereof to be applied in the first place, to all the necessary repairs of the church. The income was for some years misapplied, but the intervention of Chancery was obtained in 1860, and it is now appropriated to its proper object.

The Primitive Methodists have two chapels here: one, Salem, near Alma colliery, erected in 1864, at a cost of £350, and the other, Mount Tabor, in Hephthorne Lane, built in 1870, at an expense of £300, and enlarged in 1893 at an outlay of £100. A school was erected in 1854, by the Wingerworth Coal Company, at a cost of £800, but this is now superseded by handsome board schools.

Williamthorpe is a hamlet and manor in this township. It is mentioned in Domesday Book as Wilelmestorp, and belonged to the Deincourts. It was purchased in 1676 by Sir William Hunloke, Bart., and now belongs to the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke. The old manor house, now a farm house, was rebuilt by the father of the present occupier, about 1860.

STRETTON is a township and village containing 1,528 acres of land, 5 miles 7 furlongs of parish highways, and 4½ miles of turnpike road. Its ratable value is £4,441, and population 608. The principal landowners are W. G. Turbutt, Esq., Ogston Hall; and Clay Cross Company, who are joint lords of the manor; Mr. Adams, Timberfield; John Bradley, Woolley House; Exors. of Thomas Holdsworth; Trustees of Heath's Charity; John Jackson, Esq., Stubbin Edge; and Alfred Payne, Esq. The River Amber bounds the township on the south and west, separating it from Ashover and Brackenfield; and the Midland Railway intersects it and has a station near the village, which was very much improved and enlarged in 1889. About one hundred trains—passenger, goods, and mineral traffic—pass through, in the course of twenty-four hours.

The village stands on the Chesterfield and Derby road, 6 miles from the former, and 2 miles S.W. from North Wingfield. It is supplied with water by the Chesterfield Urban Sanitary Authority from reservoirs at Press, in the adjoining parish of Ashover. A portion of the village extends into the parish of Shirland.

Handley is a small village about one mile W. from Stretton. Here is a school, erected in 1875, and also used as a Mission Church under Clay Cross. The New Connexion Chapel was rebuilt in 1874. On the site, formerly stood the Tithebarn, which some 90 years ago was converted into a chapel. Flax Piece, a farm one mile N.E. of Stretton, bears a name suggestive of what was formerly grown here. The other hamlets are named in the directory. The tithe of the township is rated at £170.

Stretton has its parish council consisting of six members, and it elects one rural district councillor.

TUPTON is a township and village four miles south from Chesterfield, containing 684 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke, Wingerworth Hall; Frederick W. V. Packman, Esq.; and Joseph Bright, Esq., Chesterfield. The ratable value is £10,560. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Tupton constitutes a civil parish, with a parish council of seven members, and one rural district councillor. A mission chapel, dedicated to St. John, was erected here in 1889, at a cost of £1,100, raised by benefactions and subscriptions. The Primitive Methodists and the Methodist New Connexion have also chapels in the village. Spacious schools were erected by the school board in 1875. There are three departments, capable of accommodating 600 children. The Midland railway passes through the township, and has a station named Clay Cross, about one mile from the village. Tupton Hall, the property of F. W. V. Packman, Esq., is the residence of A. G. Barnes, Esq., J.P. Hill House was long the property and residence of the Clay family, from whom it was purchased about twenty years ago by Joseph Bright, Esq., of Chesterfield. There are stones bearing initials of members of the family and 17th century dates.

WOODTHORPE comprises 1,022 acres of land, the greater portion of which is owned by the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke. The ratable value is £5,487, and the population in 1891 was 876. In accordance with the new Local Government Act, (1894), five parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Woodthorpe. The village is situated about four miles south from Chesterfield. There is a small Methodist New Connexion chapel here. The feast is the Sunday before the 28th September.

PLEASLEY.

This is a parish of considerable extent, lying on the border of Nottinghamshire, and comprising the townships of Pleasley, Shirebrook, and Stoney Houghton. It is separated from the adjoining county by the river Meyden, which here runs through a deep narrow ravine, bounded by ridges of limestone rock which assume many fantastic forms. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Heath, petty sessional division of Chesterfield (?) union, and county court district of Mansfield, rural district of Blackwell, and deanery of Alfreton. The parish council consists of seven members, and Pleasley also elects one guardian and rural district councillor.

Pleasley comprises an area of 3,293 acres, including 224 acres of woods; its ratable value is £10,532, and the population in 1891 was 1,152. A branch of the Midland railway, connecting the Leen Valley and Erewash Valley lines, intersects the township, and there is a station near the village. This line was opened for passengers in 1886, and for goods traffic in 1892. The soil is chiefly encumbent on limestone. A coal seam, known as the Top Hard, is worked by the Stanton Iron Works Co., Ltd., who have erected some hundreds of cottages for their workmen at New Houghton. Sir Harry Verney, Bart., is lord of the manor and principal landowner.

Pleasley anciently belonged to a family that took its name from the place. Serlo de Pleasley died in 1203, and one of his co-heiresses conveyed the park of Pleasley, known as Warsop Wood, in marriage to the Willoughbys. In the reign of Edward I. the manor was held by Thomas Beck, Bishop of St. David's, and Lord Treasurer. He obtained from the King a grant of free warren, a market on Monday, and a three days' fair at the festival of St. Mark. He was succeeded by his brother, Anthony Beck, the famous Bishop of Durham and Patriarch of Jerusalem. At his death, in 1311, the manor of Pleasley was divided into moieties between his two nieces, who married into the families of Harcourt and Willoughby. Subsequently the manor came into the possession of the Leakes, and after the death of Nicholas Leake, the last Earl of Scarsdale, it was purchased by Henry Thornhill. It now belongs to Sir Harry Verney, who succeeded to the estates of the late W. E. Nightingale, Esq.

The village of Pleasley is situated on the border of the county, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W. from Mansfield and $8\frac{1}{4}$ miles S.E. from Chesterfield. It has been lighted with gas since 1876, and in 1893 a hydraulic ram was laid down by the present lord of the manor, which supplies the place with water from a perennial spring. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, is an ancient structure of stone, comprising chancel, long narrow nave, south porch, and western embattled tower with pinnacles at the corners. There are traces of Norman and Early English work, but the edifice appears to have been very extensively restored in later Gothic. The tower was considerably damaged by an earthquake on Sunday, March 17th, 1816, which was felt generally, throughout the midland counties. The chancel was carefully restored in 1876 by the then rector, and the tower and nave were repaired in 1893, at a cost of about £300. The pulpit is of carved oak, and formerly stood in All Saints', Derby. The font is inscribed 1662, but an older one stands in the vestry. In the chancel floor is the sepulchral slab of John Stuffyn, gent., of Shirebrook, who died in 1695. There are three bells in the tower, and it is intended to add two more. The registers date from 1553. The living is a rectory, worth about £600 per annum, with residence, in the gift of Mrs. McCreagh Thornhill, and held by the Rev. John Blomefield, M.A., since 1884. The tithes were commuted for £640.

Handsome schools were erected in 1875 at a cost of £2,500, exclusive of the site, which was given by Lady Verney. There are two departments, senior and junior, having an average attendance of 160. The school has a small endowment, left by William Pearse in 1818. The old school premises are used as a parish room and club. An infant school was built in 1884 by the Stanton Iron Company, at New Houghton. It has been considerably enlarged since, and is also used for Church Service on Sundays.

At Pleasley Vale, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.E. from the village, are the extensive mills of William Hollins & Co., Ltd., spinners of cotton, cashmeres, merinos, and silk. The mills were originally erected in 1780. One was destroyed by fire in 1845: the other was burnt down the following year; and both were rebuilt in 1847. About 500 hands are employed in the various departments. Excellent baths have been erected for the use of the employes; and reading, and recreation rooms, opened in 1889, are almost entirely supported by the firm. There is an undenominational infant school in which the Methodists hold services on Sundays. Adjoining the mills is Pleasley Park, where are the remains of some ancient earth works, believed to be British.

SHIREBROOK is a village, township, and ecclesiastical parish containing 1,440 acres, belonging to the Duke of Devonshire, Joseph Nicholson, senr., Joseph Nicholson, junr., Mrs. Ann Fowler, Messrs. Housby & Broadbent, the Trustees of Ashbourne Grammar School, E. P. Greaves, Esq., W. W. Hall, Esq., Park Hall, Mansfield; and Joseph Paget, Esq., Stuffynwood. Shirebrook is included in Pleasley for all civil purposes. The Mansfield and Worksop branch of the Midland Railway enters the township, and Shirebrook station is just within the Derbyshire border.

The village is small, and stands on the verge of the county, 3 miles N.E. from Pleasley, 3 miles N. from Mansfield, and $1\frac{1}{4}$ from Shirebrook station. The church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was rebuilt in 1843 on the site of an older one. It was a chapel-of-ease to Pleasley, and when Lysons wrote, Divine service was held in it once a month. The living is now a vicarage, worth £210 per annum, with residence, in the gift of Joseph Paget, Esq., and held by the Rev. John H. Buchannan, M.A.

The National School was erected in 1852, at a cost of £300, and enlarged in 1866 by the addition of a class-room, the cost of which was defrayed by Joseph Paget, Esq. The school is mixed, and attended by an average of 120 children. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel in the village, built in 1849, at a cost of £105.

Stuffynwood Hall, the seat and property of Joseph Paget, Esq., was erected in 1858 and enlarged in 1874. It is surrounded by a park of 45 acres, through which the River Meyden runs, and on the Nottinghamshire side of the estate, is a small private chapel dedicated to St. Chad. This estate took its name from its ancient owners, the Stuffyns, who possessed land here as early as the reign of Edward II. There is a monument of John Stuffyn—who died in 1695—in Pleasley Church, and John Stuffyn, his son, the last male heir, died the following year. Warsop Park, now a farm, was anciently the property of the Willoughbys, and afterwards of the Roos family.

STONEY HOUGHTON is a small township and village containing 507 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Devonshire, who is also lord of the manor, Stoney Houghton is now included in Pleasley for all civil purposes.

Post, Money Order, Savings Bank, &c., at Thos. Dutton's, *Pleasley Hill. Letters by Mansfield are delivered at 7-55 a.m., and are despatched at 4-55 p.m. and 6-40 p.m., except on Saturday, first despatch only. No postal service on Sunday. Telegraph Office at the station.

SCARCLIFFE.

This is a parish and township of considerable extent, comprising 3,954 acres, of which 3,765 are under assessment; ratable value £10,610, and population (1891) 1,157. The principal landowners are Earl Bathurst (lord of the manor), Cirencester; Major Hallows, Glapwell Hall, Chesterfield; Edward Chaddock Lowndes, Esq., Castle Combe, Wiltshire; Mrs. Jane Scorer, Scarcliffe Park; Samuel Skelton, Warsop; and Joseph Shacklock, Palterton. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Heath, county court district and union of Mansfield, rural district of Blackwell, petty sessional division of Chesterfield, and deanery of Staveley. For carrying out the provisions of the Parish and District Councils Act, seven parish councillors and one rural district councillor have been assigned to Scarcliffe. The Midland railway passes through the parish, and the new east to west line, now in course of construction, will also intersect it. The latter railway will be carried through the hills by a tunnel between Scarcliffe village and Bolsover. The Langwith colliery is in this parish. The seam worked is the Top Hard, and a considerable number of hands are employed.

The manor of Scarcliffe was held, at the time of the Domesday Survey, by Ralph Fitzhubert. His grandson, Hubert Fitzralph, built a church here, and gave the advowson to Darley Abbey; to which also the rectorial tithes were subsequently appropriated. A co-heiress of this, or another Hubert Fitzralph, married Anker de Frecheville, whose grandson of the same name joined Simon de Montford, and the other rebellious barons, against Henry III. His lands in Scarcliffe were seized by the King, and divided between the Prior of Newstead and Robert de Grey. The former had a park here in 1330. In 1544 the manor was granted to George Pierrepont, and in 1690 it was purchased by Sir Peter Apsley, from whom it descended, through a female, to the Bathursts.

The village of Scarcliffe is situated six miles N.W. from Mansfield, eight miles S.E. from Chesterfield, and two miles from Bolsover station, on the Clown and Doe Lea branch of the Midland railway. The church (St. Leonard's) is an ancient edifice of stone, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and tower at the west end. The old tower, which was surmounted by a spire, having become unsafe, was taken down in 1842, and rebuilt as at present. It contains four bells, one of which bears the invocation, "Sancta Maria, ora pro nobis," and is evidently of pre-Reformation date. The arches of the aisle are a portion of the original Norman church, and the inner door of the porch is of the same period. The chancel arch is pointed, as also are some of the windows, but those of the aisle are plain square ones. The most interesting object in the church is the well-preserved full length effigy of a lady holding a child on her left arm. She is habited in a long gown and mantle, and her head, which rests on a lion, is adorned with a coronet. Her right hand holds a fold of the mantle, and the left arm is pressed round the child, whose right hand is held up to its mother's face. The left hand holds a long scroll, on which is engraved an inscription in Latin verse. She was the Lady Constantia, and probably a member of the baronial family of Frecheville, who held the manor of Scarccliffe for some time. On a slab above the monument it is stated that she left five acres of land for the purpose of ringing the curfew at Scarccliffe for ever. This land is known as Bell Rope Land, and provides for the ringing of the curfew every night in the winter months. This gift probably gave rise to a legend formerly current, that the mother and child lost their way in the neighbouring wood, and were in danger of perishing there, when she heard the curfew bell, and, guided by the sound, she found her way back to Scarccliffe. The registers date from 1684. After the dissolution of Darley Abbey, Henry VIII. granted the rectorial tithes and the estate of Scarccliffe Grange, part of the abbey lands, to Sir Francis Leake. The living is a vicarage, worth £95, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held, in conjunction with the rectory of Langwith Bassett, by the Rev. E. H. Mullins.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, built in 1858. The National School was built by subscription in 1868, and is endowed with six guineas yearly. There are two departments, mixed and infants, and about 200 children attend. The feast is on the 5th November.

The first yearly sale of cattle, sheep, &c., was held at The Horse and Groom, on Tuesday, January 30, 1894, and it is proposed to hold a periodical cattle market, if sufficiently well supported.

Palterton is a small village and estate in this parish. It forms a separate manor, which is held conjointly with Scarccliffe. There was formerly a chapel here, which Hubert Fitzralph gave to the Abbey of Darley. A sick club is held at the Hare and Hounds, and the members, attended by a band of music, walk in procession to Scarccliffe Church, on the 29th of May annually. The village feast is held on the Sunday between the 19th and 26th of October. Hillstown is the name given to about sixty houses and shops recently built. Lanes is a small hamlet in the parish, and another place bears the name of Rilky.

CHARITIES.—Kithe Vaughan, in 1813, left £20 a year out of her freehold estate to the parish of Scarccliffe, £14 thereof to be distributed in clothing on the 21st September, £6 towards the support of the school. Samuel Lawrence, in 1697, left 20s. yearly to the poor. Dame Frances Pierrepont, in 1620, left 40s. a year to be given in sums of 20s. each to the most indigent persons in the parish. John Ludlam left 50s. yearly to the most indigent and deserving persons of the parish. Richard Johnson left 10s. yearly to the poor, and Elizabeth Saxton gave the interest of £10 towards the support of the school.

SUTTON.

Sutton-cum-Duckmanton is a joint parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Heath, petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural sanitary district, and deanery of Chesterfield. Six parish councillors and one rural district councillor have been assigned to Sutton under the Local Government Act which came into operation January, 1895. The parish embraces an area of 4,298 acres, and is valued, for rating purposes, at £11,133. The population in 1891 was 721—an increase of 244 since 1881. W. Arkwright, Esq., is lord of the manor and sole owner. The surface is diversified by a series of elevations, extending longitudinally through the parish, which is also intersected by the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway.

Sutton, designated Sutton-in-the-Dale to distinguish it from other Suttons in this and the adjoining county, but now more generally known as Sutton Scarsdale, is a district consisting of the park and about a dozen farms, containing 1,989 acres, and lying 4½ miles S.E. from Chesterfield, 2 miles from Bolsover station, on the Midland railway, and about the same distance from Heath, on the M., S. & L. railway.

The manor of Sutton was part of the endowment of Burton Abbey, founded by Wulfrie Spott in 1002; but it was filched from the monks by William the Conqueror and given to Roger de Poitou. In 1255 it was granted to the Harestans, from whom it passed, by the marriage of an heiress, to Richard de Grey, of Sandiacre. It again fell to an heiress, who married a Hillary; and in the reign of Henry IV. it passed by marriage to the Leakes, who made it their principal seat. This family derived its descent from Alan de Leka, of Leak, in Nottinghamshire. The first of the name that settled here was William, a younger son of Sir John Leake. His descendant, Francis Leake of Sutton, was created a baronet in 1611, and Lord Deincourt in 1624. During the struggles between Charles I. and the Parliament, Lord Deincourt espoused the cause of the king, and fortified his house. A force of 500 men, with three pieces of ordnance, under the command of Colonel Thomas Gell, was sent to besiege it. His lordship was summoned to surrender, but refused, and for some time carried on a vigorous defence. The house was at last taken by storm, and the barricades demolished. Lord Deincourt and his men were taken prisoners, but were released on the former giving an assurance that he would, within eight days, repair to Derby and submit himself to the censure of the Parliament. Lord Deincourt, however, failed to fulfil his promise, and joined the royal troops at Newark. In 1645 he was created Earl of Scarsdale. He remained unfalteringly loyal to the Crown, and, after the collapse of the royal cause, he manifested his contempt of the new regime by refusing to pay a composition for his estates. These were sequestered and sold, but were bought in by some friends for the sum of £18,000. Dugdale, in his "Baronage," says of him that "he became so much mortified after the horrid murder of his rightful sovereign that he apparelled himself in sackcloth, and, causing his grave to be digged some years before his death, laid himself down in it every Friday, exercising himself frequently in divine meditation and prayer." The title became extinct on the death of Nicholas, the fourth earl, in 1736, and the estates were sold. Sutton was purchased by Godfrey Clarke, Esq., and it subsequently passed by marriage to the Marquis of Ormond, who occasionally resided at the hall. In 1824 it was purchased by Richard Arkwright, Esq., from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The Hall, a large mansion in the Grecian style, was rebuilt by Nicholas, Earl of Scarsdale, in 1724-8. It stands within a park of nearly 300 acres. Close to the Hall is the church of St. Mary, an ancient edifice consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and an embattled western tower. It appears to have been entirely rebuilt when the Decorated and Perpendicular Gothic styles prevailed. An incised slab and one or two ancient tombstones remain, but the stained glass memorials and monuments of the Leakes and earlier owners of Sutton have disappeared. There is a large marble tablet in the chancel to the memory of Francis Pierrepont, grandson of Robert, Earl of Kingston, who died in 1707. There are also two post-Reformation monuments bearing incised crosses to the memory of the Redfearnes of Duckmanton. The aisle continues along the side of the chancel forming a chapel, and is separated from the nave and chancel by five pointed arches. The tower is 15th century work and contains four bells, one of which bears the legend, "In honore St. Gabrielis," and is undoubtedly of pre-Reformation date. The pulpit is a memorial of the late rector, the Rev. M. M. Humble, who ministered here for 50 years. In the churchyard are several beautiful monuments to the Arkwright family. There is also a Celtic cross. The living is a rectory, worth £340 per annum, in the gift of W. Arkwright, Esq., and held by the Rev. N. C. Robertson.

There is an interesting legend current in the district concerning one of the early Leakes, which has been embodied in a ballad by Mr. Richard Howitt. The story is told with considerable variations, but, briefly, it is this: There once lived here Sir Nicholas Leake, a valiant knight, who joined the Crusaders in their attempt to wrest the Holy Land from the Moslems. Before his departure, he and his lady broke a ring between them as a pledge of fidelity. In one of the battles he was captured by the Turks and detained a prisoner for many years in the expectation of receiving a large ransom. Wearied and dispirited by his long confinement, he prayed to be delivered and restored to his native lands at Sutton, vowing that if his prayer were granted he would make ample provision for the poor of the parish. Awakening from sleep next morning he found himself seated in the porch of his own church at Sutton. His wife and friends had long mourned him as dead, for the report reached England that he was slain in battle, and when he presented himself at the hall, haggard and ragged, he was spurned from the door. After repeated attempts to gain admission he sent in the half of the broken ring, by which he was at once recognised as the long mourned Sir Nicholas. There was a joyous reunion, and many years of happiness and prosperity followed. In gratitude for his miraculous delivery, and in fulfilment of his vow, he left, by will, eight bushels of wheat to be baked into loaves and given to the poor of Sutton, Duckmanton, and Temple Normanton on St.

Nicholas' Day, for ever. Francis, Lord Deincourt, very considerably increased the dole, which was distributed in 2½lb. loaves yearly till the death of Nicholas Leake, last Earl of Scarsdale, in 1736.

DUCKMANTON, a long scattered village and distinct manor contains 2,314 acres of land, and is solely the property of W. Arkwright, Esq. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Ducemaunestune (Duckmanton) belonged to Ralph Fitzhubert. Geoffrey Fitz-Peter purchased the manor of Sir Richard Wyverton for Welbeck Abbey. Sir Richard Bassett gave the vill of Duckmanton to the Abbey, and Henry de Stuteville subsequently confirmed the manor to that establishment. In 1291, the Abbot of Welbeck obtained a grant for free warren over his manor of Duckmanton. After the dissolution of monasteries, Henry VIII. granted the manor and impropriate rectory to Francis Leake, Esq., and they have, since that time, passed with Sutton.

Duckmanton was anciently a separate parish with a church of its own, and so continued till 1558, when Sir Francis Leake, who was patron of Sutton and Duckmanton, obtained episcopal sanction to consolidate both livings, the annual value of the rectory of Sutton being £7 16s. 5d., and of the vicarage of Duckmanton £5. The church was probably pulled down about this time, and Duckmanton lost its parochial identity. A chapel-of-ease was erected here some years ago, and a burial ground of half-an-acre opposite has been recently laid out at the expense of Mr. Arkwright. Near by, is the rectory house, built in 1842.

The village stretches a considerable distance along the road, and its several parts are known as Long, Middle, and Far Duckmanton. It is situated four miles east from Chesterfield, and two miles from Bolsover station, on the Midland railway. The parish school, situated here, was rebuilt in 1856, for the accommodation of 80 children, and enlarged since, to receive double that number. It is endowed with 45 acres of land, let for about £30 per annum.

CHARITIES.—Fourteen loaves are distributed yearly from Widdowson's bequest, left in 1735; and £7 5s. from Gisborne's charity is expended in flannel, &c., for the poor. Several small charities have been lost.

TEMPLE NORMANTON.

This is a small parish and township containing 514 acres, belonging chiefly to W. P. Arkwright, Esq., Sutton Hall, and the trustees of Mrs. Packman. The ratable value is £2,322, and the population in 1891 was 210. It is in the Scarsdale hundred, county council division of Heath, union, county court district, petty sessional division, rural district and deanery of Chesterfield.

The manor of Normanton, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was in the hands of the King, and about a century later it was in the possession of the Knights Templars, from whom it received its distinguishing addendum of Temple. This was a quasi-religious order, a compound of monk and warrior, of saint and sinner, in which the latter quality soon so entirely obscured whatever it may once have possessed of the former as to call for its suppression by the Pope. This chivalrous fraternity was established by Baldwin II., King of Jerusalem, for the defence of the Holy Sepulchre and the protection of Christian pilgrims to the sacred places. For the first few years after their establishment they were filled with the fire that usually animates the neophytes of an Order, and were doubtless as good monks as they were warriors. But the union soon proved an unholy one. After the extinction of the Christian religion, established in Jerusalem by the first Crusaders, and the final triumph of the Turk, the Templars spread themselves over Europe, when their chivalrous exploits of semi-religious character obtained for them fame, wealth, and numerous privileges and immunities. The original object of their institution had been abandoned, and the swords that had so often flashed against Moslem scimitar, were now the first in courtly game and tournament. The religious aspect of the Order had entirely vanished; the rules and discipline were carried out but by few; and a life of ease, luxury and criminal excess was now the predominant features of the Knights of the Temple. The Order was introduced into this country by King Stephen in 1135, and Henry II. granted them freedom from tolls throughout the whole of England—a privilege which the owners of the lands formerly belonging to the Templars still claim, though now in the changed state of society no longer of any advantage. The Order was suppressed in 1312; and, eleven years afterwards, their possessions were, by act of Parliament, given to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, or, as they were more generally styled, Knights Hospitallers or Knights of Malta. The manor of Temple Normanton remained in the possession of the Hospitallers till the dissolution of religious orders at the Reformation. Queen Elizabeth, in 1563, granted it to George, Earl of Shrewsbury; and it was purchased from this family by the Leakes. In 1742, the trustees of Nicholas Leake, Earl of Scarsdale, sold the manors of Temple Normanton and Sutton to Godfrey Clarke, from whom they descended to the Marchioness of Ormonde, and were purchased after the death of the Marquess by W. P. Arkwright, the present owner.

The village, which has been variously known as Litile Normanton, North Normanton, and Temple Normanton, stands on the Mansfield road, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Chesterfield, which is the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a neat Gothic edifice of stone, erected in 1882, at a cost of about £1,300, raised by subscriptions, the largest contributors being Mrs. Arkwright and Mrs. Packman. The dilapidated chapel, which previously occupied the site, bore the date 1623; but there was unmistakeable architectural evidence in its old walls showing that a still older building had stood on the spot, and that the date 1623 only indicated the year of its restoration or partial rebuilding. It is very probable that this chapel was erected by the Knights Templars, or their successors, the Hospitallers. In Ford's History of Chesterfield, it is said, that the chapel of Temple Normanton was formerly a domestic one belonging to the lords of the manor of Tupton, in North Winfield; but in consequence of a benefaction given by Mrs. Jane Lord, widow of William Allwood Lord, Esq., the patronage was vested in the Lord family. It is now in the trustees of Mrs. Packman. The living is worth £144 per annum, and is held by the Rev. William Barnes, rural dean and rector of Hasland.

A new school was erected by the Arkwright family in 1877. It is endowed with a rent-charge of £4 10s., left by Mr. John Clarke.

CHARITIES.—The sum of £5 10s., out of the Rev. F. Gisborne's bequest, is distributed in warm clothing yearly; and the poor also receive their quota of Foljambe's charity.

WINGERWORTH.

This is a parish and township containing 2,907 acres of land, and 379 inhabitants. It is in the Scarsdale hundred, petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union and deanery of Chesterfield, and county council division of Ashover. The Hon. Mrs. Hunloke is lady of the manor and principal landowner. The following also possess land in the parish:—Capt. Hy. Gladwin-Goodwin, Exors. of John Clayton, Esq., Messrs. Hewitt, Bunting, & Co., Colonel Packman, Mrs. M. Jebb, Mrs. Cawton, Samuel Burkitt, Esq., and E. A. J. Marpiard, Esq.

The manor was anciently held by the Brailsford family. It subsequently passed to the Curzons, by whom it was sold in the reign of Henry VIII. to Nicholas Hunloke, Esq. Henry Hunloke, his descendant, was a staunch royalist during the Civil War, and raised a troop of horse at his own expense for Colonel Frecheville's regiment. He distinguished himself at the battle of Edge Hill in 1642, for which he was knighted on the field, and shortly afterwards created a baronet. The title became extinct on the death of Sir James Hunloke in 1856. The present owner is the granddaughter of Sir Henry Hunloke, fourth baronet, and widow of the Hon. Frederick Charles George Fitz-Clarence, who assumed the name of Hunloke in 1865, on his wife succeeding to this property. Wingerworth Hall, the family seat, is an elegant stone mansion, rebuilt by the third baronet in 1726-9.

Coal is abundant in the parish and district, and associated with the coal are rich bands of ironstone. A blast furnace for smelting the ore was erected here between the years 1780 and 1786, by Mr. Joseph Butler. There are now three furnaces, the property of the Wingerworth Iron Co. The coal is also extensively worked by the Wingerworth Coal Co.

The village, which is small, is situated $2\frac{3}{4}$ miles S. from Chesterfield, and $1\frac{3}{4}$ miles from Clay Cross station, on the Midland railway. The church (All Saints') is an ancient structure consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, and an embattled tower at the west end. The date of its erection is not known, but it was in existence at the beginning of the 12th century, when William II. appropriated the church of Chesterfield and its two chapels of Brampton and Wingerworth to the Deanery of Lincoln; and Norman work may be seen in the semicircular arches of the aisle, and the round-headed doorway beneath the porch. The tower belongs to the Perpendicular period, and is supposed to have been erected by Sir Ralph Longford, who died in 1514, seized of a moiety of the manor of Wingerworth. The church was restored and the chancel partially rebuilt about 50 years ago. Five new bells were placed in the tower in December, 1886, at a cost of £430, of which £270 was contributed by the Hon. Mrs. Hunloke. The ancient rood loft remains over the chancel arch, and the steps by which it was ascended are still perfect. In the chancel is the stone effigy of a priest in eucharistic vestments, but there is neither inscription nor heraldic device to tell whose monument it is. There are several slabs to the memory of members of the Hunloke family, and adjoining the chancel on the north side, is the family mausoleum. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, was constituted a rectory in 1868 by the transference of the great tithes from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners. It is in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. F. Calder, M.A.

The registers date from 1540. Dr. Pegge, the Derbyshire antiquarian, held, with other livings, the perpetual curacy of Wingerworth from 1765 till his death.

In his MSS. is a note recording the death of Ann Ash, at Wingerworth, in 1789, at the age of 104, and her tombstone also records the fact.

Bole Hill, two miles S.W., bears evidence in its name, of the existence here of a bole or bloomary in early times for smelting the iron ore. Harper Hill is distant two miles N.W. Hill Houses is a small hamlet one mile S.W. Here is the parish school, which is endowed with £20 yearly from money left by John Stanford, who died in 1736. The premises were altered and enlarged in 1870, to meet the requirements of the Education Act, but the school is not under Government inspection. Lidgate and Stone Edge are also in this parish. Swathwick is a small village $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from the church.

Stubbing Court is a handsome mansion, one mile W., the seat and property of Samuel Burkitt, Esq.

HIGH PEAK PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

BAMFORD.

This is a parish and township comprising 1,682 acres of land, lying on the east bank of the river Derwent, in the hundred of High Peak, county council division of Castleton, Chapel-en-le-Frith petty sessional division, county court district, union, and rural sanitary district; and deanery of Eyam. For purposes of local government, under the Act of 1894, five parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Bamford.

The ratable value is £1,730, and the population in 1891 was 317. The land-owners are G. H. Cammell, Esq., J.P., Hathersage; Exors. of George Benton; Exors. of W. C. Moore; Francis Sutton; Dr. Taylor, Hathersage; John Robinson, Esq., Bamford; His Grace the Duke of Norfolk; C. Greaves, Hopewoodlands; and Bernard Firth, Esq., Sheffield.

The surface is picturesquely diversified by rock and wood, and grassy slopes that decline in bold sweeps into the valley. Eastward, beyond the village, rises Bamford Edge, an elevated moorland district, and on the opposite side the bleak cone of Winhill towers aloft. Through the valley flows the Derwent, winding its way between green meadows or sedgy banks, or tumbling over ledges of rock that vainly impede its course. The scenery is varied and beautiful, and our only regret in traversing the valley was that we were not provided with the means of taking snap-shots at some of the charming views along the road.

The village is delightfully situated on the slope of a bold ridge, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Hathersage, 5 miles N.E. from Castleton, and near the station of its own name on the Dore and Chinley branch of the Midland railway. A commodious schoolroom was built in 1841, in which service was held by the vicar of Hathersage. A church was erected about thirty-five years ago, chiefly at the expense of the late W. C. Moore, Esq. It is a handsome building in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, and tower surmounted by a lofty spire, containing six bells. The chancel is adorned with panels worked in marble, and the windows are filled with stained glass. In one, are emblazoned the arms of the founder, with this inscription underneath:—"For the glory of God and the good of His people, this church was founded by William Moore, A.D. MDCCCLX." The total cost, including the endowment, was about £8,000. A district co-extensive with the township was assigned as a parish. The living is a rectory, late in the gift of the founder, worth £165 per annum, and held by the Rev. T. M. Ward, M.A.

The Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1821, was rebuilt in 1889. It is in the Bradwell circuit. The Catholics have a school-chapel, built in 1882, at the expense of His Grace the Duke of Norfolk. The building is in the Gothic style. On the walls are the fourteen Stations of the Cross, worked in high relief by Meyer, of Munich. A cemetery of over two acres in extent has been recently added.

Sickleholme, a hamlet in the parish, is situated on a bend of the Derwent, resembling a sickle. Here is the Marquis of Granby Hotel, a commodious establishment beautifully situated in its own grounds, and close to the Bamford station. It is replete with every convenience for tourists, families, and cyclists. At a little distance is Mytham Bridge, a structure of three arches spanning the river. The old bridge was swept away by a flood on the 7th of August, 1856.

Ladybower is a deep secluded glen on the Sheffield road. On either side rise precipitous cliffs, richly clothed with trees and shrubs.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank; John Ward West, postmaster. Letters, via Chesterfield, arrive 8-15 a.m., and are despatched 5-40 p.m. Letter Box, Mytham Bridge, cleared at 6 p.m. No Sunday business.

BRADWELL.

This is a modern parish, comprising the townships of Bradwell, Abney and Abney Grange, Grindlow, Hazlebadge, Great Hucklow, and Little Hucklow, containing a total area of about 6,200 acres, and a population of 1,241. It is in the hundred of High Peak, Castleton county council division, Bakewell petty sessional division, county court district, union, and rural sanitary district; and deanery of Eyam. Under the provisions of the new Local Government Act six parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Bradwell.

In the township of Bradwell there are 2,141 acres of land under assessment, the ratable value of which is £2,240. The number of inhabitants in 1891 was 837. Francis Leslie, Esq., Hassop Hall, is the principal landowner, and the following have also estates or lands here:—Edmund Nicholson, Esq.; Montagu Hall, Esq.; Robert Howe Ashton, Esq., J.P., Castleton; Col. Shuttleworth, Hathersage; Joshua Geo. Jeffery; Geo. Creswell; Mr. Robt. Barker, Bradwell; Fowler Bros.; Thos. Hallam; Edmund Mason, and Robert Middleton. There are also upwards of 100 small freeholders.

Bradwell was one of the many manors given by William the Conqueror to his illegitimate son, William Peveril. This manor afterwards belonged to the Furnivals, and subsequently became part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster. The Duke of Devonshire is lessee under the Crown.

Lead ore occurs amongst the hills, and mining operations were formerly carried on to a considerable extent. Three cupolas were erected for smelting the ore, but in consequence of the great depression in the lead market during the past few years, the mining industry has been discontinued. Limestone of excellent quality is abundant, and is extensively quarried for building and agricultural purposes.

The village is environed by lofty hills, which shelter it on every side. It is four miles N.E. from Tideswell, 10 N.W. from Bakewell, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from Hope, the nearest railway station. The population has decreased since the closing of the mines, and many of the tenantless houses are fast going to ruin. The church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, was erected in 1868 as a chapel-of-ease to the mother church of Hope; in 1875 a district, comprising the townships of Bradwell, Abney and Abney Grange, Hazlebadge, Great Hucklow, and Little Hucklow, was assigned to it, and constituted a distinct parish. The edifice, which is in the Perpendicular Gothic style, consists of chancel, nave, and tower, built of excellent local limestone at a cost of £2,000, exclusive of the site, which was given by Samuel Fox, Esq. The tower, which was added in 1889, contains a clock, presented by Mr. Wass. The east window represents the Fall and Redemption of Man. There is a very fine window by Burlisson and Gryll to the memory of the Rev. Wm. Jas. Webb, curate-in-charge 1868-75, and vicar 1875 to 1881. An alabaster monument in the chancel commemorates Ralph Benj. Somerset of this place, fellow and dean of Trinity College, Cambridge, who died in 1891. The organ was the gift of Sir William Jackson, Bart., M.P. for North Derbyshire. The living, worth £220 with residence, is in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, to whom the mother church of Hope was granted in the 13th century.

The earliest Nonconformist chapel was erected by the Presbyterians. This afterwards became Unitarian, and was rebuilt in 1754. The Wesleyan chapel was built in 1807, and a Sunday school was added in 1844. In 1892 the sum of £1,300 was expended in the work of restoration. The style is Grecian, with portico in front. The interior is fitted throughout with pitchpine benches, and will seat 600. Attached, is a burial ground one acre in extent. Bradwell is the head of a circuit. The Primitive Methodists erected their chapel in 1845 at a cost of £700, and enlarged it in 1878 at an expense of £1,000. There is a graveyard attached.

The National School is a good building adjoining the church, erected at a cost of £1,150, to accommodate 224 children. A school board consisting of five members, was formed, and a school built in 1871. It is attended by about 70 children. Here, as elsewhere, there is a good deal of friction on the school question.

A short distance from the village is Bagshaw's Cavern, discovered about 1807, and named after the owner of the land. It is entered by a descent of 127 rough-hewn and irregular stone steps, and consists of a number of grottoes which are connected by a low narrow passage. These chambers vary in size, and bear the fanciful names bestowed upon them by Lady Bagshaw, who was one of the first persons to explore them :—Kitchen of Fairies, Hall of State, Bell Chamber, Grotto of Paradise, Calypso's Cave, &c. The roofs and sides were formerly thickly encrusted with stalactites, but the late proprietor and guide removed the greater part of these sparkling crystals, and thus robbed the cavern of much of its beauty. But enough remains to compensate the visitor for the trouble and fatigue of traversing about 2,000 feet of low, narrow, and often difficult passages. A little south of the village is Bradwell Dale, a narrow ravine bounded by lofty precipitous rocks which extend to Hazlebadge.

Between Bradwell and Brough, is Edden Tree, which, according to local tradition, received its name from a king or chieftain named Edwin, who lived in the time of the Heptarchy. He is said to have been captured in battle here, and hanged upon a tree that grew on the spot. The tree was afterwards known as Edwin's Tree, of which the present name is a corruption, so say local gossips. This traditionary battle receives some corroborative evidence from the "pieces of swords, spears, spurs, bridle-bits, and human bones that have been found here, and from the remains of an entrenchment called Grey Ditch, which has evidently been raised for military purposes. Near this place is a saline spring, which is said to have proved efficacious in some diseases. The temperature of the water is only a few degrees below that of the waters of Buxton and Matlock.

Small Dale is a hamlet at the northern extremity of the village. The old Roman road leading through Brough to Buxton, passed close to Small Dale, and traces of it still exist in the road now known as Bathom Gate.

ABNEY is a township consisting of the two hamlets of Abney and Abney Grange, comprising 1,340 acres, including about 500 acres of moorland, solely the property of Chas. Eyre Bagshaw Bowles, Esq., who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £680, and the number of inhabitants in 1891 was 53. The surface is pleasantly diversified by hill, dale, and moorland.

Habenae (Abney) at the time of the Domesday Survey belonged to William Peveril. The manor subsequently passed through several families to the Bagshaws, from one of whom it was purchased, in 1593, by Francis, the eldest son and heir of Godfrey Bradshaw, of Bradshaw (vide under Chapel-en-le-Frith), who was then living at Eyam, in the old mansion house of the Staffords, he having married in 1565, when only ten years of age, Anne, daughter and co-heir of Humphrey Stafford, of Eyam, the last male heir of that ancient family. After his father's death he took up his residence at Bradshaw Hall, which he greatly enlarged; and the stone archway bearing his name and the date 1620, and on the reverse side the Bradshaw Arms impaling those of Stafford, still in perfect preservation, stands as a memorial to the first Bradshaw, who was lord of the manor of Abney. His son Francis, high sheriff for the county, 1630, although twice married, died without issue in 1635. The catalogue of his possessions taken after his death forms an interesting article in the "Reliquary" (Vol. iv., No. 2). His brother George succeeded, but continued to live at Eyam, having pulled down the old Stafford Hall and re-named his new erection Bradshaw Hall, which it bears to this day. His son Francis, born 1630, succeeded to the estates of Abney, Bradshaw, and Eyam, but, having married the heiress of the Veseys, of Brampton, Co. York, took up his residence there; as did also his two sons and successors, Francis and John Bradshaw. The latter, high sheriff for Derbyshire, 1717, succeeded his brother in 1677, and, having married Dorothy Eyre of Rampton, Co. Notts., left one son and heir, George Bradshaw, recorder for Doncaster, who dying childless in 1735, the Abney, Bradshaw, and Eyam estates, together with those in Co. York, descended to his nephew, Pierce Galliard, who was the eldest surviving son of his sister Elizabeth by her marriage with Joshua Galliard of Bury Hall, Co. Middlesex. Pierce Galliard lived for the most part at Bury Hall, and, dying 1789, left his two daughters Anna and Mary his co-heiresses. Mary married, 1774, Charles Bowles, of East Sheen House, high sheriff for Co. Surrey, 1794, third son of Humphrey Bowles, of Wanstead Grove, Co. Essex, and Burford Manor, Co. Salop. By arrangement, the Stafford estates at Eyam passed to Anna, who married Eaglesfield Smith, but were sold in 1882 on the death of her grandson, Bradshaw Smith, who was the last of his line. The manor of Abney, however, and the Bradshaw estate became the property of Mrs. Bowles, whose son, Humphrey Bowles, succeeded to them on the death of his father in 1795. Humphrey Bowles died in 1859, and the manor of Abney and Bradshaw Hall passed to his eldest son, the Rev. Charles Bradshaw Bowles, who, dying in 1885, left issue by his marriage with Mary Charlotte, daughter of Vice-Admiral Sir George Eyre, K.C.B., K.C.M.G., third son of Anthony Eyre, of Rampton and Grove, Co. Notts, four sons, the eldest of whom, Charles Eyre Bradshaw Bowles, M.A., J.P., is the present owner of Bradshaw Hall and lord of the manor of Abney.

This township is in the Western parliamentary division, and in the county council division of Baslow. For purposes of local government, under the Act of 1894, Abney is united with Highlow for the election of a rural district councillor.

GRINDLOW or GREENLOW is a small village and township, situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Tideswell, 5 miles S. from Hope, and about the same distance from Millers' Dale Station, on the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland Railway. It contains 288 $\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land, belonging chiefly to Benjamin Bagshaw, Esq., ratable value, £398; and population, 35. Lead mines were formerly worked among the neighbouring hills, and the number of inhabitants then was five times greater than at present.

The manor of Grenelawe in Pecco was given by Matthew de Stokes to the monastery of Lilleshall, in Shropshire, in the latter part of the 12th century, and the grant was confirmed by King John in the first year of his reign. The monks had a Grange here, and their lands were made tithe-free by the payment of twenty shillings a year to the dean and chapter of Lichfield. There was formerly a chapel on the manor, probably attached to the Grange; it is mentioned in the roll of church goods drawn up in the reign of Edward VI., but nothing further is known about it. The manor, under the name of Greenlow Grange, was granted by Edward VI., in 1552, to William Cavendish, Earl of Newcastle. It subsequently belonged to Sergeant Hill, whose heiress married the Honourable William Cockayne, and from this family it was purchased by the Coxes of Derby. It afterwards passed by sale to the late owner, Andrew Brittlebank, Esq. Grindlow is in the Western parliamentary division, Tideswell county council division, and forms a united parish with Great Hucklow for the election of a rural district councillor.

HAZLEBADGE is a small township containing ten scattered houses, with 49 inhabitants, one mile from Bradwell. There are 808 acres of land under assessment, ratable value £641. The soil is encumbent on limestone and gritstone, and there is also some clay; it is chiefly in pasture. The Duke of Rutland is sole owner and lord of the manor.

Heselebec (Hazlebadge), at the time of the Domesday survey, belonged to William Peveril. It passed from this family on the forfeiture of their lands, and in 1271 John, Lord Grey of Codnor, died, seized of Hazelbache in the Peak and other manors. The Strelleys had possession of it in the 14th century, and it afterwards belonged to the Vernons. Hazlebadge Hall, once an ancient seat of the Eyre family, bears the date 1549.

This township is in the Western parliamentary division, Tideswell electoral division, and is united with Little Hucklow for the election of a rural district councillor.

GREAT HUCKLOW is a township containing 1,051 acres of land under assessment, ratable value £1,259; population, 147. The Exors. of B. Wake are lords of the manor, and the principal landowners are C. C. Radford, Esq., Exors. of Robert Bingham, Robert and William Chapman, Exors. of John Wager, David Wain, the Duke of Devonshire, and Benjamin Hill. Lead occurs amongst the hills, and mining was formerly the chief employment of the inhabitants. The Duke of Devonshire is owner of the mineral duties, by lease from the Duchy of Lancaster.

The Bagshaws had formerly a considerable estate here. John Bagshaw, Esq., of Litton and Great Hucklow, was high sheriff of the county in 1696. The last heir (male) of this branch died in 1721, and his only sister and heiress conveyed the estate to her husband, Aymer Rich, Esq. The principal part of the estate was purchased some years ago by John Radford, Esq., of Smalley, and is now in the possession of his descendant.

The village of Great Hucklow is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Tideswell, and about the same distance S. from Bradwell. The population has diminished very considerably since the discontinuance of lead mining, and the many tenantless houses give the place a saddening aspect. The Wesleyans have a neat chapel here, erected in 1806. It will seat 200, and is in the Bradwell circuit. The Rev. William Bagshaw, the celebrated Nonconformist divine (commonly styled "the Apostle of the Peak"), brother of the above John Bagshaw, Esq., is said to have preached in Great Hucklow, and to have established the Presbyterian congregation here. The Unitarian chapel was built in 1796, and the minister's house in 1887.

This township is in the Western parliamentary division, Tideswell electoral division, and forms with Grindlow a united parish under the Local Government Act of 1894.

LITTLE HUCKLOW is an adjoining township containing 561 acres, ratable value £636, and population 120. Colonel Shuttleworth, John Thornhill, Esq., and Charles Hatfield are the principal landowners. The village is about 2 miles N.N.E. from Tideswell and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from Bradwell. It has suffered severely by the cessation of the mining industry in the neighbourhood, and the number of inhabitants is little more than one-fourth of what it was in 1831. Empty houses meet the eye on every side, and desolation reigns supreme. Little Hucklow is united with Hazlebadge for the election of a rural district councillor.

CHINLEY, BUGSWORTH, AND BROWNSIDE

Form a joint township in the ecclesiastical parish of Glossop, and Chapel-en-le-Frith Union. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 they constituted a civil parish, with a council of seven members, for the management of parochial affairs. The total area is 3,835 acres, ratable value £9,911, and the population in 1891 was 1,542. The land belongs to several proprietors, the following being the largest owners:—Rev. F. Gawthorn, Joseph C. Braddeock, John Braddock, Joseph Broadhurst, Christopher Slack, Mrs. Goodman, Mrs. Hadfield, W. H. G. Bagshawe, J. P., John Hadfield, John Drinkwater, and William Hadfield.

The surface is roughly broken into bold eminences, the highest of which—Chinley Churn—attains an elevation of 1,493 feet above the sea-level. Crowning the summit are the remains of a Roman camp, from which a magnificent view of the surrounding country is obtained.

CHINLEY is a village and extra parochial liberty, situated about 2½ miles N. by W. from Chapel-en-le-Frith, and near the station of its own name, on the Manchester branch of the Midland railway. The village is small, and possesses nothing of interest except the old Nonconformist Chapel built in 1711. The congregation was originally formed through the efforts of the Rev. Wm. Bagshaw, better known as "The Apostle of the Peak," who died in 1702. A few charities connected with the chapel are thus noticed on a Benefaction Board:—(1) Thos. Moulton, of Chinley Maze, departed this life on 16th May, 1751, and left £5 to be put out to interest, and the interest arising from it to go towards repairing this place. (2) Samuel Wood, of Bowden Hall, died 15th April, 1764, and left £200 to be put out to interest for charitable purposes, yearly, for ever, and to be divided equally into four parts—1st, in bread amongst poor widows and fatherless children belonging to Chapel-en-le-Frith; 2nd, in bread at Chinley Chapel every Sunday to similar persons; 3rd, in woollen cloths to the poor of Bowden Edge; 4th, to the minister of Chinley Chapel for permitting six poor widows free sitting on the north side of such chapel for ever. This charity commenced the 5th day of May, 1765.

The Wesleyans have a chapel at New Smithy, and a Preaching Room at Four Lane Ends.

BUGSWORTH is a village and hamlet three miles N. from Chapel-en-le-Frith, and ten miles from Glossop. Coal underlies the district; it is excellent for lime burning, and is largely worked for that purpose. For the convenience of the inhabitants a chapel was erected in 1874 and dedicated to St. James. It is a handsome edifice, in the Gothic style, capable of seating 280 persons, and consists of chancel, nave, porch, and belfry, containing one bell. The three windows in the east end are filled with stained glass. The Rev. James Bower is the curate-in-charge. The Primitive Methodists and Congregationalists have chapels here. The former built in 1878, at a cost of £1,300, is a large stone edifice in the Gothic style. The services are conducted by local preachers.

BROWNSIDE comprises the hamlets of Upper Fold and Shireoaks. The land is elevated, but yields good crops of grass.

The educational affairs of the parish are managed by a School Board, by whom commodious schools have been erected, at Chinley and Bugsworth.

BURBAGE.

THIS parish comprises the civil township of Hartington Upper Quarter, containing 10,007 acres, of which nearly one-half is common and heath. Ratable value, £12,421; and population, 2,939. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The parish is in the hundred of Wirksworth, county council division of Fairfield, Chapel-en-le-Frith union; and petty sessional and county court district and deanery of Buxton. In accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, Hartington Upper Quarter has been divided; that portion within the Buxton urban sanitary district becomes an urban parish, named Burbage, to which one urban district guardian has been assigned; and the rest forms the parish of Hartington Upper Quarter in Chapel-en-le-Frith rural district, to which seven parish councillors and three district guardians have been assigned. The district is generally of a wild and rugged character; in places, bare precipitous cliffs shut in deep narrow valleys, through which the winds moan with an ominous sound. Axe Edge, a gritstone ridge, rough and shaggy, rising to the height of 1,750 feet above the sea-level, crosses the township, and from its sides issue numerous springs which become the parents of four rivers—the Dove, the Dane, the Goyt, and the Wye. At the northern extremity is Grin Low, a huge mountain mass of bluish-gray limestone, which is extensively quarried, burnt, and the lime transported to various parts of the country. Excavations extend over a large portion of the hillside; huge masses of the rock lie scattered about, and thick volumes of smoke ascend from the numerous limekilns. The hillocks of dross and slag that cover the greater part of the summit have been planted with firs, which hide the unsightly heaps, and enliven the landscape. From the highest point, extensive views of the surrounding country are obtained. At this spot is a ruined tower called Solomon's Temple. The occupier of the land, at the time it was built, was Solomon Mycock, and some local wag humorously dubbed it "Solomon's Temple," a name that has ever since stuck to it. A tumulus here was recently opened by some local antiquaries, who discovered a cistvaen containing a skeleton with knees drawn up under the chin, and an earthen vessel. Fragments of another skeleton were found, and charred bones and other indications of an ancient British burial.

Burbage, which gives a name to the ecclesiastical parish, is a picturesque village of modern origin, chiefly inhabited by persons employed in the limestone quarries. It is situated near the foot of Grinlow, about one mile from Buxton. The church, erected in 1861, and dedicated to Christ, is a handsome building in the Norman style, comprising apsidal chancel, nave, aisles, and tower, in which there is a peal of five bells. The chancel, which is divided from the nave by a lofty and expansive arch, is lighted by five single-light windows, filled with stained-glass, in memory of persons named only by their initials. The organ chamber is on the north side, and the choir occupy stalls in the chancel. The windows that light the nave and aisles are also pictorial. There is a brass over the vestry door inscribed to the memory of the Rev. John Churchill Spencer, first incumbent of the church; and on the same wall there is a handsome marble tablet, erected by the inhabitants of Burbage and others, in affectionate remembrance of Edward Woollett Wilmot, Esq., J.P., agent to the Duke of Devonshire for the Buxton estate, and sixth son of Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart., who died in 1864, and is interred in the adjoining churchyard. "By his influence and exertions the church and the schools connected with it were erected, and other educational, moral, and religious advantages were secured to the locality. He caused water and gas to be brought into the village, and by many other good works promoted the welfare of the neighbourhood generally." The roof is of oak, open timbered, and pillars of oak on granite bases divide the nave from the aisles. There is one clustered pillar of granite on each side. The font is a handsome piece of granite work, resting on a centre shaft, with one at each of the four corners. The church is seated with open benches of pitchpine to accommodate 450. The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £216 yearly, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. S. C. Sarjant, B.A.

The Wesleyans have a chapel here—a neat stone edifice, capable of seating 180 persons. There is a commodious school under the management of a School Board, attended by 250 children. An Institute is now in course of erection, the foundation stone of which was laid by Lady Edward Cavendish.

Brand Top is a village at the foot of Axe Edge, near the Staffordshire border, four miles from Buxton. A school was founded here in 1776, by Thomas Taylor, and subsequently endowed with 13 acres of land by the Duke of Devonshire. The present premises were built in 1831, and there is an addition now in course of erection, at a cost of £200. The Wesleyan Chapel is a handsome edifice of stone, erected in 1876, at a cost of £1,000, raised by subscription. It is after the Norman style, well lighted, and elegantly furnished in polished pitchpine. There is no resident minister. The road from Brand Top to Ladman's Low leads through scenery, which for wildness and sterility cannot be equalled in any other part of the county. Nothing meets the eye but bare and rugged cliffs and deep narrow valleys. Coal is worked about mid-distance.

Ladman's Low is a small scattered village near the northern extremity of Axe Edge, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles west from Buxton. There are several lime works, and a wharf, on the High Peak and Cromford railway. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1883, at a cost of £340. It is a neat edifice of stone, situated on an eminence overlooking the Macclesfield road. There is a Sunday school in connection with it, and services are conducted by the Rev. John Teece, of Buxton.

Harpur Hill is an eminence and small village about two miles south of Buxton. Here are some works belonging to the Buxton Lime Co., which give employment to many hands. A school was erected by the company in 1876, and enlarged since. It is also used for church service, curate-in-charge, Rev. C. H. May. The Wesleyans also have a chapel here, built in 1888. A little north of this place is Counter's Cliff. On a farm here, is the celebrated Diamond Hill where the crystals known as Buxton diamonds are found. If the turf be raised, particularly after rain, these stalactical formations are found a little distance below the surface. The crystals are hexagonal in form and shine with a brilliant lustre.

Edge Moor is an eminence adjoining Burbage. Viewed from the summit the surrounding country presents the appearance of one vast basin, at the bottom of which nestles Buxton, sentinelled all round by towering cliffs and wooded slopes.

BUXTON.

This is a town, parish, and township in the hundred of High Peak, poor law union of Chapel-en-le-Frith, and is the head of a petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery. The area of the township, including 128½ acres recently added under an order of the county council, is 1,275½ acres; ratable value, £58,000. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, the old parish of Buxton is divided into two—Buxton and King Sterndale. The former embraces the portion within the Buxton urban sanitary district, and to which seven guardians have been assigned; and the latter comprises that portion lying within Chapel-en-le-Frith sanitary district, and elects one rural district councillor.

The town of Buxton is situated on the banks of the river Wye, at the height of a thousand or more feet above the sea-level, and is hemmed in by hills, which, whilst they shelter it from winds and storms, add much to the scenic beauty of the surroundings. The Manchester and Derby road passes through the town, the former place being 24 miles N.N.W., and the latter 38 miles S.S.E. It is easily accessible by rail, the Midland and London and North-Western railways having stations in the town.

Buxton has long been celebrated for its medicinal waters, and with the handsome public buildings, and beautiful villa residences erected in recent years, together with the improvements effected in the sanitary arrangements, it now justly ranks as one of, if not the, most fashionable of our health resorts. Its fame is not of to-day. That the luxurious Romans were acquainted with its healing waters is shown by the discovery of one of their baths in the early part of the 18th century; and traces of a Roman camp have been met with in the immediate vicinity. Whether the wild, roving Britons, whose burial grounds are scattered over the Peak, made use of these curative waters, as some imagine, or not, it is evident that the baths of Buxton may be regarded as the most ancient in Great Britain. In the troublous centuries that followed the departure of the Romans, when the ancient Britons were overpowered, and nigh exterminated by the half-civilized Saxons, and the supremacy of the latter subsequently disputed by the sea-rovers of Denmark and Norway, the springs of Buxton were neglected, if not wholly forgotten. They come again into notice in the Middle Ages, when much of their efficacy was attributable to spiritual agency; and, as was customary in Catholic times, a chapel was built and dedicated to St. Anne, wherein those who had benefited by the waters might offer up their orisons and thank God for restoration of their health. The walls were decorated with the crutches of the cripples whose cures rendered them no longer necessary.

But these mementoes of cures effected by the waters enkindled the wrath of the early Reformers, who regarded them as tokens of a superstitious reverence, and the further use of the baths was prohibited. The following letter from Sir William Bassett to Lord Cromwell shows how the work was carried out:—

Right Honourable my in especial good lord,

According to my bounden duty, and the tenor of your lordship's letters lately to me directed, I have sent your lordship by this bearer, my brother, Francis Bassett, the images of St. Anne of Buxton and St. Andrew of Burton-upon-Trent, which images I did take from the places where they did stand, and brought them to my own house within forty-eight hours after the contemplation of your said lordship's letter in as sober a manner as my little and rude wits would serve me. And for that there should be no more idolatry and superstition there used, I did not only deface the tabernacles and places where they did stand, but did also take away crutches, shirts, and shifts which was offered, being things that allure and entice the ignorant to the said offering, also giving the keepers of both places orders that no more offerings should be made in those places till the King's pleasure and your own lordship's be further known in their behalf.

My lord, I have locked up and sealed the baths and wells at Buxton that none shall enter to wash there till your lordship's pleasure be further known. Whereof I beseech your good lordship that I may be ascertained again at your pleasures, and I shall not fail to execute your lordship's commandments to the utmost of my little wit and power. And, my lord, as touching the opinion of the people, and the fond trust they did put in those images, and the vanity of the things, this bearer can tell your lordship better at large than I can write, for he was with me at the doing of all this, and in all places, as knoweth good Jesus, Whom ever have your good lordship in His blessed keeping.

Written at Langley with the rude and simple hand of your assured and most faithful orator, and as one ever at your commandment next unto the King's, to the utmost of his little power.

WILLIAM BASSETT, Knight.

To Lord Cromwell.

The prohibition of using these medicinal waters for the cure of diseases does not appear to have remained in force very long, for soon afterwards we find the sick and infirm flocking in such numbers to the baths, that Buxton, then a place of inconsiderable size, could not accommodate the visitors. To meet this want, and to extend still further the reputation of the waters, the Earl of Shrewsbury, about the year 1570, erected a commodious and convenient house over the baths, called the Hall, where even "the very poorest could have lodgings and beds for their uses only." About this time the curative properties of these waters were prominently set forth in a treatise by a Derby physician, thus entitled:—"The Benefit of the Auncient Bathes of Buckstones, which cureth most greivous sicknesses, never before published: compiled by John Jones, Phisitian, At the King's Mede, nigh Darby. Anno Salutis 1572." The baths were then much frequented, and the custodians appear to have kept a register in which the names, symptoms, &c., of the patients were recorded. The year following the publication of Dr. Jones's treatise, the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, then a prisoner in the charge of the Earl of Shrewsbury, and suffering from chronic rheumatism and other ailments, visited Buxton for the benefit of the waters, accompanied by the Earl and his countess, the famous Bess of Hardwicke. She appears to have experienced great relief, and the visits were repeated in 1576, 1580, and 1582. The house occupied by the unhappy queen now forms part of the Old Hall Hotel, and on the occasion of her last visit she wrote the following kindly farewell on a pane of glass in her room:—

"Buxtona quæ calidæ celebrabere nomine lymphæ, Forte mitri posthac non adeunda, vale."

This distich is an adaptation to Buxton of Cæsar's lines upon Feltria, and has been thus translated:—

"Buxton, whose fame thy milk-warm waters tell, Whom I, perhaps, no more shall see, farewell."

Other notabilities followed in the wake of the Queen of Scots, and found relief in these healing waters. Lord Burleigh paid several visits between 1572 and 1580; the Earl of Sussex was a visitor about the same time; and the Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favourite, in 1586 tried the effect of the waters on his wasted constitution. The poor, too, flocked to Buxton for the cure of their physical ailments, and in 1597 a legislative enactment was passed which had the effect of restraining these itinerant migrations. By a clause of the Act it was provided "that none resorting to Bath or Buxton Wells should beg, but should have relief from their parishes, and a pass under the hands of two Justices of the Peace fixing the time of their return, nor were they to beg there under pain of incurring the penalties of the Act." There appears to have been, from an early period, some provision made to enable poor persons to receive the benefit of these waters; but so great was the number that flocked here, that they became a burden on the inhabitants of the neighbouring village of Fairfield, who, in a petition to the Queen, complain that they are unable to maintain their minister through extreme poverty, consequent upon "the frequent access of divers poor, sick, and impotent persons repairing to the fountain of Buxton." Buxton seems to have steadily progressed in public favour, and in 1670 William, third Earl of Devonshire, who had inherited the estate by descent from Bess of Hardwick, Countess of Shrewsbury, pulled down the old hall, erected a century previously, and built a larger and more commodious edifice on its site. This building still exists, though much altered and enlarged, and forms one of the principal places of entertainment, under the name of the Old Hall Hotel. The precincts of the town at this time were dreary and uninviting—"a waste and howling wilderness"—and very difficult of access in consequence of the wretched state of the roads in the Peak. But the following picture of Buxton life in the 17th century, given by Macauley on the authority of Thomas Browne's "Tour in Derbyshire," must be an unwarranted exaggeration, if not an entire fabrication:—"The gentry of Derbyshire and of the neighbouring counties repaired to Buxton, where they were crowded into low wooden sheds and regaled with oatcake, and with a viand which the hosts called mutton, but which the guests strongly suspected to be dog."

Little more was done for the improvement of the town and its approaches till the time of the fifth Duke of Devonshire, who may be said to have laid the foundations of Buxton's popularity. To provide increased accommodation, which would satisfy the desires of the most exacting visitors, he commenced, in 1780, the erection of the Crescent, and completed it in 1784. This magnificent pile of buildings—the pride and boast of Buxton—was erected from the designs and under the superintendence of John Carr, Esq., of York. The architecture is of the classic style of Greece, carried out with elegance and simplicity. The houses are three storeys high, with an arcaded promenade of a rustic character in front. This arcade supports an elegant balustrade, which is carried along the front and ends of the fabric. Above this rise fluted Doric pilasters which support the architrave and cornice. The curve of the building measures 200 feet, and each end is flanked by a wing extending 58 feet further.

In the rear of the Crescent is a large plain quadrangular building called the Square, which is connected with the former by a colonnade extending round three sides of the building. Near this is a huge domed structure, now the Devonshire Hospital, but originally erected by the third duke as a place for riding when the weather was too wet or inclement to permit of that exercise outside. This immense structure is octagonal in shape, the opposite sides being equal and similar. In the interior is a circular area, 164 feet in diameter, surrounded by a covered ride, 24 feet wide. Covering this circular area is a dome, probably the largest in the world, which is supported by a circle of columns, 25 feet in height. The external appearance is attractive. The four principal façades, two storeys high, are crowned by towers surmounted by domes, and beneath one is an elegant portico, forming the principal entrance. The total cost of these three buildings was £120,000.

In 1858 the Great Stables, as this building was then called, were transferred to the trustees of the Buxton Bath Charity by the sixth Duke of Devonshire for conversion into a hospital for the use of the sick poor, at a yearly rental of £5. The Bath Charity was originated several centuries ago for the purpose of aiding the sick poor to receive the benefit of these medicinal waters. To this charity the wealthy patients and others contributed, and from the fund thus provided, which Dr. Jones, writing in 1572, calls the "Treasury of the Bath," the necessities of the sick and impotent poor were relieved. The charity appears to have been revived, or probably formally reconstituted, in 1779, under the name of "Buxton Bath Charity," and the annual report for 1785 is still extant. During the first half of the present century upwards of 1,000 poor patients were yearly relieved by the charity. In 1859 the Devonshire Hospital was opened (the cost of conversion and furnishing having been about £6,000), whereby the charity was enabled to lodge at first 100 poor patients, and soon afterwards 150. In 1868 the buildings and grounds of the hospital were legally conveyed to the trustees by the late Duke, at a nominal rent of 5s. per annum. During the Cotton Famine 100 destitute female operatives, under 30 years of age, were received into the hospital, and restored to their homes with renovated health and strength the following spring. When the Governors of the Cotton District Convalescent Fund divided the balance left in their hands they allotted the sum of £24,000 to this hospital; and in consequence of this grant it was decided to cover the circular area, hitherto open, with a dome, to re-model the interior, and to extend the buildings so as to increase the accommodation from 150 to 300 beds. The total cost of the reconstruction and additions exceeded the grant by about £9,000, besides the sum of £5,000 paid for the land and premises for the extension of the hospital. The handsome clock tower over the principal entrance was built by subscription in 1882, as a testimonial to Dr. Robertson for his long and valued services to the institution. The clock, with Cambridge chimes and four illuminated dials, was given by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire. The annual report of this most valuable institution for 1893 shows an income of £6,572, and an expenditure of £5,946. There were 2,559 patients received into the hospital, and there were 229 out-patients. Of the 2,559 in-patients 2,398 were discharged as "improved," and 159 of the out-patients were in like manner benefited.

Each successive duke has done much to increase the attractions of Buxton. Excellent roads have been made; St. Anne's Cliff—an eminence in front of the Crescent—has been transformed from an unsightly mound into a beautiful promenade of terraced walks, and the hillsides have been covered with thriving plantations. In 1871, about 12 acres of ground, stretching westward from the Crescent, were given to the Buxton Improvements Company, by whom it was beautifully laid out from the designs of Mr. E. Milner, the landscape gardener of the Crystal Palace. Serpentine walks, grottoes, artificial lakes, mimic waterfalls, and rustic bridges, give The Gardens a fairy-like appearance.

On the north side of the Gardens is the Pavilion, a handsome structure of iron and glass, 600 feet in length. At one end is the Concert Hall, capable of seating 2,000 persons. Here a first class band discourses sweet music twice a day. To increase the attractions of the Pavilion, a Theatre has been added. In the Gardens are cricket grounds, tennis lawns, and a large skating rink, and boating can be indulged in on the lakes. On the approach of frost the water is lowered to a depth of 12 or 18 inches, and skating can be enjoyed without fear of immersion.

Though ducal munificence has been the backbone of Buxton's prosperity, the Queen of the Peak owes not a little to the enterprise of private speculators who have erected a large number of beautiful villas and boarding-houses, and magnificent hotels and hydros for the accommodation of visitors.

The popularity of Buxton rests solely on the healing properties of its mineral waters, which have for centuries proved extremely beneficial to persons suffering from certain diseases, but chiefly rheumatism, in its various forms, and gout. The springs issue from fissures in the mountain limestone, at an elevation of 1,000 feet above the level of the sea; the flow is constant; summer and winter, in drought or wet seasons there is no variation, about 150 gallons being discharged per minute. They also maintain a uniform temperature of $81\frac{1}{2}^{\circ}$ F. The water is clear and sparkling, with a slight tinge of bluish green, without smell and almost tasteless. It is highly charged with nitrogen and carbonic acid gas, which may be seen rising in bubbles through the water in the bath. Dr. Playfair estimated, or rather assumed, that there were 206 cubic inches of nitrogen in the gallon of water at the moment of issue; and Dr. Muspratt in his analysis of these waters, published in 1860, gives the quantity of nitrogen as 504 cubic inches per gallon; but Dr. Thresh, by a number of very carefully conducted experiments, has determined the quantity of nitrogen held in solution at 6·1 cubic inches per gallon of water, and of carbonic acid gas at 4·1 cubic inches. The saline constituents of the water, as determined by the two latest analyses, are as under :—

Various theories have been propounded to account for these and other thermal springs. The constancy of the temperature (81½° Fahrenheit at Buxton), and especially of the flow, has led many writers to attribute their origin to the ocean; and others assert that they are due to volcanic agency. The upholders of the latter theory adduce in support of their contention the fact that nearly all hot springs are found either in the neighbourhood of active volcanoes or in localities where there are evident traces of former volcanic action. Another, and equally probable explanation, is that the Buxton waters rise from a considerable depth in the earth, where they have accumulated by percolation through the superincumbent strata. There is a steady increase of temperature, at the rate of 1° Fahrenheit for every 50 feet we descend; at a depth of 2,000 feet the temperature is fully 40° higher than at the surface; and the deeper the spring, the hotter will the water become. Resting upon impervious rock, and pressed by the water percolating through the upper strata, this heated water finds its exit through fissures or channels in the rock, losing a portion of its heat, and absorbing various mineral ingredients from the rocks through which it passes.

Whether the Buxton waters derive their therapeutic action from the nitrogen or from the salts they hold in solution, is a question on which there is much difference of opinion; but that they are extremely beneficial in certain diseases is proved by the experience of centuries. Dr. Granville, so well known by his works on the German and English spas, compares the waters of Buxton with those of Schlangenbad. "Here at Buxton," he writes, "we have a water at nearly the same degree of heat, with fewer ingredients, still producing not only similar, but even more energetic effects." Dr. Robertson, consulting physician to the Bath Charity and Devonshire Hospital, in his work, "Buxton and its Waters," says :— "The diseases for the relief of which the Buxton baths are found to be the most eminently useful, are rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, and certain forms of spinal, uterine, and dyspeptic affections. Many of the disordered conditions which are incidental to old age—much of the deranged health incidental to middle age in females—much of the uterine irregularity and disturbed condition incidental to females at various periods of life—much of the nervous weakness that is indicated by tic-doloreux in its various forms, sciatica, &c.—much of the functional derangement of the kidneys which is consequent upon exposure, intemperance, or advanced life—much of the disordered and painful conditions of the bladder, &c., dependent on old age, gout, &c.—much of the local loss of nervous, and thence of muscular power, dependent upon the poisonous effects of lead, mercury, &c., are usually remediable, and in an important degree, by the use of these mineral baths." The late Dr. Page, who was surgeon to the Bath Charity, in his "Observations on the Buxton Waters," says:—"The Buxton waters are fairly entitled to the appellation of a mild saline mineral, the temperature of which, at all seasons of the year, is pretty uniformly 82° on Fahrenheit's scale. They are perfectly pellucid and inodorous, and, owing most probably to the large proportion of nitrogen gas which they contain, devoid of that vapid taste so observable in ordinary water when heated to the same temperature. To their purity, to the mildness and uniformity of their temperature at all times and seasons, neither depressing the vital powers by cold, nor enervating them by heat, and to their impregnation with nitrogen gas, may be attributed, in no inconsiderable degree, their salutary effect." To this we may add Dr. Thresh's caution, that "no visitor should attempt to submit himself to a course of baths unless he has previously consulted his medical adviser, especially if any affection of the heart is suspected."

The springs are nine in number, and are covered by handsome Baths erected in 1852, in place of the less attractive ones built when our tastes were less refined and luxurious than now. The Natural or Tepid Baths are situated at the western end of The Crescent, directly over the springs, the water of which is constantly flowing into them through interstices between the marble slabs forming the bottom of the baths. There are six private baths and two public ones for gentlemen, and one public and five private ones for ladies. There are also baths for the patients of the Hospital. The Hot Baths adjoin the opposite end of The Crescent. Here the water is artificially heated to any degree that may be required. There are suites of baths for ladies and gentlemen, and all the necessary appliances for every kind of bath and douche, and also for the Massage treatment.

To meet the requirements of the vast and increasing number of visitors, a large and handsome Pump Room was erected in front of The Crescent by the Duke of Devonshire, and presented to the town in June, 1894. Here the water is supplied to drinkers at a small charge. The baths are the property of the Duke of Devonshire, by whom they are maintained at a considerable yearly expenditure, though doubtless this is more than covered by the income. The average number of bathers per annum during the past 20 years has been 62,867, and the income about £6,000 a year.

In addition to these thermal springs, Buxton possesses a Chalybeate Spring, which has long and deservedly been held in high repute as an excellent tonic. The water is inodorous, with a perceptible taste of iron; and being almost free from alum, is less astringent than many other English chalybeates. This spring rises in the limestone shale at the foot of Corbar Hill, and is conveyed in pipes to the pump room.

The town is under the jurisdiction of a local board, or, as now designated, urban council, by whom numerous improvements have been, and are being carried out. The streets and roads have been placed in excellent condition, an unlimited water supply provided, and the sanitary arrangements made as perfect as science at present can make them. The district under the control of the board includes the townships of Buxton, Fairfield, and part of Hartington Upper Quarter. The first attempt to supply the town with water was made by the Duke of Devonshire in the latter part of the last century, when a reservoir was made at Burbage, mains laid to his property in the town, and a public fountain erected in the centre of Market square, Higher Buxton. Other reservoirs were afterwards constructed at Cold Springs, Lightwood, Ladmanslow and Watford. Previous to 1873, the waterworks were held on lease by the Local Board; but under powers of an Act of Parliament obtained that year, they were purchased by the town for the sum of £10,000. New works were erected at Hogshaw, under Coombs Moss, and all the mains replaced by new ones of larger capacity, the total cost, including the above purchase money, being about £35,000. Another reservoir is now in course of construction at Burbage to hold 18,500,000 gallons, at an estimated cost of £10,000. All the springs supplying the reservoirs are situated in the gritstone formation, and the water consequently is of excellent quality, remarkably soft and free from organic matter.

One of the first works of the Local Board was the construction of a complete system of drainage; and in 1885 works and tanks were erected for the purification of the sewage at a cost of £6,000. The following year a refuse destructor was built, at a further outlay of £2,000.

Buxton was first lighted with gas in 1851. The works were in Bridge street, and belonged to a private company. In 1871 they were purchased by the Local Board for £15,000. In 1874-6 new works were erected and new mains laid, at a cost of £32,000; and the price of gas reduced from 6s. 8d. to 2s. 6d. per 1,000 cubic feet.

The Town Hall is a large and handsome building, erected on the site of the Market Hall, which was burnt down in 1886. The architecture is of a very attractive character. The hall itself contains the Local Board Offices, Free Library, Reading Room, Masonic Room, &c. The public room is 80 feet long by 40 feet wide, and well lighted and ventilated. The total cost of the building was about £12,000.

The Local Board has recently purchased 12 acres of land for a Cemetery, at a cost of £1,200, and this will be laid out and planted, and two mortuary chapels erected.

A weekly market was established some years ago, but as country produce is delivered fresh daily there is little business left for the market.

The ancient custom of Well Dressing is observed at Buxton yearly in the month of June.

St. John's, the parish church of Buxton, is a substantial cut stone edifice standing at the junction of St. John's and Manchester Roads, erected in MDCCCXL. It is in the Tuscan style of architecture, with cupola and portico. Massive stone pillars support the outer roof or canopy. The principal entrance is at the west end. The roof is highly decorated, and slopes in a curve from the centre to each wall. The credence table of variegated marble, and the reredos—a richly-carved piece of work in three compartments—were the gift of Miss Hull, in memory of her brother, a former vicar of Buxton. Above the reredos is a fine oil painting, presented by the Duke of Devonshire. The church is lighted by three large semi-circular windows in each side wall, one only being entirely, and a second partially, filled with stained glass. The pulpit forms a striking feature in the internal arrangements. It is of coloured marble, elegantly carved in floral designs, resting on rounded pillars of similar stone; and the font, another handsome piece of sculptured marble, is also worthy of observation. The church is rich in sepulchral monuments. The living is a vicarage, value about £430; patron, Duke of Devonshire; present vicar, C. C. Nation, M.A.

St. James' Church, Bath Street, Higher Buxton, is a handsome Gothic structure of limestone, erected at a cost of £5,000. It consists of chancel, two small transepts, nave, with side aisles, and an hexagonal tower and spire rising from the intersection of the nave and chancel. A lofty pointed arch, crossed by a screen, separates the chancel from the nave, and a similar arch divides the sacristy from the choir. The windows of the chancel, three in number, are of two lights each, and filled with stained glass. The aisles are three bays in length, the arches springing from pillars of polished marble, and in each wall are seven single lancet lights. The pulpit is a handsome one of stone, richly sculptured, with circular pillars of variegated marble. The font, large and goblet-shaped, is inscribed: "A gift from the children to St. James' Church, Buxton, Christmas, 1893." The church is a chapel-of-ease to St. John's.

St. Anne's Church. The present chapel, built about 1625, was dedicated to St. John, not St. Anne, lest some memory of the superstitions that had enshrined themselves within the old chapel of that name might attach to this. It has been twice restored, and has at different times served the purpose of day school, Sunday school, and mortuary chapel. It is a rectangular building, of no characteristic style of architecture, and possesses no noticeable features either within or without. The windows are square-headed and filled with plain glass, except one on the east wall, which exhibits the Stations of the Cross. A handsomely-carved oak reading desk, of 17th century workmanship, is worthy of observation. On the walls are several plain memorial tablets, the most ancient one being to William Wallace, who died 1788. In 1715 a vestry was added to the south-east gable of the chapel. St. Anne's is not endowed, and is supported solely by the offertories and collections; the present curate-in-charge is the Rev. Gerard Walker Palmer, M.A.

Trinity Episcopal Chapel is a two-story building with no pretensions to architectural beauty. On the ground floor is a well-lighted Sunday school with two class rooms. The chapel is furnished with open seats of pitch-pine, the pulpit and reading-desk being also of that wood, whilst the lectern is of oak. The gallery contains a good organ. The Rev. Conrad Samuel Green is the curate-in-charge.

The Congregational Church, Hardwick Street, is an imposing looking edifice of cut-freestone erected in 1859, at a cost of over £2,000, and subsequently enlarged in 1880 at a further outlay of about £1,000. The church comprises nave, aisles, porch, tower, with hexagonal spire, and lecture room. The nave and aisles are separated by five pointed arches resting upon circular metal pillars with octagonal bases, and ornamented with floral designs. The chancel is laid with encaustic tiles, and contains a handsome stained glass window of five lights. The Rev. Robert Rew is the present minister. Sunday schools were erected in Hardwick Square, in 1880, at a cost of about £700, for the accommodation of 170 scholars.

Wesley Chapel, Eagle Parade, Higher Buxton, is a substantial building of cut freestone, strongly buttressed and surrounded by a parapet which terminates at the front gable in a bell turret. It was erected in 1849, and subsequently enlarged in 1880, when side transepts were added and a Sunday school erected. The chapel is arranged in the nave and aisle fashion, and has a chancel separated by a pointed arch, resting on circular decorated pillars, with sculptured capitals in floral design.

Devonshire Park Chapel also belongs to the same sect. It is a strongly buttressed edifice of freestone, oblong in shape, erected, in 1870, at a cost of about £7,000, and affording accommodation for about 700 worshippers. It consists of nave and apsidal chancel, and is well lighted and furnished. The chancel arch is lofty and pointed. The apse contains three one-light windows, filled with stained glass. The nave is lighted by two-light stone-mullioned tracery-headed windows, two being filled with stained glass. The pulpit is of pitch-pine, octagonal, with circular pillars. The font is of stone, beautifully sculptured. The gallery is lighted by a large four-light tracery-headed window. The outside appearance of the building is enhanced by a tower surmounted by an octagonal spire.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel is a handsome stone building, erected at a cost of £1,689. It is lighted by stone-mullioned Gothic windows. At the main entrance, which is on the east side, is a very fine cut stone arch, with granite pillars. Behind the western gable are three vestries, or class-rooms. The circuit minister is the Rev. John Teece. A Sunday school adjoins the chapel, affording accommodation for about 150 scholars.

The Unitarians have a chapel in Hartington road, erected in 1875; and the members of the Catholic Apostolic Church worship in a corrugated iron building, erected, in 1885, at a cost of £100.

St. Anne's Catholic Church, in Terrace road, is a neat edifice in the Early English style, erected, in 1861, at a cost of about £3,000, exclusive of the site, which cost 100 guineas. The building is now in course of enlargement by the prolongation of the east end to form a sanctuary, and the addition of two chapels on the north side dedicated to the Sacred Heart and the Blessed Virgin. The estimated cost of the extension is about £400. Adjoining the church are the Presbytery and the schools. The Rev. John Theodore Hoeben is the priest in charge.

The Salvation Army Barracks, situated in Torr Street, are capable of accommodating about 400 persons.

Schools.—Buxton possesses several excellent public and private schools. Buxton College is a handsome block of buildings, situated on high ground, commanding a fine view of the town and surrounding country. The wooded heights of Solomon's Temple, hard by, whilst sheltering it on the south-west, afford a natural recreation ground where healthy exercise and pleasant walks can be indulged in by the pupils. The school-room is spacious and well ventilated, measuring 60 feet by 30 feet, and annexed to it are two class-rooms. The whole pile of buildings with its spacious dining hall, dormitories, laundry, hospital, &c. presents such a noble appearance that it ranks as one of the attractions of Buxton.

This school was originally founded in 1674, by a number of gentlemen who subscribed the sum of £300, with which they purchased £15 per annum in fee, of which £12 was for the schoolmaster of the said town teaching Latin, English, and writing. A suit in chancery was instituted in 1792, for the regulation of this charity, but without effect; and the school was suspended for several years. In 1817 it was re-opened in the old chapel of Buxton. In 1833 the property of the charity consisted of 35 acres, 1 rood, 4 poles of land, and £748 4s. 3d. in the new 4 per cents., producing a yearly income of £94. With the development of the town this land increased largely in value, and in 1876 the Charity Commissioners sanctioned a scheme for the reconstitution of the school and the erection of new premises, which were built in 1881, at a cost of about £5,000, for the accommodation of 80 boys. There are six scholarships, tenable for three years, at the school. The curriculum is comprehensive and practical, and in harmony with our modern ideas of a thorough education. The boys are prepared for the Universities, the learned professions, and commercial life. The college has made phenomenal progress under the present headmaster, Dr. Little, necessitating the erection of two large dormitories capable of accommodating 30 more boys, and the enlargement of the dining hall to double its original size.

There are several successful private schools, the names and addresses of which are given in the accompanying directory.

Elementary education is provided by the School Board, which was formed in 1874. Handsome schools have been erected in Hardwick square, at a cost of nearly £6,000, containing three departments. There are at present on the registers 280 boys, 268 girls, and 300 infants.

There are many charming walks and objects of interest within easy reach of Buxton. On the outskirts of the town is the Park, covering a hundred acres, and beyond this is Corbar Hill, which art has transformed from an unsightly mass of broken rock into an object of beauty, in which the work of nature has been most closely imitated. The steep slopes have been thickly planted with trees, and labyrinthine walks wind about under their shade; and the old gritstone quarry has been converted into a beautiful rockery, studded with creeping plants, ferns, foxgloves, rhododendrons, and flowering shrubs. From the summit there is an extensive view of Buxton and the surrounding country, as far as Mam Tor, or Shivering Mountain, near Castleton.

On the south-east side of the town, and about half-a-mile distant, is a much frequented walk or ride called the Duke's Drive, which winds through Ashwood Dale. Proceeding onwards, at the distance of about one mile, is Lover's Leap, a natural chasm in the limestone rock, through which flows a murmuring stream. The ravine varies from six to 30 yards in width, and the over-hanging rocks are clothed with mosses, lichens, and flowering plants. The legend which attaches to it is a modern fabrication.

Poole's Hole, about one mile west of the town, is one of the wonders of Derbyshire, and ought to be visited by tourists and others who make any sojourn at Buxton. It is said to have received its name from a famous outlaw, named Poole, who, if we may believe tradition, lived in the reign of Henry IV., and found here a safe retreat for himself and his plunder. But long before his time the cave was used as a dwelling-place by a race of men who had attained a considerable degree of civilisation, as is shown by the human bones, and bones of animals which had been used as food, together with fragments of pottery, bronze implements, and articles of ornament that have been found on excavating the floor of the cavern. These, and other relics of antiquity and curiosities gathered from all parts of the world, may be seen in the Museum adjoining the cavern.

This wonderful series of subterranean chambers carved by the hand of nature in the huge mass of limestone rock, with their connecting passages, extend upwards of 770 yards, but that point is the greatest distance to which visitors are usually conducted. The whole length is lighted up by 250 gas and coloured lights, enabling the explorer to examine the inmost recesses. The entrance is through a low archway in the cliff, near which are the guide's cottage and the Museum. The passage for some distance is rather low and narrow as it recedes into the gloom; it then ascends over some water-worn rocky ledges called the "Wool Packs," and opens into a spacious chamber. Here masses of rock lie scattered about and piled upon one another in chaotic confusion, and pendant from the roof and adhering to the sides are countless icicles of crystal called stalactites, that glitter and sparkle as the light falls upon them. These crystallised formations in some places carpet the floor to a considerable thickness, and are then called stalagmites. Some of them are of immense size, and, as they are formed by the dripping and evaporation of drops of water, leaving the solid matter behind, they must have required many centuries to attain their present magnitude. Many of them bear names of familiar objects, from some fancied but often remote resemblance in its shape. One curious mass of stalactite is pointed out as the Flitch of Bacon; another as Poole's Chair. In other parts of the cavern we have the Lions, the Snow Wreaths, the Bee Hives, the Oyster Beds, the Turtles, the Font (an extraordinary crystallisation, seven feet in height), and Mary Queen of Scots' Pillar. This last one is so named from a tradition that it was the furthest point to which the unfortunate queen prosecuted her subterranean journey in the cavern during one of her sojourns at Buxton. It is pendant from the roof, and 569 yards from the entrance. Hobbes, the philosopher and poet, in his poem, "The Wonders of the Peak," published in 1669, thus speaks of Mary's exploration:—

"Having to th' rest of th' Isles eternal shame Honoured this stone with her own splendid name,
For Scotland's Queen, hither by art betrayed,
And by false friendship after, captive made
(As if she did nought but a dungeon want T' express the utmost rigour of restraint),
Coming to view this cave took so much pains,
For all the damp and horror it contains,
To penetrate so far as to this place,
And seeing it, with her own mouth to grace,
As her Non Ultra this now famous stone,
By naming and declaring it her own;
Which, ever since so gloriously install'd,
Has been the Queen of Scots her pillar called."

Many other objects and places of interest lie within easy walking distance of Buxton—Haddon Hall, Axe Edge, The Cat and Fiddle, Chee Tor, &c., which are elsewhere described.

CASTLETON.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of High Peak; petty sessional division, union and rural sanitary district of Chapel-en-le-Frith; county council district of Buxton, and deanery of Eyam. It gives name to a division for the election of a county councillor. Under the new Local Government Act six parish councillors and one rural district councillor are assigned to Castleton. The parish embraces an area of 3,050 acres, ratable value £3,210, and population 550. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor as lessee under the Crown, and the principal owners are R. How Ashton, Esq., J.P., Ellis Eyre, Esq., Samuel Needham, Rushup, the Duchy of Lancaster, J. M. Champion, Esq., Mrs. Champion, the Executors of Joseph Hall, and the Rev. R. J. C. Orde.

The parish is one of surpassing interest, whether we regard its historical associations, its wild and rugged scenery, or the number and variety of its minerals and natural curiosities. The earliest notice of the place occurs in Domesday Book, wherein the manor is described as "Terra Castelli Wi Peverel, in Peches fers," which seems to imply that the castle was built by William Peverel; and the tradition of the neighbourhood is to the same effect. Some writers, however, assign it to a higher antiquity, and see, in a piece of herring-bone masonry in the basement of the keep, evidence of Saxon workmanship. But this is extremely doubtful. Gundeberne and Hundine were owners of the estate immediately before the Norman Conquest; but no castle is associated with their name; and after the Conquest the manor had only the very indefinite designation of "Peverel's Place in the Peak." William Peverel was the illegitimate son of William the Conqueror, and received from his father the honour and forest of Peak, together with thirteen other lordships in this county; and it is probable that he built the castle to guard his possessions.

The Peverels only enjoyed their vast estates for three generations. William Peverel, grandson of the first baron, having poisoned Ranulph, Earl of Chester, sought refuge in Lenton Priory in Nottinghamshire; and then fled the country to avoid the consequences of his crime. The castle and manor were granted by Henry II. to his younger son, John, afterwards King of England; who, in 1204, appointed Hugh Neville governor of the castle. A few years later the barons, who had risen against the tyranny of the King, had possession of the castle; but it was captured for the King, in 1215, by William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby; who, as a recompense, was appointed governor. This office was one of considerable distinction, and was held by some of the highest nobles in the land.

The castle and forest of Peak were part of the dowry of Joan, sister of Edward III., on her marriage with David, son of the King of Scotland; but it afterwards reverted to the Crown; and Edward III., in the 46th year of his reign, granted the castle and forest to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster. Thenceforth they became parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster, and are now in the possession of the Duke of Devonshire as lessee from the Crown, who has the nominal appointment of constable of the castle, and holds a court-leet and court-baron at Easter and Michaelmas.

The castle, now in ruins, crowns a hill, some 300 feet in height, the summit of which can only be gained by a toilsome zigzag ascent. This rock is almost isolated, its only connection with the adjoining hill being a narrow strip of land, so steep and rugged on both sides as to be almost inaccessible. A position better fitted for a fortress, or more easily defended, it would be difficult to find; and in the mode of warfare which prevailed before the invention of gunpowder, this castle must have been almost impregnable.

The keep and part of the outer walls are all that now remain of the fortress; and these enclose the whole summit of the hill. The plan was an irregular parallelogram, with a donjon or keep at the south-west angle, standing at the extreme edge of the rock, which is here quite perpendicular. This keep is quadrangular in form, measuring 21 feet by 19 inside, with walls 8 feet thick and 55 feet high. The masonry is of excellent character, the mortar being as hard as stone itself. The keep consisted of two storeys, in addition to the basement; but the floor that separated them has long disappeared, and the roof also is open to the sky. It was lighted by semicircular windows. The ruined arch of the entrance remains, and also portions of two corner towers. The outer walls show that the castle was of small extent, consisting of little else than the keep and bailey or castle yard. The Peverels are represented as living here in baronial pomp; but the absence of buildings for the accommodation of the large retinue which invariably accompanied a feudal chieftain contradicts the tradition. It is more probable that the fortress was designed as a place of refuge rather than a palatial residence; and it is certain that it was used as a prison, for the Hundred Rolls, and other ancient records, tell of persons immured within its walls.

Whilst the castle was in the possession of the Peverels it was the scene of a grand tournament, which lasted three or four days. Pain Peverel, lord of Whittington, in Shropshire, had two daughters, beautiful and accomplished. The eldest, named Mellet, had many noble suitors; but having inherited the martial spirit of her father, she declared she would marry no one but a knight who had distinguished himself by his prowess in the field. To decide her choice her father proclaimed a tournament to be held at Peverel's Place in the Peake, and invited all the young men of noble birth to enter the lists, and make a fair trial of their skill and valour, at the same time promising to give the victor his daughter for a wife, with his castle of Whittington as a dowry. Many were the knights who entered the lists to compete for so rich a prize, and long and severe were the tilts that took place before the assembled throng. Amongst the competitors was a knight of Lorraine, with a maiden shield of silver and a peacock for his crest. The unknown knight performed prodigies of valour, unhorsing all who came against him. His last encounters were with a baron of Burgoyne and a prince of Scotland, both of whom he vanquished, was hailed the victor, and received the much-coveted prize. His name was Guarine de Metz; and from this marriage sprang the noble family of Fitz-Warrine, lords of Whittington. It is difficult to imagine how the vast throng of knights and their esquires were accommodated, or where the tournament was held, for certainly the space within the castle walls was not only too limited in extent but also unsuited for the purpose, nevertheless the fact is unquestionable. The great Wizzard of the north has thrown the magic of his genius around the castle by making it the scene of one of the most popular of the Waverley Novels—"Peveril of the Peak."

Castleton, which doubtless received its name from the castle that looks down upon it from its rocky height, stands at the head of the beautiful valley of Hope, environed by an amphitheatre of hills that seem to cut it off from communication with the outer world. In addition to its romantic scenery, Castleton possesses other extraordinary attractions for tourists and visitors in its wonderful caverns and natural curiosities. The village is 6 miles N. from Tideswell, 12 N.E. from Buxton, 16 W. from Sheffield, 7 from Chapel-en-le-Frith, and 2 miles from Hope station, on the Dore and Chinley branch of the Midland Railway. This line, which was opened for passenger traffic in Whit-week, 1894, places Castleton within easy access, and will doubtless add largely to the influx of visitors. There are several good hotels, notably "The Castle" and "Nag's Head," which are fitted up with every convenience, and afford excellent accommodation for visitors. Those who prefer the quieter life of a private house can obtain apartments at several of the houses and cottages. Agriculture and the manufacture of rope and twine are the principal industrial occupations. Vases and ornaments of Blue John and other varieties of fluor spar are fabricated by the lissome fingers of local artificers, and exposed for sale with other curiosities.

The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, is an ancient edifice, but shorn of all its ancient beauty by modern churchwarden "improvements." It appears to have been erected in the time of the early Peverels, and exhibits traces of almost every style of ecclesiastical architecture. It consists of chancel, with vestry on the north side, nave, with south porch, and a low embattled tower at the west end, adorned with eight crocketed pinnacles. The church was repaired in 1830, when, with execrable taste, the exterior walls of the nave were covered with stucco. The arch separating the chancel from the nave is a fine example of Norman work, enriched with chevron mouldings. The east window, of three lights, is filled with stained glass, representing Christ's charge to St. Peter, in affectionate remembrance of the Rev. Charles Cecil Bates, M.A., for thirty-five years the faithful vicar of the parish; he died in 1853. Above the altar is a picture of the Adoration of the Magi, attributed to Vandyke. The tower dates from the close of the fifteenth century, and contains a peal of eight modern bells. The font is octagonal in shape, and ancient. The old oak pews remain, curiously carved, many of them bearing the names of their former owners, with 17th century dates. There are few monuments in the church. A marble tablet records the death of John Mawe, the celebrated mineralogist, whose remains are interred in the Church of St. Mary-le-Strand, London; but by his request this memorial was placed in the church of the village where he commenced his mineralogical labours. Another monument bears the following epitaph, said to have been written by the eccentric individual it commemorates:—"To the memory of Micah Hall, gentn., Attorney-at-Law, who died on the 14th of May, 1804, aged 79 years. Quid eram, nescitis; Quid sum, nescitis; Ubi abii, nescitis; Valete." (What I was, you know not; what I am, you know not; whither I am gone, you know not; go away.) The Halls have long been resident in Castleton. The name of Thomas Hall, with the date 1661, occurs on one of the old oak pews; John Hall, 1676; Robert Hall, 1676.

The vestry contains a library of valuable old books left to the parish by a former vicar, the Rev. Frederick Farran, who died in 1817, to which additions were afterwards made by his daughter and Captain Hamilton. There are upwards of 1,000 volumes, chiefly works of divinity, history and biography. Two rare old books, which are always displayed for the inspection of visitors, are two copies of the English Bible, one known as Cranmer's, or the Great Bible, printed in 1539; and the other is a Breeches Bible, of the year 1611. The registers date from 1633.

The church was appropriated to the abbey of Vale Royal in 1302, and a vicarage ordained. After the dissolution of monasteries, the great tithes and the advowson were transferred to the Bishop of Chester, with whom they remained till the middle of the present century, when an exchange was effected with the Bishop of Lichfield. After the formation of the bishopric of Southwell, they were transferred to that see. The tithes were commuted in 1842—the rectorial for £100, and the vicarial for £56; the vicar also claims one-third of the tithe of lead ore. At the Reformation the living was valued at £6 7s. 6d.; it has since been augmented by benefactions and grants of Queen Anne's Bounty, and is now worth £300. The present vicar, the Rev. R. J. C. Orde, LL.M., was appointed in 1892.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village, built in 1809, and the Primitive Methodists one, erected in 1833. There is a good National School, built in 1862 for the accommodation of 126 children; it is mixed, and has an average attendance of 76.

There was formerly a charitable institution called the "Hospital of the Castle of the Peak," of royal foundation, endowed with lands valued, in 1377, at £3 per annum and four bushels of oatmeal for the support of certain paupers and a chaplain. It was situated midway between Castleton and Hope, and continued to fulfil its purpose until the Reformation, when its lands were confiscated by the Crown and the poor inmates turned adrift. John Wymeslow, alias Savage, the last chaplain, obtained a pension of 70s. in the reign of Philip and Mary.

The scene from the summit of Castle Hill is remarkably beautiful, and well repays the visitor for the trial of climbing. Around him lies an amphitheatre of mountains of varied form and elevation. On the east is Winhill and, beyond, Bamford Edge, and in the foreground the spire of Hope church forms a prominent object in the view; on the north is Losehill, and on the west Mam Tor, or Shivering Mountain, raises its huge form to a height of 1,300 feet above the plain. But the chief attraction of Castleton is its extraordinary caverns. At the foot of the Castle Hill is Peak Cavern, or Devil's Hole, as it is sometimes called, the most wonderful of these subterranean cavities. The entrance is hidden from the view of the approaching visitor by a high bank, and bursts on the sight with startling suddenness. The visitor passes through a depressed archway in the rock 120 feet wide and 42 feet high, but singularly regular in its outline. The lofty perpendicular rocks that rise on either side, impress the mind with feelings of wonder and amazement, and when you pass through the stony portals and gaze into the pitchy darkness beyond, awe takes possession of the mind, and it is not without feelings of trepidation that you pursue the further exploration of the Devil's Hole. Within the entrance, a little hive of industry has been long established; here several twine spinners carry on their occupation, a sight which does not harmonize with the feelings of the visitor. Proceeding some little distance into the interior, the roof lowers, the passage contracts, and further progress must be made with the aid of lighted candles. The rocky roof then so low that it is necessary to assume a stooping posture till a spacious alled the Bell House, is reached. Here a stream of water is l, forming a pool, which it was formerly necessary to cross in a flat-coat, the voyager lying flat on his back to prevent his head coming in contact with the projecting points of the superincumbent mass of rock. To obviate these dangers another passage has been made by blasting through the rock, and the journey can now be accomplished with comparative comfort. This passage leads to an immense cavity, 270 feet long, 210 feet wide, and 150 feet high, but the glimmering light of the candles fail to illuminate the wide expanse. Beyond this, are some projecting rocks denominated Roger Rain's House, from the continual dropping of water through the crevices of the roof. Beyond this, and approached by steep ascent, is the Chancel, a sort of natural gallery at a considerable elevation in the rock. Here the explorer is left in the dark whilst the guide proceeds some little distance with the candles, and then there appear three natural arches. This spot is 1,110 feet from the entrance of the cavern, and 750 feet below the surface. The path leads hence to another opening called the Devil's Cellar, where the oppressive stillness is broken by the roaring sound of water rushing through unexplored recesses in the mountain. Then you pick your way amongst broken fragments of rock for about 50 yards, crossing and recrossing a stream that intercepts the path, to the Halfway House. Hence the passage leads under three semicircular archways, formed out of the solid rock by the hand of nature, to a vast concavity in the roof in the shape of a bell, and hence designated Great Tom of Lincoln. From this point the roof gradually lowers and the passage contracts, till at a distance of about 40 yards there is only room for the stream that flows through the subterranean channel. In retracing his steps the explorer experiences an indescribable feeling of relief when the first speck of daylight is seen through the distant entrance. The total length of this cavern is said to be 2,300 feet. Its dark recesses are traversed by a stream of water that enters the ground at Swallow Holes, near Perry Foot, three miles west from Castleton, and flows also through the Speedwell mine, issuing again into daylight near the entrance of Peak Cavern.

This remarkable cavern is undoubtedly the work of nature, and various theories have been advanced to account for its formation. Some maintain that it was caused by the shrinking and contracting of the limestone during the process of subcrystallisation; others, that it was the product of volcanic action; and some attribute it to the erosive action of water.

Half a mile from Castleton, at the entrance to the Winnatts, is the Speedwell Mine, another of the Peak's wonders. It was originally opened about 120 years ago by a company of Staffordshire proprietors in search of lead ore, but the speculation proved a failure, and completely ruined a Mr. Oakden, the principal proprietor. For eleven years three sets of workmen—five to each set—were employed night and day in the work of excavation. The quantity of powder used in blasting amounted to 51,645lbs., and the sum of £14,000 was expended without any profitable results. The mine was finally abandoned, and it remains an object of attraction to the curious, and a monument of unrequited labour. A flight of 106 steps leads down to a "level" or subterranean canal hewn through the rock for nearly 800 yards. Along this the visitor is propelled in a boat, the rocky roof above his head being only high enough to allow him to sit upright. The canal extends into the very heart of the hill, 450 feet below the surface. Candles are placed against the sides at intervals; these can be seen the whole length, and the reflection of the two converging lines of lights on the water produces a pleasing effect. Veins of lead are exposed as the boat passes along, but none rich enough to repay the cost of working. At a distance of 750 yards from the commencement, the canal pierces a stupendous cavity in the mountain, the height and depth of which have never yet been ascertained. Rockets of sufficient strength to ascend 450 feet have been fired, but the brilliant lights thrown out on exploding failed to render the roof visible. Across the opening a platform protected by an iron railing has been erected for the convenience of visitors. Here, as you look down into the black abyss, not inaptly termed the Bottomless Pit, and listen to the roaring sound of rushing waters which you cannot see, the mind is at once filled with a sensation of the profoundest awe. Into this boiling cauldron 40,000 tons of rubbish, produced in blasting the rock for the canal, are said to have been tipped without any apparent diminution of its depth or extent. In the "Beauties of England and Wales" it is said that the depth of standing water in this pool is 320 feet. It is probable, however, that there are other caverns through which the water flows, and into which the rubbish was doubtless carried by the current. The canal which has been driven to a considerable distance beyond the fissure, discharges its superfluous water into this dismal pool with a roaring sound. A blast of gunpowder discharged within the mine creates a peculiar sensation as you listen to the echoes of the detonation reverberating from side to side with appalling loudness.

The Blue John Cavern is another and not the least interesting of the wonders of the Peak, and can be explored with very little discomfort or inconvenience. It is situated near the foot of Tray Cliff, opposite Mam Tor, about one mile from Castleton, and is the grand depository of the beautiful "Blue John" spar. This fluor spar is found in various parts of Derbyshire and Saxony; but only in this isolated cliff has it been obtained in sufficient abundance to repay the cost of working. But even here it is not plentiful, and brings from £50 to £800 per ton in the rough state, according to the size and quality of the pieces. It is seldom obtained in pieces of sufficient magnitude to work into large vases. The largest one ever made is in the sculpture gallery at Chatsworth. This spar is a fluoride of calcium—a combination of fluoric acid and lime—and the exquisite richness and variety of colouring have long made it highly prized for articles of personal and domestic adornment. It is highly probable that the Romans became acquainted with it whilst searching for lead in the Tray Cliff; and that they used it for ornamental purposes has been placed beyond doubt by the discovery, a few years ago, of two large Blue John vases among the ruins of Pompeii.

The entrance to the cavern is down a flight of steps and along a narrow passage, from the roof of which stalactites are pendant. This leads past workings from which the Blue John has been extracted, to the Grand Crystallised Cavern,—its roof some 90 feet high, begemmed with sparkling crystals that scintillate in variegated colours when lit by magnesian wire or a Bengal light. Near this is shown a small water-worn cavern where the stalactites pendant from the roof resembled the pipes of an organ, but these beautiful incrustations have been wantonly destroyed by visitors that they might carry off the stalactites. Beyond this, for about 90 feet, is a very fine deposit of carbonate of lime. Another cavern shown is called Lord Mulgrave's Dining Room, because it was here that his lordship entertained the miners who accompanied him in his three days' exploration of the mine to discover another outlet. This spacious opening is 60 feet wide and 150 feet high; and some distance beyond this is a cleft in the rock 250 feet high, and about 20 feet wide, called the Variegated Cavern. The crystallisations here are extremely beautiful from their abundance and variegated colouring. One side is covered with stalactite incrustations, and the cavern, when lit by magnesian wire or Bengal light, glitters like a fairy palace. Though the mine has been explored to a much greater distance, the Variegated Cavern is the furthest point to which visitors are usually conducted.

Castleton has long been famous for its lead mines, though at present the industry is almost discontinued. The Odin Mine, near the foot of Mam Tor, is probably the oldest mine in Derbyshire. There is reason to believe that the Romans, who had a station at Brough in the immediate vicinity, were not unacquainted with it; and it is certain that it was worked by the Saxons and Danes, who named it after one of their Scandinavian divinities. The lead ore obtained here, yields about three ounces of silver to the ton of lead. The mine is entered by a level, and can be explored without much inconvenience.

A little south-west of the village, just beyond the Speedwell Mine, is a deep and narrow chasm, about one mile in length, which has the appearance of having at some remote period been rent asunder by a convulsion of nature. On either side are lofty limestone cliffs, whose summits are split and rent into a variety of fantastic forms. In some places huge rocky masses project over, impressing the beholder beneath with a fear for his own safety; and in others they tower upwards like steeples and turrets, imitating in wild mimicry, castle and cathedral ruins. Through this narrow gorge the wind ceaselessly sweeps, howling and whistling in the rocky recesses, from which circumstance it has been called the Windgates or Winyates, or in its contracted form Winnats. This ravine is not without its tale of horror. About the middle of last century, a lady and gentleman, travelling on horseback, were waylaid and murdered whilst riding through the pass. The couple were strangers, and their names or whence they came, was never known. The motive of the crime was robbery, the booty amounting to about £200. The bodies were buried in the quiet hours of the night, and the perpetrators of the crime would never have been known, had not the last survivor confessed on his death-bed that he and other four villagers were the murderers. The couple were believed to be on a matrimonial excursion, probably on their way to the Church of Peak Forest, which being then extra-parochial, was occasionally resorted to for the solemnisation of runaway marriages.

Local Worthy.—Elias Hall, fossilist, mineralogist, and geologist, is an example of genius in the humbler walks of life. He was essentially a self-taught man, and devoted his whole life to the study of nature's antiquities. As a practical geologist he attained considerable eminence, and may be regarded as the father of that science in Derbyshire. His most important work is a geological and mineralogical map of the "Midland Coal Field of England," embracing Lancashire, Yorkshire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, and Nottinghamshire. This map, which is dedicated to Professor Sedgwick, vice-president of the Geological Society, is an example of his extensive researches, and his great skill in delineating with graphic power and minuteness the stratification of the district. He also completed carefully executed models of the Peak in Derbyshire, and the Lake District of Cumberland and Westmorland, &c., in which, with the aid of colour, he has delineated the geological features with admirable clearness and accuracy. He enlarged our knowledge of the earth's structure by his patient investigations and unceasing application; but he never received adequate recompense for his labours. He died in Castleton (where he was born), in the ninetieth year of his age. He lies buried in the churchyard, and over his remains is the following inscription:—
"In memory of Elias Hall, the geologist, who died on the 30th day of December, 1853, aged 89 years. Born of parents in humble life, and having a large family to provide for, yet he devoted himself to the study of geology for 70 years, with powers of originality and industry rarely surpassed. To mark the last resting-place of one who had worked so long and so hard for the public, a few of his friends and admirers living at a distance have placed this stone."

CHAPEL-EN-LE-FRITH.

This is an extensive parish, embracing 9,752 acres and 4,647 inhabitants. It comprises Bowden Edge, Combs Edge, and Bradshaw Edge, which are separately assessed for highways, but for all other rating purposes they form a single township called Chapel-en-le-Frith, the ratable value of which is £24,322. The principal landowners are W. S. B. Slack, W. H. G. Bagshawe, Exors. of H. C. Renshaw, Wm. Fleming, Jas. W. Lowe, S. Needham, Henry Kirke, Henry Shaw, Exors. of Davenport Goodman, Arthur Sykes, Marriott's Exors., R. H. Hyde & Sons, Chas. B. Bowles, John Slack, and Adam Fox.

Chapel-en-le-Frith is in the High Peak hundred and deanery of Buxton; and is the head of a petty sessional division, county court district, union and rural sanitary district. For carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, ten parish councillors and six district councillors have been assigned to Chapel-en-le-Frith.

The district was part of the Royal Forest of the Peak, and is still included in that manor, of which the Duke of Devonshire is lessee under the Duchy of Lancaster, and a Court-leet is held annually in October.

The town is small, but pleasantly situated on the side of an eminence which rises from a deep valley environed by lofty hills on every side, six miles N. from Buxton, 14 S.E. from Stockport, and near the station of its own name on the Manchester branch of the Midland Railway; and three-quarters of a mile from the station on the London and North-Western Railway. The town had formerly its market, held on Thursday, but it has now been obsolete for some years. Fairs are held on the Thursday preceding February 14th, March 3rd and 29th, Thursday before Easter, April 30th, Holy Thursday, and the third Thursday after October 11th, and Thursday before November 23rd. A cattle market is held on the first Thursday in each month.

In early times, when Peak Forest was a royal hunting ground, a number of the foresters, verderers, and keepers had their habitations here; and in 1225 they built themselves a chapel, which became known as the chapel in the frith, i.e. forest. It was dedicated to St. Thomas-à-Becket, and consecrated by Bishop Savenby. According to an Inquisition, held in 1318, it appears that the bishop also conferred upon it rights of baptism and burial, thus constituting it a parochial church. The edifice was almost wholly rebuilt last century, and displays that utter want of architectural taste that characterised the Georgian period. It consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and west tower, in which are six bells. In 1893 the chancel was thoroughly restored, an organ chamber added, and the vestry rebuilt at a cost of about £1,800. Churches in former times were frequently used for secular purposes, and in 1591 "the church of the Chappell in the Frith" was utilised as a court of justice. At a later period it was converted into a temporary prison, in which, after the defeat of the Scottish army at Preston in 1648, fifteen hundred soldiers captured in the fight were confined from September 14th to September 30th. The parish registers tell a fearful tale of the havoc death made amongst the poor fellows during that time from hunger, thirst, and overcrowding. "There were buried of them before the rest went away 44 persons, and more buried Oct. 2 who were not able to march, and the same yt died by the way before they came to Cheshire 10 and more."* The living is a vicarage, worth £274, in the gift of the parishioners, and held by the Rev. Jas. Given, M.A., LL.D.

The houses are built of gritstone, and though somewhat antiquated present a clean and comfortable appearance. The principal street is steep, and the market place is situated at a height of 776 feet above the sea level. The town is supplied with gas and water, and is under the jurisdiction of a Parish Council. The Town Hall, in Market-street, is a good stone building erected by Thomas Slacke, Esq., M.D., in 1851, at a cost of upwards of £2,000. The Mechanics' Institute, also in the same street, is a large stone structure, containing reading room, which is well supplied with newspapers, magazines, and periodicals; a billiard room, and a debating room. The interior is exceptionally well lighted, and some very handsome pictures adorn the walls.

Town End Wesleyan Chapel, built by subscription in 1874, at a cost of £2,000, is a handsome building of stone in the Gothic style, and buttressed. The interior fittings are all of pitchpine, and the walls are wainscotted all round with the same material. The pulpit is of elegant design, and there is also a handsome organ, procured at a cost of £350. On the ground floor 460 persons can be accommodated, and the two galleries will seat 100 more. There are two handsome marble tablets in the walls, to the memory of James Heald, Esq., J.P., D.L., and Eli Atkin; and two memorial brasses, one to Mary Ann Hyde and the other to William Arthur Millward. Adjacent to the chapel is the day and Sunday school, built in 1853, at a cost of £558, and enlarged a few years ago at an expense of £500. There is accommodation for 200 children, and an average attendance of 77.

The Primitive Methodist Bethel is a neat edifice of cut stone, erected in 1852, at a cost of £700. It is oblong in form, with gallery at the west end, and lighted by semicircular headed-windows. It is in the Bradwell circuit.

Bowden Edge embraces a small portion of the town of Chapel-en-le-Frith, and stretches thence about three miles north and east. Bowden was formerly the property and seat of a family that took their name from the place. They are said to have been seated at Bowden Hall for about 400 years, and one of them is supposed to have erected the chancel of Chapel-en-le-Frith Church, which is still sometimes called Bowden Chapel. The estate passed from the family on the death of George Bowden, the last male heir, in 1680, to the Degges. The Hibbertsons were the next owners, from whom it passed to the Slacks.

Bagshawe is a small hamlet, cosily situated between two hills, richly clothed with verdure, and commanding a fine view of Chapel-en-le-Frith. The place bears the appearance of antiquity; and hard by is an ancient yew tree, hollow in the centre. The Bagshawe family probably originated from this hamlet. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1886, in which services are conducted by local preachers.

Ford Hall is an ancient looking mansion, surrounded on all sides by steep hills, and enclosed by luxuriant plantations that completely hide it from the vulgar gaze. It is the seat and property of W. H. Greaves-Bagshawe, Esq., J.P., D.L. The Bagshawes have been possessed of property in the Peak from time immemorial. They were seated at Ridge Hall as early as A.D. 1141, and there twelve generations of the family spent their lives. An early Bagshawe was one of the King's foresters, as shown by the bugle horn that figures in their crest. The Rev. William Bagshawe, the famous Puritan divine, known as "The Apostle of the Peak," resided here; and at Malcalf, a small hamlet in the neighbourhood, he erected a chapel, which he served assiduously till his death in 1702.

Sparrow Pit is a small village on the Castleton road. A commodious chapel was erected here by the Wesleyans in 1892, at a cost of £800. To the left of the road, about midway between Sparrow Pit and Barmoor Clough, is the Ebbing and Flowing Well, which formerly ranked amongst the wonders of the Peak, but the construction of the railway has, in some way or other, interfered with the spring that supplied it, and the phenomena has ceased to appear. At the extreme end of the parish, on the Buxton and Castleton road, is Slack Hall, an old-fashioned stone building, erected, according to the inscription over the door, in 1727. It is the property of the Slacks. At Maglow, on the farm of Mr. Jabez Shirt, are the remains of a Roman encampment. Stoneyford is a small hamlet about 1½ miles E. from the parish church. A saddening and depressing feeling creeps over the mind of a stranger visiting this sequestered spot, where even the sun seems to begrudge the light it gives. The scenery is wild and desolate in the extreme. There is not a single redeeming feature in the landscape, and a preparatory residence here would, we fancy, rob Siberian ostracism of some of its terrors. Blackbrook, Plumpton, The Wash, and Bowden Head, are other hamlets in Bowden Edge. At the latter place there is a small endowed school, erected in 1867, by John Slack, Esq., of Bowden Hall.

BRADSHAW EDGE includes the greater part of the town, and extends westward to the extremity of the county. Bradshaw was the original home of the family bearing that name. The hall, their old patrimonial seat, rebuilt in 1620, by Francis Bradshawe, is a good specimen of the architecture of the period. On one of the staircases is inscribed

"A man without mercy, of mercy shall miss
But he shall have mercy that merciful is."

"Love God but not gold."

The ancient gateway leading to the hall is an ornamental structure, surmounted by a cornice, above which is a pediment bearing the Bradshaw arms carved in stone. The hall is now occupied as two farm houses.

The family of Bradshaw, of Bradshaw, now represented by Mr. Charles Eyre Bradshaw Bowles, J.P., appears to have been settled on the lands near Chapel-en-le-Frith as early as King John's reign, when (according to an Assart Deed, examined by the writer of this article, in the Record office) Ivo de Bradshaugh had leave from the King to clear a portion of the forest in Bowden (Chapel-en-le-Frith) for a dwelling place. In 36 Henry III. Ranulph and Walter de Bradshaugh are recorded in the same parchment roll as living at Bowden, and a deed in the possession of the present representative, dated 1332, proves that John de Bradshawe, Mary, his wife, and Richard, his son, were possessed of lands in the same place. By a Deed of Entail, dated 1429, "John Bradshawe de Bradshawe" entailed the "lands situated at Bradshawe" on William, his eldest son, those at "Lightburch" on his younger sons. This William appears, by certain deeds, to have resided at Bradshaw Hall, and to have died there in 1483, leaving his only son Henry his heir, whose curiously worded will, proved April, 1523, is published in full in the Reliquary (new series, vol. iv., No. 2). He left his grandson Richard, a minor, his heir, but the Bradshaw estates eventually passed to his second son, William Bradshaw, of Marple Hall, County Chester, who dying in 1562 left four sons, of whom the second, Henry, settled at Marple Hall, which he eventually bought, and was grandfather of John Bradshaw, the regicide. The eldest son, Godfrey, inherited Bradshaw Hall, and became, by his marriage with Emma Shalcrosse, of Shalcrosse, County Derby, the father of Francis Bradshaw, of Abney and Bradshaw (vide under Abney), from whom the present owner, Mr. Bowles, of Abney Manor, is descended.

An old Roman road passes through the township, past Diglach, in the direction of Whaley Bridge, and on the summit of Chinley Churn, 1,493 feet above the sea level, are the vestiges of a Roman camp.

Whitehough is a small village $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W. from Chapel-en-le-Frith. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, erected in 1840; and here is a paper mill which gives employment to about 160 persons. At Gnat Hole there is a national school, erected in 1872. It is also used as a mission chapel. In this township, adjoining Whaley Bridge, are the print-works of the Bingswood Printing Co., Ltd., who here employ about 260 hands.

Coombs, or Coombs Edge, extends from Chapel-en-le-Frith, 3 miles S.W. In the south is an extensive tract known as Coomb Moss. Stretching along the east side of this moss is Black Edge—a mountain ridge attaining an elevation of 1,670 feet above the sea level. The Wesleyan Methodists have a small chapel and day school in the hamlet of Coombs; and Church of England service is held monthly on Sunday and each alternate Tuesday in the reading room. Tunstead is a hamlet, pleasantly situated on the brow of a steep hill. At the house of Mr. E. Dixon is preserved a human skull, concerning which many weird and improbable stories are related by the villagers. It is locally known as “Dickey,” and has been kept at this house from time immemorial. Various stories are current as to the original ownership of the ghastly relic. At Cadster Hill is a small barytes manufactory. In this neighbourhood is a reservoir, covering about 80 acres, for supplying the Peak Forest Canal.

Chapel-en-le-Frith Poor Law Union embraces an area of 83,492 acres and a population of 23,656, and includes the following parishes and townships:—Aston, Bamford, Brough and Shatton, Buxton, Castleton, Chapel-en-le-Frith, Chinley, Bugsworth and Brownside, Derwent, Edale, Fairfield, Fernilee, Hartington Upper Quarter, Hope, Hope Woodlands, Peak Forest, Thornhill, and Wormhill. The workhouse is a commodious structure, erected in 1840, at a cost of £3,500, for the accommodation of 100 paupers.

CHARLESWORTH.

This parish comprises the townships of Charlesworth, and Ludworth and Chisworth, containing 4,000 acres and 2,327 inhabitants. It is in the hundred of High Peak; county court district, petty sessional division, poor law union and deanery of Glossop.

The township of Charlesworth contains 15,261 acres of land lying on the south-west side of Glossop. For the purpose of carrying out the Local Government Act of 1894 eight parish councillors have been assigned to Charlesworth, and the township divided into two wards, No. 1 Ward comprising Charlesworth parliamentary polling district, and No. 2 Ward the rest of the parish. The former elects two guardians and two district councillors, and the latter one of each.

Charlesworth, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was known as Cheveneswude, and then formed part of the crown lands. In 1294 Peter de Charlesworth died seized of certain lands in this township and elsewhere in the parish of Glossop, which he held for the Abbot of Basingwerk. In 1308 Robert de Charlesworth gave to the said abbot 80 acres of arable land in Charlesworth, in addition to smaller endowments in Simondley and Chunal. In consequence of this gift, the abbot established a grange here, in which resided one or more monks of the order, whose duty was to look after the interests of the monastery. He also erected a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, which was probably at first served by one of the monks from the grange. In 1329 the abbot obtained the royal permission to establish a market at Charlesworth on Wednesdays, and a yearly fair to be held on the festival of the patron saint of the chapel.

Local tradition assigns another origin to the chapel. According to this legend, a traveller on his way from Manchester to London was benighted, and lost his way on the Charlesworth moors. Unable to proceed, he prayed to God and the Virgin Mary for protection, and vowed that, if he were delivered from his danger, he would build a chapel on the spot. Scarcely had the vow been uttered when a shepherd passing that way found him, and conveyed him to a neighbouring house. He accomplished his journey in safety, and on arriving at his home in Ireland, he made an oak-timbered roof, brought it over to England, and, in fulfilment of his vow, built the chapel on the brow of Charlesworth hill. Popular traditions have generally a substratum of truth in them, and it is possible that the old chapel may have been restored as a thank-offering by some traveller who had been providentially saved whilst crossing these moors.

The monks of Basingwerk retained possession of the land till the Reformation, and their memory is perpetuated in an old road over the hill, which is, to this day, known as Monk's Road.

In the early part of the reign of Henry VIII. a chantry was founded in the chapel of Charlesworth by William Wolley, of Riber, in the parish of Matlock, who left certain lands in Chesterfield, Newbold, Tapton, and Dronfield—which lands had been given to him by Ralph Heathcote, bell-founder, of Chesterfield—to provide a priest to say mass for his soul. This endowment escaped the lynx-eyed commissioners who drew up the chantry roll; but shortly afterwards, in the second year of Elizabeth, the land was taken from the chapel and conferred on Sir George Howard. The chapel also appears to have been transferred with the land to the Howards, and as they remained firm in their attachment to the old faith, it is probable that no effort was made either to preserve the fabric or to provide for the performance of the reformed service. The parliamentary commissioners of 1650, report of Charlesworth that it is fit to be disused and the place united to Glossop, from which it would seem that it was then occasionally used for service, which at that time was Presbyterian.

After the Restoration of the monarchy, the chapel was allowed to remain in the hands of the Presbyterians by the Howards, who themselves, under the severe penalties of a cruel and unjust law, could only hear mass by stealth, when some priest in disguise secretly visited their mansion. The Presbyterians subsequently became identified with the Independents, and at a later period they became known as Congregationalists. In 1797 the chapel was entirely rebuilt, and not a trace of the original edifice now remains. Several small endowments have been left to this chapel for the benefit of the dissenting minister, and, should there be no dissenting minister, the said endowments are to be applied to the poor or to educate children. In connection with the chapel is a school, with accommodation for 250, and an average attendance of 99.

The parish church, dedicated to St. John Baptist, was erected in 1849, at a cost of £2,700. It is a cruciform structure, comprising nave, chancel, north and south transepts, and tower, but possesses no architectural beauty. The living is a vicarage, worth £180 yearly with residence, in the gift of the Crown and the Bishop of Southwell alternately, and held by the Rev. G. W. Collins, M.A. A commodious National School, with master's house, was erected in 1850, at an outlay of £530. There are 63 names on the books, and an average attendance of 44.

The Particular Baptists have a chapel, erected in 1835 at a cost of about £700. It will seat 300.

The village, which is of considerable extent and once had its market, is situated on the Marple road, two miles S.W. from Glossop and one mile from Mottram station, on the M., S. & L. railway. There are two extensive manufactories of rope, twine, and cotton banding. Hole House Mill is the property of James Rowbottom, and the same firm carry on cotton doubling at Chew Wood Mill, Chisworth, and cotton spinning at Hurst Mill, Glossop. Messrs. John Booth & Son employ a considerable number of hands in the manufacture of cotton bands, ropes, and twines.

About a mile N.W. from Charlesworth is the hamlet of Gamesley, comprising several farms extending to the borders of Cheshire. Here are the vestiges of a Roman camp, known as Melandra Castle, from which a Roman road led over the moors to the station at Brough.

LUDWORTH AND CHISWORTH forms a joint township containing about 2,550 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Lord Howard of Glossop. Under the Parish and District Councils Act, Ludworth and Chisworth form a parish divided into two wards—Ludworth and Chisworth—each co-extensive with its own highway district. The former ward returns three guardians and three rural district councillors, and the latter one guardian and one rural district councillor. There are eight parish councillors.

Marple Bridge is a thriving village on the banks of the river Goyte, which here divides Derbyshire from Cheshire. The scenery in the district is very attractive, and the village is much frequented by pleasure seekers. The Congregational Church is a handsome structure in the Perpendicular Gothic style, built in 1887, at a cost of about £3,000. The old chapel, built in 1787, is now used as a Sunday school and for technical educational purposes, and is known as the Congregational Hall. The first chapel was erected shortly after the passing of the Act of Uniformity in 1662, through the labours of the Rev. Wm. Bagshaw, the Apostle of the Peak, one of the 2,000 ministers ejected from the Church of England. The Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Mary, was erected by Lord Howard, in 1859. It possesses few architectural pretensions, but the interior decorations are handsome. A lofty Gothic arch separates the chancel from the nave, and on either side is a smaller arch leading to a side chapel. These arches spring from clustered granite columns, and spanning the central one is an alabaster screen elaborately sculptured. The decorated walls and roof of the chancel are rich in gold and colour. On the north wall is represented the Ascension, and on the opposite side the Annunciation. Behind the altar is an oil painting of considerable merit, representing Christ restoring sight to the blind man. The windows are filled with stained glass, exhibiting full length figures of various saints; and handsome statues of Our Lord and the Blessed Virgin Mary stand on pedestals on either side of the sanctuary. The decorations cost £1,400. In connection with the church is a day school, attended by about 50 children. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel on Compstall-road, rebuilt in 1893, at a cost of £1,800. It is a handsome building of stone, with a Sunday school on the ground floor. Attached is a burial ground.

Lane Ends, Holly Bank, Limefield, and Mill Brow are small villages in Ludworth.

Chisworth is a scattered village and hamlet, four miles S.W. from Glossop. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected here in 1891, at a cost of £1,000. It is a handsome edifice in the pure Gothic style; the interior is bright and cheerful, and elegantly furnished throughout in pitchpine. There are several stained-glass windows on each side, which admit a flood of tinted light. Attached is a small graveyard, in which lie the remains of James Coope, one of the founders of the society.

Compstall Road is a considerable village on the Derbyshire side of the river Etherow, which is here crossed by a bridge, on the other side of which is Compstall in Cheshire.

DERWENT WOODLANDS.

This is an extensive and thinly populated parish, including the townships of Derwent and Hope Woodlands, which embrace an area of about 25,000 acres. It is in the hundred of High Peak, county council division of Castleton, Buxton county court district; Chapel-en-le-Frith petty sessional division, union and rural district; and deanery of Eyam. Under the new Local Government Act one district councillor has been assigned to each of the two townships.

The township of Derwent comprises 3,482 acres of land enclosed in 1808, and about 1,500 acres of common; ratable value £1,418, and population 191. The landowners are the Duke of Norfolk; Duke of Devonshire, lord of the manor; Duke of Rutland; Geo. Henry Cammell, Esq., Hathersage; Exors. of J. Cotterill; Exors. of T. W. Rodgers, Sheffield; Mrs. Riggall, J. G. Rouksley, H. Tommasons, and G. K. Wilson & Brothers. The scenery is varied and picturesque, and in many parts wild and romantic. On the west side flows the river Derwent, dividing this township from Woodlands, and passing in its course through the hamlet of Ashopton, where it receives the water of the Ashop and Ladybower brook. Here is a commodious and well appointed inn much frequented by tourists, and where votaries of the rod and line may obtain fishing tickets for the Derwent.

On the east side of the dale rises a lofty mountain ridge known as Derwent Edge, where the huge rocky masses assume some strange and fantastic forms. From the summit is obtained a charming view, extending over Derwent dale with its winding river, and beyond over hills and valleys, to Kinder Scout, Losehill, Madwoman's Stones, Lord's Seat, and Mam Tor. The sides of the dale are embellished with fine specimens of sycamore, fir, pine, mountain ash, lady birch, &c, whose varied green tints add a richness to the landscape.

John, Earl of Mortaigne, and afterwards King of England, gave a large tract of land here to the Abbey of Welbeck; and subsequently the remaining lands were given by Oliver de Longford, who inherited through his mother a moiety of the manor of Hathersage, in which this district was included. The monks were of the Premonstratensian Order, and devoted much of their time to the cultivation of the land. They had a grange here, a portion of which still remains, and is used as a farmhouse, known as the Abbey; and they also erected four chapels on various parts of their extensive estate. At the Reformation these lands passed into lay hands.

One of these chapels stood near the site of the present Parish Church. The pre-Reformation building having become dilapidated was pulled down in 1757, and a smaller and much inferior one erected on the site. The edifice, which, says Dr. Cox, had neither antiquity nor beauty to recommend it, was superseded by the present Church of SS. James and John, the foundation stone of which was laid by Lord George Cavendish, M.P., in 1867. The tower and spire were added in 1873. The total cost was £2,020. It is a handsome edifice, charmingly situated in the valley of the Derwent, and forms a harmonious picture from every point of view. It is built in the Geometrical style of architecture, from plans prepared by William White, Esq., F.S.A., Wimpole-street, London, and consists of chancel with aisle, nave with aisle of two arcades, south porch, and tower and spire of good proportions. The stone used is local sandstone, which is of a warm and pleasant colour. The windows are filled with geometric tracery. The roof is open-timbered with tinted ceiling between the rafters. The walls of the chancel are finished internally, and those of the nave are plastered. The chancel is furnished with carved choir stalls of pitchpine, and the nave is fitted with open benches, which are free to all parishioners. The east window is placed somewhat high, to admit of the reredos. A Caen stone pulpit, of neat design and enriched by delicate carving, stands in the nave. Some old 14th century stones, which had been re-used in the erection of the late chapel, have been rebuilt into the walls of the present church. The old font, with its long octagonal shaft and disproportionate basin, has been retained. It bears the date of 1672, and the name, Henry Balguy. The church plate includes an ancient alms dish of Dutch manufacture, with a representation of the Fall of Adam and Eve in the garden of Eden, in repoussé work; a solid silver paten, the gift of Dr. Denman; and a very rare silver-gilt chalice, of Elizabethan date, richly chased, with cover or lid.

Previous to 1872, Derwent was a chapelry under Hathersage. In that year it was constituted a separate parish, consisting of the two townships, which give it its present name. The living is a vicarage, net value £170 per annum, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held, since 1888, by the Rev. John Edmund Andrew, B.A., Caius College, Cambridge.

The National School, erected in 1877 at a cost of £1,600, is a substantial building, consisting of large room, and a raised classroom, separated from the main room by folding doors, forming a permanent platform for concerts, meetings, &c. There is accommodation for 100 children, and an average attendance of 40.

The village, if the few scattered houses it contains can be so designated, occupies a secluded situation in the vale of the Derwent, and about two miles above Ashopton, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Bamford railway station. On the right bank of the river, which is here spanned by a pack-horse bridge of two arches, is Derwent Hall, built by the Balguys in 1672. Subsequently it was purchased by the Newdigates, from whom it passed to the Duke of Norfolk, by whom it has been almost entirely rebuilt, and is the occasional residence of his Grace. There is a very fine collection of old oak furniture in the house, dating from the Stuart period. The entrance hall is hung with three pieces of ancient tapestry, each measuring about 11 feet by 10. The subjects are obviously classical, but the scenes are mostly conjectural. A descriptive account of them is given in "Derbyshire Tapestries," by the Rev. Charles Kerry, in the Derbyshire Archaeological and Natural History Society's "Journal," 1894.

Adjoining the hall is a very beautiful Catholic church, built by His Grace the Duke of Norfolk in 1877, and dedicated to St. Henry. The style is Early English. The east window is a very fine specimen of pictorial art by Hardman, Birmingham, representing various scenes in the life of the patron saint. The pews and all the interior fittings are of the best oak. The priest-in-charge is the Rev. Francis Morris Hayward, who resides at the presbytery a little N.E. of the church. A school, with teacher's house attached, was built by the noble Duke in 1881.

HOPE WOODLANDS is an extensive township, stretching from Ashopton about six miles up the valley of the Ashop, and containing 20,499 acres, of which 12,358 are moorland, owned by the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor. The following have also land in the township:—Mrs. Pearson, A. W. Slack, Esq. (Buxton), Ed. Firth, Esq. (Hope), John Wilcockson, Charles Greaves, Esq. (Rowlee, Hopewoodlands), Mrs. H. Bridge, John Hadfield, and Mrs. Fox. The total ratable value is £3,617, and the population in 1891 was 232. The river Ashop runs in a south-easterly direction through the whole length of the township, between two lofty mountain ridges. The scenery along the valley is exceedingly beautiful, and extensive woodlands enrich the landscape. Along the mountain ridge, on the west side of the river, runs an old Roman road. There is an old stone guide post called the "Pillar," bearing the date 1737, which is supposed to have been the shaft of a wayside cross. Near this stood one of the four chapels erected by the monks of Welbeck. A little further up the valley, on the opposite side of the river, is Rowlee, the residence of the Balguys, previous to the erection of Derwent Hall in 1672. It is the property and residence of Charles Greaves, Esq., whose family is said to have resided in Woodland nearly 500 years. At the extremity of the township is Snake Inn, a commodious and comfortable house in a very out-of-the-way place, but which is well patronized by visitors and tourists. Fishing tickets can be obtained here. Beyond the inn rises Kinder Scout, for which this is the most convenient centre. The inn is seven miles S.E. from Glossop, whence all letters are received. There is a Wesleyan Chapel near the centre of the valley, erected in 1868. The site was given by the Duke of Devonshire, who also defrayed the cost of erection.

The soil is peaty, encumbent on gritstone. The township is noted for its breed of sheep, which produce the "celebrated Woodlands mutton."

EDALE.

This is an extensive parish and township in the hundred of High Peak, electoral division of Castleton, county court district of Buxton, poor law union and petty sessional division of Chapel-en-le-Frith, and rural deanery of Eyam. The total superficial extent is 7,087 acres, of which a considerable portion is unenclosed moorland. The ratable value is £3,063, and the population in 1891 was 955, now (1894) 350. The census of 1891 included the navvies and others imported into the parish, and employed in the construction of the railway connecting the two branches of the Midland system running into Manchester and Sheffield. This proved a difficult and costly undertaking, on account of the mountainous nature of the district; and men are now busily engaged sinking shafts, 900 feet in depth, to the tunnel which pierces Cowburn Hill. The land-owners are the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor; Right Hon. and Rev. Lord Scarsdale, W. N. Champion, Esq., John M. Champion, Esq., W. H. G. Bagshaw, Esq., Ford Hall; John Bateman Bagshaw, Esq., Highlow Hall, Hathersage; James Carrington, Thomas Carrington, Exors. of Robert Carrington, Exors. of Joseph Tym, G. W. Shirt, Mrs. M. A. Goddard, James Goddard, Mrs. M. A. Tym, Mrs. M. D. Robinson, G. W. Dearnley, Nicholas Tym, Hector Christie, Esq., and a few others. The soil is various—hazel in some places, peat, clay, and strong land in others; it is chiefly in grass, but a few oats are grown.

The parish occupies a beautiful vale, which is hemmed in on all sides by rugged and lofty mountains. The principal peaks of the ridge on the north are Kinder Scout (2,082 feet), the highest point in the county; Grindlow, Crowden, and Ringing Roger; on the south rise Mam Tor (1,709 feet), signifying Mother Hill in ancient British speech, called also Shivering Mountain from the circumstance that the outer crust disintegrates by exposure to the air, and rolls down the slope; Lord's Seat (1,816 feet), Back Tor, and Lose Hill (1,572 feet); bounding the east is Win Hill, and on the west is Cowburn, 1,675 feet above the sea level. The suggestive names of Win Hill and Lose Hill were applied to those eminences, if we may believe local traditions, to perpetuate the memory of a battle that was fought here in the far-off days of the Heptarchy between the armies of two Saxon kings. The hill on which the victors were encamped has ever since been known as Win Hill, and the opposite hill, occupied by the vanquished, still bears its ominous name. The river Noe has its source on the southern slopes of Kinder Scout, and thence flows in a serpentine course through the dale between green meadows and rocky chasms, receiving in its progress the numerous sparkling rills that flow from the mountains on either side, and finally unites with the Derwent at Shatton, midway between Hope and Hathersage.

The absence of facilities for travelling in the district has hitherto made Edale a veritable terra incognita, except to pedestrians blessed with good lungs and strong limbs. Human habitations are few and widely scattered; and, were it not for the hum and buzz that proceeds from a cotton doubling factory, one would suppose the place to be entirely out of touch with the noisy world without. The only aggregation of houses worthy of the name of village is Grind's Brook, or, as it was anciently called, Grime's Brook, near which is a station on the railway now fast approaching completion. Here are the church and the school, and also a good hotel. The other scattered houses and hamlets are Over Booth, Nether Booth, Barber Booth, Lady Booth, and Oller Brook.

Edale is described in Domesday Book as a berewick or hamlet of Hope, but soon afterwards it was included in the parish of Castleton. The first chapel was erected here in 1633, and dedicated to the Holy and Undivided Trinity. This structure became so dilapidated that it was taken down in 1812, and rebuilt in a barn-like style. The present church was erected in 1886, at a cost of £3,000 raised by public subscription. It is a handsome edifice, in the Decorated Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, south-west porch, and tower, surmounted by a fine spire. There is accommodation for 250. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, is now a vicarage, in the gift of trustees, worth £228 per annum, and held by the Rev. John Eales, M.A., Cantab. The school is also a Gothic building and cost £400. It possesses small endowments left by the Rev. Robert Turie, John Ashton, Joseph Tym, Joseph Champion, and Elizabeth Bowden.

The Wesleyans have a chapel at Barber Booth, erected at a cost of £300, to seat 150. It is in the Bradwell circuit. The Barber family formerly owned land and were resident here, hence the name of the hamlet.

On the farm of Mr. N. Tym is a Druidical rock or altar, and at Nether Tor, near Grindsbrook, in 1778, about 40 adder heads or Druid's amulets were found beneath a stone.

Edale is in Chapel-en-le-Frith rural sanitary district, and, for carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, six parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to it.

FAIRFIELD.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of High Peak, petty sessional division and county court district and deanery of Buxton, and union of Chapel-en-le-Frith. It gives name to a division for the election of a county councillor. Under the new Local Government Act, Fairfield forms an urban parish with three urban district guardians. The estimated extent of the parish is 3,923 acres, ratable value £31,323, and the population in 1891 was 3,866. Fairfield was part of the royal forest of the Peak, and the Duke of Devonshire is lessee of the manor under the Crown. His Grace and Messrs. Pickford & Co., of King Sterndale, are the principal landowners. The township lies on the east side of Buxton, and includes a portion of that town, containing the Pavilion, Devonshire Hospital, and the Midland and London and North Western railway stations. It extends southward along the east bank of the river Wye as far as Lover's Leap, in Ashwood Dale, and in a northerly direction as far as Dove Holes. The soil is loamy but shallow, lying upon a rocky subsoil, and is chiefly in pasturage. Towards the north the surface is only slightly undulated, and the landscape unattractive. Southward, at Cowlow, the land sinks almost perpendicularly to the Bakewell road and the Midland railway, which here run through a narrow ravine between precipitous cliffs that rear their craggy heads to a considerable height. The rocks assume various fantastic shapes, and in some places seem as if, at any moment, they might topple down on the head of the beholder.

The village of Fairfield is situated about one mile east of Buxton, on a gentle eminence, whence a good view of that town is obtained. A chapel, subordinate to the mother church of Hope, was erected here in the first half of the thirteenth century, and stood till 1838, when the present church of St. Peter was erected on the site. It is an oblong building of cut stone, without any architectural pretensions, consisting of nave and a tower containing six bells. The ceiling is flat and plastered, but in spite of this the internal aspect is somewhat imposing. On the walls are numerous tablets, in black and white marble, to the memory of members of the Badger, Swann, Goodwin, Birch, Swincow, and Dakin families. The Dakins were considerable landowners here. On the monument of Edward Dakin, gentleman, who died in 1809, it is said that his "forefathers for very many centuries were interred in the chancel of the ancient church, formerly standing on this site."* An ancestor of this gentleman founded almshouses here, in the reign of Henry IV., for six poor persons; and Thomas Dakin, in the reign of Elizabeth, obtained Letters Patent to incorporate the almshouses with the church for the augmentation of the living; and from that time the former were discontinued. Another Dakin monument, commemorating William Dakin, merchant, of London, who died in 1848, bears the family arms and their singular motto, "Strike, Dakin, the Devil's in the hemp." A new organ was erected in 1893, at a cost of £300. The baptismal font, goblet-shaped, belonged to the old church. The chalice bears the date 1595. Fairfield possesses all parochial privileges, but remains, nevertheless, only a township. The living is a vicarage worth £200 per annum, in the gift of six trustees, and held by the Rev. J. Eayrs.

The present school premises were erected in 1861, for the accommodation of 280 children; average attendance, 270. An addition is contemplated at a cost of £1,200. Anthony Swann, by will in 1662, left a rent-charge of £4 for the education of ten poor children, and land was also allotted to the school at the inclosure.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a neat edifice of dressed stone, with sitting accommodation for nearly 300, erected in 1886 from the designs of Mr. J. Wiles, of Derby. In the east gable are three fine Gothic windows filled with stained glass. The ceiling is curved, showing the massive oak rafters which are supported by corbels. The interior is comfortably furnished. A good organ (cost, £154) stands in a recess on the north side. Adjoining the chapel are the school and other rooms. The old chapel was purchased by the Local Board for £344, for offices, &c.

Dove Holes is a large and scattered village situated at the northern extremity of the parish, and extending into Wormhill, Chapel-en-le-Frith, and Bowden Edge. The village has its own water company, formed a few years ago, with a capital of £3,000. There is a Mission Chapel here under Chapel-en-le-Frith. It is an oblong edifice of cut stone, comprising apsidal chancel, nave, and porch. On the wall is a marble tablet to the memory of the Rev. A. Ashworth, B.A.,

* There is a tradition that the church was rebuilt in the reign of Elizabeth, and the statement refers to the edifice that had previously occupied the site.

who died in 1882, and was the first curate. The Primitive Methodist Chapel, erected in 1876, is a stone structure, with school underneath. It is well lighted, and furnished with seats to accommodate 400. On the north wall is a handsome marble tablet to the memory of William Howe, who died in 1891. The chapel is in the Bradwell circuit. There is also a Gospel Mission Hall, erected in 1877 at a cost of £200. A school of two departments was built in 1883 at a cost of £800, and an addition was made to it in 1894 at a further outlay of £400. There are 160 in average attendance. The school is supported by Government grant only.

Water Swallow is a hamlet of three farms, and near is Barnes Common, on which Buxton races were held previous to their discontinuance, about 40 years ago. Deepdale is a romantic glen at the south-eastern extremity of the township. Other hamlets are named in the Directory.

GLOSSOP.

Glossop is a municipal borough and parish at the north-western extremity of the county, adjoining Cheshire, 14 miles E. from Manchester, 24 N.W. from Sheffield, and 50 miles N.N.W. from Derby. The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway passes through the parish, and has stations at Hadfield and Dinting. From the latter there is a branch line, about one mile in length, into the town of Glossop.

The old parish of Glossop was of vast extent, stretching lengthwise about 16 miles, and from five to eight miles crosswise. It included the townships and hamlets of Glossop, Chinley, Bugsworth and Brownside, Charlesworth, Chisworth, Chunall, Dinting, Hadfield, Hayfield, Ludworth, Mellor, New Mills, Padfield, Simmondley, and Whitfield, covering upwards of 50,000 acres. For the convenience of the few widely scattered inhabitants there were chapels at Charlesworth, Hayfield, and Mellor. These subsequently became parochial, and other parishes have been carved out of it in recent years. The area of the township of Glossop is returned at 18,430 acres, of which about 8,000 acres are moorland.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Glossop was part of the lordship of Longdendale, which then belonged to the Crown. A few years later Henry I. granted it, with the rest of his extensive domain of the Peak, to William Peverel, but on the attainder of his grandson it reverted to the Crown. In 1157, Henry II. gave the manor and church of Glossop, with all its appurtenances in free and perpetual alms, to the Cistercian Abbey of Basingwerk, in Flintshire. Both manor and church remained in the possession of the abbey till the dissolution of monasteries, when they were bestowed by Henry VIII. upon Francis Talbot, fifth Earl of Shrewsbury. On the death of Gilbert, seventh earl, in 1616, one of his daughters and coheirresses conveyed Glossop in marriage to Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundel, from whom it has descended to the present owner, Lord Howard of Glossop. The noble family of Howard, of the ducal house of Norfolk, claims descent from Hereward, who lived in the reign of King Edgar, whose son, Hereward le Wake, held the Normans at bay when the rest of England had submitted to their rule. The late Lord Howard, second son of the 13th Duke of Norfolk, was deputy Earl Marshall from 1861 to 1868, and was created a peer in 1869. Glossop Hall is a handsome mansion, standing within extensive grounds a little N.E. of Old Glossop.

The town is seated in a valley on the sides of the lofty hills that environ it on all sides. The scenery around is wild and picturesque, and had not commerce seated itself here in later years, Glossop might have become a popular pleasure resort. It was incorporated in 1866, and within the borough boundary are included Dinting, Dinting Vale, Hadfield, Padfield, Simmondley, Waterside, and Whitfield. The borough is divided into three wards, which form a civil parish under the Parish and District Councils Act. Each ward returns six guardians. The ratable value of the borough is £58,884, and the population 22,414. The cotton trade is said to have been introduced here in 1784, but previous to this there were woollen factories and fulling mills. Some of the mills are on a gigantic scale. The Howardtown Mills, belonging to John Wood & Brothers, Ltd., cover 14 acres, and contain 221,000 spindles and 3,500 looms, giving employment to 5,000 or 6,000 persons when in full work. At the Wren Nest Mills, Francis Sumner & Co., Ltd., proprietors, there are 123,000 spindles and 2,541 looms. The Shipley Mill Cotton Manufacturing Co., Ltd., have 43,000 spindles. There are other mills of less magnitude. Another very important industry is the paper manufacture. The paper mills of Messrs. Olive & Partington (sole proprietor, Edward Partington, Esq., J.P.) at Turn Lee, cover several acres of ground and give employment to about 600 hands and a large staff of clerks besides. The machinery is all of the latest and most approved principle, and the machines used in several parts of the process, are the special patent of the firm. The paper is made from wood pulp. The timber is imported from Norway in six feet lengths, and after passing through various processes is reduced to pulp and converted into paper. Upwards of 120 tons of paper are turned out weekly. Another industry that gives employment to a large number of the inhabitants is calico printing; and a considerable trade is also done in the manufacture of spring mattresses.

Old Glossop is a quaint looking village, picturesquely seated at some height on the hill side overlooking the valley below. Beyond it, stretch heath-clad hills abounding with grouse. New Glossop or Howard Town is situated in the valley, and is sometimes called Glossopdale. Here are located the cotton factories, the shops and business premises, and the great mass of the inhabitants. All the houses and mills are built of stone, and, though some of them date from the early part of this century, they still retain much of their original freshness of colour. A market was established under powers of an Act of Parliament obtained in 1844, and is held on Saturdays. The Town Hall is a handsome building of stone in the Italian style, with covered market behind, erected in 1838, at a cost of £8,500, and opened as a market on the 19th July, 1845. It was enlarged in 1854. Gas Works were erected the same year by a company with a registered capital of £6,000 in £10 shares; and Water Works were constructed in 1854 by the Duke of Norfolk, at a cost of £4,000. The reservoir, about five acres in extent, is situated at Swineshaw, $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles from the town. Fairs for cattle, horses, &c., are held on May 6th, and the first Wednesday after October 10th.

The parish church of All Saints', at Old Glossop, is a large edifice in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, side aisles, and tower containing eight bells. The old church, having become ruinous, the nave and aisles were rebuilt, and two galleries added in 1831, at a cost of £2,000. The chancel was rebuilt a little later by the Duke of Norfolk, the lay impropriator of the tithes; and in 1855 his grace rebuilt the tower and spire. The Howard arms are carved in stone above the west doorway of the tower. The Hague monument, now in Hayfield church, was formerly in the chancel of All Saints, from which it was removed when the chancel was rebuilt, and never replaced. The east window, of three lights, is a memorial of the late Duke and Duchess of Norfolk, Robert Shipley, Esq., and John Wood, Esq. Two of the eight bells were added by the parishioners when the tower was rebuilt. Two tablets record feats of bell-ringing: one on the 13th March, 1858, when a peal of Kent Treble Bob Majors of 7,040 changes was rung in 4 hours and 5 minutes; another, on the 7th November, 1863, when a peal of Kent Treble Bob Majors of 5,280 changes was rung in 3 hours and 9 minutes to the memory of Alderman Cubit, chairman of the Cotton Famine Committee. The bells were re-hung in 1877, and a chiming apparatus added at a cost of £180. Old Glossop has also achieved some fame in hand-bell ringing, and three years in succession—1871, 1872, and 1873—the Glossop men carried off the first prize at Belle Vue, Manchester. The living is a vicarage, worth £231, with residence, in the gift of Lord Howard of Glossop, and held by the Rev. A. P. Hamilton Wilson.

Opposite the church gates is an ancient cross, about nine feet high, and still in good preservation.

On an eminence near the hall is the Catholic Church of All Saints, erected by the Duke of Norfolk in 1836, at a cost of £3,000. It is of the Classic style of architecture, with projecting roof and pediment supported on Tuscan pilasters. Above the altar is a painting of St. Jerome, a copy of one in the Vatican at Rome. The windows are filled with stained glass, executed in the highest style of art. St. Andrew, St. David, and St. Patrick are represented. On one window is depicted the Blessed Philip Howard, Earl of Arundel, who, for his adherence to the old faith and for sheltering priests, was fined £10,000, committed to the Tower, and finally sentenced to death, but died in 1595 whilst awaiting execution. On another is Father Nicholas Garlick, a native of Dinting, who suffered death in the reign of Elizabeth for exercising his priestly functions.

The Church of St. Mary occupies a commanding site off St. Mary's Road, and is without doubt one of the finest Catholic churches in the north of England. It was built by the heirs of the late F. J. Sumner, Esq., J.P., D.L., of Park Hall, Hayfield, and Wren Nest Mills, Glossop. The deceased gentleman died suddenly, intestate, in 1884. Mr. Sumner had often expressed his intention of building a church for the convenience of his co-religionists, and his heirs very generously carried out his intentions. Out of the vast wealth which came unexpectedly into their possession, they set apart the sum of £17,000—£12,000 for the fabric and £5,000 for the endowment. The site was given by Lord Howard, and the plans were prepared by Mr. Dempster, architect, Birmingham. The church is in the Early English style, and consists of chancel, nave, and north and south aisles. The length is 123ft. 6in., and width 60 feet. The nave is separated from the aisles on each side by eight lofty arches with decorated borders. The sanctuary is a pentagonal apse, and on each side is a small chapel, divided by a handsome stone screen. The organ stands in one chapel, the other contains the Lady altar. The high altar is an exquisite piece of sculpture in alabaster, marble, and Caen stone; and the Caen stone pulpit is of a very handsome design, rich in tabernacle work that harmonises with the altar. The aisles have two-light windows, with tracery heads; the windows of the chancel and side chapels are of a different design. The west window is divided into six lights by moulded mullions, and the tracery is a combination of all the other windows in the church very ingeniously worked out. The fourteen stations of the Cross that adorn the walls were executed by Meyer, of Munich. The figures stand out in high relief and are very realistic. Each station was a special gift, and on a brass plate beneath is inscribed the donor's name. The baptistry is a unique feature in the church. It is a projection under the west window, similar to the apse at the east end, with vaulted ceiling, and lighted by three small cusped windows. The organ is a fine instrument, by Messrs. Gray and Davison, of London. The turret contains one bell, and is surmounted by a spire.

In connection with the church are schools, taught by the Sisters of Charity of St. Paul.

The Wesleyan Chapel at Old Glossop was erected in 1813, and enlarged in 1880. It is a very plain building, capable of seating 500. A second chapel, situated in High Street, Howard Town, was built in 1844, at a cost of £600, and in 1860 it was considerably enlarged, at an expense of nearly £2,000. It contains an excellent organ, by Young, of Manchester. This chapel is the head of the circuit, and in connection with it are good day schools. The Wesleyan Reform Chapel, in Howard Street, was built in 1854, and will seat 700. The Methodist New Connexion Chapel, in Simmondley Lane, is a plain stone building, erected in 1860, at an expense of about £1,000. There is accommodation for 300. Adjoining the chapel are the schools, which cost about £1,300. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with a total accommodation for 400; average attendance, 125. The chapel is in the Staley Bridge circuit. The Congregational Church, Mount Pleasant, is an elegant structure, built in 1868, to seat 650. Schools and classrooms were added in 1875, at a total cost of £3,200. The Gospel Union Mission Hall, in Edison Street, is a substantial building, erected at a cost of £1,000. There is accommodation for 1,000 persons, and only total abstainers are admitted to membership. There are also chapels belonging to the United Methodist Free Church and the Unitarians.

The Grammar School (Old Glossop) was rebuilt by the Duke of Norfolk in 1852, at a cost of £2,000, and endowed by his Grace with £4,000 in the 3 per cent. consols, now £4,200 at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. It is open to all denominations. There is an efficient staff of teachers; and, in addition to a commercial education, technical instruction, under the scheme of the County Council, is also given.

Few towns of the same magnitude possess such an extensive and beautiful Park as Glossop. The land, about 13 acres in extent, was given by Lord Howard, and Mrs. Wood generously bore the expense of laying out the grounds, &c., which cost about £6,000. The situation is delightful, affording a beautiful prospect of the amphitheatre of hills and moorlands that surround it. The grounds were laid out by Mr. Milner, the eminent landscape gardener, who has produced a very diversified and picturesque effect. A lake, with a miniature island and waterfall, lends additional charms. Facing the main entrance is a beautiful white marble monument, symbolising the principal industry of the town. It represents a factory girl, life-size, holding a shuttle in her hand, whilst beside her are bales of cotton. The granite base forms an ornamental fountain. The monument was erected in 1889, in memory of Daniel and Samuel Wood, Esquires.

At the north-western corner of the Park is the Hospital, erected by D. Wood, Esq., at a cost of £5,000, and endowed by the same benevolent gentleman with £20,000. The premises consist of three blocks, united by a corridor, the ground plan resembling the letter E, the upright line being the corridor. The centre limb contains the apartments and offices belonging to the administrative department, and the other two are the wards for men and women respectively. There is accommodation for sixteen patients. The domestic and sanitary arrangements of the hospital are on the latest and most approved principles. Detached from the hospital are the boiler-house, washhouse, porter's lodge, coachhouse, and stables.

A handsome suite of Baths stands at the southern extremity of the Park. These Baths were the gift of Samuel and Ann Kershaw Wood, who expended about £15,000 on their erection. Architecturally they are quite an ornament to the Park. The swimming bath is 80ft. long by 32ft. wide, and the semicircular roof, at its highest point, is 50ft. above the water. Two fine palm trees give a pleasing effect to the interior. Twenty-seven dressing-boxes are ranged along the side, and in an annexe a small bath is provided, in which each intending bather must wash his feet—a rule most rigorously enforced. There are nine slipper baths, a shower bath, vapour bath, a fully-equipped Turkish bath, and several of the appliances used in hydropathic treatment. The charges are moderate, but the baths do not receive that amount of patronage one would have expected in a manufacturing town.

The Public Hall and Free Library was the gift of H. Rhodes, Esq., of Thorncliffe Hall, Hollingworth, and Captain Partington, of Easton, Glossop, who each contributed £2,000 towards its erection. It is situated at the corner of Fauvel street and Talbot street, on a site presented by Lord Howard. The style of architecture is light and pleasing, resembling the late Gothic work erected during the reign of James I. The front projection is octagonal, and from one side rises a tower, with pinnacles at each corner and a slated spire. The external walls are faced with parpoints, and the quoins, labels, and strings are surmounted by a very fine parapet in ashlar work. The library and reading room on the ground floor is a large apartment, measuring 72 feet by 36 feet, well lighted, and fitted throughout in pitchpine. Above is the Public Hall, capable of accommodating upwards of 1,000 persons. These several gifts of the Park, Hospital, Baths, and Public Hall were given to the town in commemoration of the jubilee of Queen Victoria, and the memorial stones were laid with great jubilation on the 30th of July, 1887.

Glossop Poor-Law Union comprises the three parishes of Glossop, Charlesworth, and Ludworth and Chisworth, containing 20,781 acres. The Workhouse, which is situated a little above Old Glossop, was erected in 1834, by the lord of the manor, at an expense of £1,500, and has recently been purchased, together with some adjacent land, from Lord Howard for £900. There is accommodation for 144, and there are usually about 85 paupers in the house.

Whitfield is a hamlet and village containing 1,500 acres of land, now included in the borough of Glossop. The land is chiefly freehold. The manor of Whitfield belonged to Thomas le Ragged, who, in 1330, conveyed it to John Foljambe; it has long been held with the manor of Glossop. The Garlicks possessed landed property here in the 15th and 16th centuries. Charlestown and Littlemoor are villages in Whitfield hamlet. A church dedicated to St. James was erected at Littlemoor in 1845 at a cost of £4,500, and a parochial district comprising 3,009 acres was allotted to it. The living is a vicarage worth £270, in the gift of John Wood, Esq., Mrs. S. Wood, and S. H. Wood, Esq., and held by the Rev. H. T. Dudley, M.A. In connection with it are mission rooms in Talbot street and George street. Mr. Joseph Hague, amongst other philanthropic deeds, built and endowed a Charity School at Whitfield in 1778. The Wesleyan Chapel dates from 1810. A commodious Sunday school was built in 1885 at a cost of £1,000, chiefly subscribed by the working men of the district.

Dinting is a hamlet comprising 584 acres of land lying about one mile west of Glossop, but now included in the borough. Here is a station on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway, from which there is a branch line to Glossop. At Dinting Vale are the calico printing works of Messrs. Potter & Co., Ltd. The business was commenced in 1825 by Mr. Potter, who was subsequently M.P. for Carlisle, and was largely instrumental in obtaining the removal of the duties on prints and materials used in their manufacture, thus putting the business of calico printing on a commercial footing. Favoured with water possessing remarkable bleaching qualities, and the employment of the very best skill, the business has steadily increased, the premises have been extended, and to-day the Dinting Vale print-works are the largest in the world. There are 52 printing machines, and about 1,000 workers are employed in the various departments. The distributing centre of the business is in Manchester, with branches in London, Paris, and New York. The firm was converted into a private limited liability company in 1892.

A handsome church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1872, the whole cost of which, upwards of £12,000, was defrayed by the Messrs. John, Daniel, and Samuel Wood. The edifice is an elegant Gothic structure, comprising chancel, nave, side aisles, organ chamber, south porch, and a square embattled tower, surmounted by a hexagonal spire. The chancel has a groined roof of polished pitchpine, and is separated from the nave by a lofty pointed arch of granite, and massive pillars of the same material, six on one side and five on the other, divide the aisles from the nave.

The chancel is lighted by three two-light windows, in the eastern gable, the centre one being filled with stained glass in memory of John H. Wood, who died in 1869, and two circular ones in the north and south walls. The windows of the aisles are two lights, and those in the clerestory are in groups of three each. The pulpit is of granite, octagonal in shape and elaborately carved, and rests on clustered columns of polished granite, supported by a base of the same material. A brass plate bears the following inscription:—"This pulpit has been erected by the parishioners and friends in loving memory of John Wood, J.P., Daniel Wood and Samuel Wood, J.P., Esqrs., patrons and founders of this church, November, 1888." The organ is a fine instrument, presented by Mrs. Wood in 1882. The fount is a very handsome one of granite and marble, and elaborately carved. The living, a vicarage, worth £320, with residence, is in the gift of Mrs. S. Wood, S. H. Wood, Esq., and John Wood, Esq., J.P., D.L.

A school was built at the same time as the church for the accommodation of 430 children.

Hadfield is a considerable village and township containing 357 acres of land, lying on the south bank of the river Etherow, and now forming one of the wards of the borough of Glossop. The principal industry is cotton spinning and weaving, which is carried on to a considerable extent in the district. The church, dedicated to St. Andrew, is a handsome edifice of stone consisting of nave, chancel, transept, porch, and belfry containing one bell. On each side of the nave, three or four feet from the wall, is a row of iron pillars from which spring wooden arches that support the roof. The style of architecture is Gothic, and the total cost of the building was £4,174. The organ, which stands in the chancel, is a fine instrument, by Wadsworth Brothers, of Manchester, and cost £650. It was presented by James Sidebottom, Esq., J.P., in 1879, in memory of his wife. The font was presented by James Sherrieff, stonemason, formerly sexton at Tintwistle Church, who emigrated to Australia, whence the font came. On one side is inscribed "St. Paul writeth, according to His mercy God saved us by the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost." On another is "Jesus said, except a man be born again of water and of the Holy Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The living is a vicarage worth £360 with residence, in the gift of five trustees, and held by the Rev. J. Hadfield, who is Rural Dean of Glossop.

A school, in which church service was held previous to the erection of the church, was built in 1855 at a cost of £850.

The Catholics also have a church here, dedicated to St. Charles Borromeo, erected by the late Lord Howard. It is a handsome stone structure, consisting of nave, aisles, sanctuary, sacristy, and western tower containing one bell. Built on an eminence, this church has a picturesque appearance, seated amidst shrubberies which are graced here and there with statues, crosses, etc. The style of architecture is Gothic, and the church contains a handsome pulpit, presented by public subscription about a year ago. The presbytery adjoins the church.

The Wesleyan Chapel, erected in 1878, is a large edifice of stone in the Norman style, seated on the crest of a hill, whence there is an extensive view of the surrounding landscape. It is well lighted by circular-headed windows, and comfortably furnished to seat 900. In connection with the chapel is a Sunday school. The total cost was about £5,000. A day-school was established by the society in 1808, and rebuilt in 1854. There is accommodation for 300 and an average attendance of 180. The United Methodist Free Church is a plain oblong building, lighted by windows of the Gothic type. It was erected in 1876, at a cost of £600, raised by voluntary subscriptions. The Primitive Methodists built their present chapel in 1876. Attached is a burial ground.

The Congregational Church, situated at Brookfield, is a substantial structure of stone, in the Gothic style, erected in 1883, at a cost of £4,000, part of which was raised by public subscription, and the remainder was a donation from W. Shepley, Esq., J.P.; and the organ, built by J. J. Binns, of Leeds, cost £250, was presented by Mrs. Shepley. All the woodwork is pitchpine, and the windows are filled with stained glass of various designs, geometric, floral, and conventional. There is sitting accommodation for 350 in the body of the church, and a gallery above the entrance will seat 100 more. Adjoining the church is the day school, comprising one large room and seven classrooms, erected in 1888, at a cost of £1,200, defrayed by Mr. Shepley. There is an average attendance of 160.

The Liberal Club is a commodious structure, erected in 1877. The premises comprise two billiard rooms, a bar, a well stocked library, and a hall measuring about 80 feet by 34 feet, in which lectures, concerts, entertainments, &c., are given. The Conservatives also have their club, erected in 1876.

Building stone of excellent quality is abundant and is extensively quarried at Monslow, a little east of the village, and an old planting near by is the traditionary site of Monslow Castle, but not a vestige remains to prove that it ever existed.

Waterside is a manufacturing village on a small brook near the Etherow. Here are the extensive mills of Messrs. T. H. Sidebottom & Co., Ltd., containing 297,000 spindles and 4,800 looms. Mersey Mills, near Etherow, the property of Thomas Rhodes & Co., Ltd., contains 81,000 spindles, and 1,647 looms. The Hadfield Mills, owned by Thomas Rhodes & Son, contain 75,126 spindles and 1,345 looms, and employ about 950 hands in the various departments.

Woolley Bridge is a village that takes its name from the bridge that here crosses the Etherow.

Padfield is a large village and hamlet containing 650 acres of land lying near the Etherow, and included in Hadfield Ward of the Borough of Glossop. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in the cotton mills of Messrs. Edwd. Platt & Son. The Wesleyans have a chapel here, a neat stone structure, built in 1880, at a cost of £2,000, in lieu of one erected in 1828, and the Independents have also a small chapel. A day school was erected in 1887, by Messrs. Rhodes, owners of Hadfield Mill, for the accommodation of the children of their employés. There is an average attendance of 200.

HAYFIELD.

This is an extensive township and chapelry in the wide-spreading parish of Glossop, containing 7,919 acres of land, and 2,856 inhabitants. Its ratable value is £13,692. For all civil purposes it forms a district parish, and is the head of a poor law union. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and Francis John Sumner, Esq., Leamington Spa, Warwickshire, is the principal landowner. There are many small freeholders. Under the new Local Government Act eight parish councillors have been assigned to Hayfield, and five district councillors.

The district is of a wild alpine character; moorland eminences, scantily covered with vegetation, and hills of considerable altitude are plentifully scattered about. On the eastern border rises Kinder Scout, the culminating point of the Peak range. Its summit is occupied by a flat, boggy tableland, only a trifle short of 2,000 feet above the sea level. The sides of the hill are deeply furrowed by numerous romantic ravines, locally called cloughs, through which streams flow, forming picturesque waterfalls. "A great part of Kinder Scout and the adjoining moors," says the Guide, "were, until lately, what is known as the 'King's Land,' over which the public might ramble at their pleasure; but about the year 1830, the whole of these lands were surveyed, and allotted to the various owners of contiguous lands according to the size of their holdings." Access to the hill is now prohibited, though it was formerly open to the public.

The romantic village of Hayfield is prettily seated on the north bank of the Sett, 4½ miles N. from Chapel-en-le-Frith, 11 miles from Stockport, and is the terminus of a branch of the Midland railway.

The church, dedicated to St. Matthew, consists of chancel, nave, with side aisles, and tower at the west end, containing a peal of six bells. Above a low doorway, on the north side, is preserved the date of the original erection "1386." The chapel having become very ruinous, the inhabitants, in 1814, obtained a Brief for its restoration, and with the funds thus obtained, supplemented by the contributions of the parishioners, the chapel was rebuilt on the foundations of the old one, at a cost of £2,000. The building was completed in 1818. The new floor was raised several feet, and the pillars of the side aisles were shortened to about six feet to act as props for the timbers that support it. The church is in the Gothic style, but displays the absence of taste that characterizes the buildings of the early part of this century. The tower was rebuilt a few years previously in 1793, and contains a peal of six bells. In 1894 it was raised about 11 feet to receive a clock with four dials. The interior of the church is galleried round. The aisles are lighted by stained glass windows, and there is a very handsome one of three lights in the chancel. The brass lectern is of a very elaborate and beautiful design.

The interior was thoroughly cleaned and beautified in 1892, and the communion table enlarged and furnished with a handsome altar cloth, altar cross, and flower vases, at an expense of £200. At the east end of the south aisle is a handsome mural monument, inscribed:—"Sacred to the Memory of Joseph Hague, Esq., whose virtues as a man were as distinguished as his character as a merchant. Favour'd with the blessings of Providence, he enjoy'd the fruits of his industry at an early period, and by the most indefatigable pursuits and extensive connections in trade acquired an immense fortune, which he distributed amongst his relatives with such liberality as to give affluence to all in his own lifetime. He was born at Chunall, in this parish, in the year 1695, and in 1717 settled in London, where he married Jane, the only daughter of Edmund Blagge, of Macclesfield, in Cheshire, by whom he had 10 sons and 2 daughters, who all died in their minority. He built and endowed the Charity School at Whitfield, in the year 1778, and died at Park Hall, in this parish, on the 12th day of March, 1786, aged 90 years, leaving the annual interest on £1,000 to be laid out in clothing 12 poor men and 12 poor women out of the eight townships of Glossop Dale for ever; besides other charities bequeathed to Glossop and the chapelry of Heafield." Surmounting the monument is an admirable bust of Joseph Hague, executed by the eminent sculptor, John Bacon. The worthy merchant was buried in Glossop church, and there this monument was originally erected; but when the chancel was rebuilt by the Duke of Norfolk the Hague memorial was placed for safety in one of the cells of the Lock-up, where it was allowed to remain neglected after the completion of the work. One night a drunken man, confined in the adjoining cell, broke through the partition wall and mutilated the tablet, but the bust, which was carefully packed in straw, fortunately escaped without injury. When this piece of vandalism reached the ears of Captain White, of Park Hall, who had inherited a considerable share of the Hague property, he took possession of the monument, and caused it to be erected in Hayfield Chapel, where it is the principal object of attraction. There are a few other memorials of departed worth.

The living is a perpetual curacy worth £180, in the gift of the resident freeholders, and held by the Rev. R. R. Ricketts since 1877. John Hyde, by will dated 8th September, 1604, gave certain premises to the Merchant Taylors' Company, London, upon trust, amongst other things, to pay £10 yearly to the minister of the Gospel at Hayfield, in Derbyshire, "keeping a Grammar School within the chapel." The parsonage was erected in 1869 at a cost of £1,200, raised partly by public subscription.

The National School was built in 1830, at a cost of £464, raised by subscription. An infants' room and other additions were made in 1879, at an expense of £500. There is a total accommodation for 229, and there are 200 names on the books. The school possesses an endowment of £26 per annum.

The Wesleyan Chapel is a substantial stone edifice, erected in 1782, and opened by John Wesley. It was re-roofed in 1839, and enlarged in 1868. A gallery is carried round three sides, increasing the accommodation to 350. The style is quasi-Norman. In the centre is a bell turret surmounted by a ball. Adjoining the chapel is the Day School, built in 1884, at a cost of about £1,000. There are two large rooms for seniors and infants, and two class-rooms, having a total accommodation for 300. The average attendance for the past year was 64.

The Free Church Methodist Bethel was rebuilt in 1866, on the site of a former chapel, at an expense of upwards of £1,000. There are two storeys—chapel above and school below—with sitting accommodation for 400. The interior is neatly furnished in pitchpine. An organ was added in 1874 at a cost of £200.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel is a good stone building flanked by buttresses, erected in 1867 at a cost of about £500, including the adjoining class-room. There is accommodation for about 400.

A School Board was formed in 1881, but was practically a school attendance committee till 1888, when they erected a Board School, at a cost of £1,300. There are two departments, with accommodation for 183.

There is nothing attractive in the appearance of the little town. The houses are all built of stone, with no pretensions whatever to architectural display; the streets are narrow, and not too well paved. The manufacture of cotton and wool was introduced at an early period. Formerly a good deal of twine was made at Hayfield; and the late Wright Turner, Esq., an influential Manchester merchant and twice mayor of Salford (1864-5 and 1865-6), began his career here in the making of twine. There is abundance of coal, and also a copious supply of excellent water, which afford great facilities for manufacturing purposes. A cotton mill has been carried on at Little Hayfield, a small village three-quarters of a mile distant, for upward of a century. There are the two extensive paper mills of John Slack, and three printworks, employing a considerable number of hands. Stone is abundant, and extensively quarried at Birches Quarry, Hadfield Bank, and Watery Hey.

The Liberals and Conservatives have each a club in the village, with comfortably fitted-up reading and billiard rooms. In the Antiquarian Tea Rooms the visitor will see many curious articles and relics of antiquity. Fairs for sheep and cattle are held on the 12th of May and the 10th of October, and Shepherds' Meetings, on the 12th of July and 7th of November, at the Pack Horse. The Feast is held the first Sunday on or after September 19th.

Hayfield Poor Law Union comprises the townships of Hayfield, New Mills, Mellor, and Disley, containing 17,085 acres and 12,873 inhabitants. The Workhouse, situated at Low Leighton, was erected in 1841, at a cost of £2,700, to accommodate 87 inmates.

Little Hayfield is a small village about three-quarters of a mile north. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, built in 1851, at a cost of about £200. Clough Mill, the property of Edward Platt & Son, cotton manufacturers, Hadfield, has been in operation about a century. There are 18,000 spindles, and about 300 hands are employed.

At Birch Vale, one mile west of Hayfield, are the extensive calico printing works of Messrs. John Bennett & Sons, erected in 1851, which give employment to about 500 men, women, and children. The business of bleaching and sizing cotton yarns is carried on in a portion of the works by C. E. Bennett & Co., who employ about 80 hands. Here, at Birch View, is a chapel belonging to the Free Church Methodists, built in 1873 at a cost of £750.

Park Hall is a large mansion pleasantly embosomed amongst a dense mass of wood, about one mile north of Hayfield. It was the property and residence of Joseph Hague, Esq., in the later years of his life, from whom it descended to the late Captain White. It was purchased by the late Francis James Sumner, Esq., of Glossop, and now belongs to Francis John Sumner, Esq., of Leamington.

The township of Hayfield consists of three hamlets, viz.:—Great Hamlet, which includes a large portion of the village of Hayfield; Phoside or Foreside Hamlet occupies the southern portion of the township, and Kinder Hamlet the eastern side.

HOPE.

This is an ancient and extensive parish comprising the townships of Hope, Aston, Brough and Shatton, Fernilee, Highlow, Nether Padley, Offerton, Stoke, Thornhill, and part of Hope Woodlands, embracing an area of about 10,000 acres.

It also formerly included the chapelry of Fairfield and the townships of Abney, and Abney Grange, Bradwell, Grindlow, Hazlebadge, Hucklow Great, Hucklow Little, and Wardlow, extending in all over 40,000 acres. It is in the hundred of High Peak, electoral division of Castleton, county court district of Buxton, petty sessional division and poor law union of Chapel-en-le-Frith, and deanery of Eyam.

The township of Hope contains 2,848½ acres of land; its ratable value is £2,916, and the population 423. For purposes of local government five parish councillors have been assigned to it and one rural district councillor. The land-owners are R. H. Ashton, Castleton; E. Firth, Hope; C. S. Leslie, Esq., Hassop; Exors. of A. P. Arkwright; Charles Greaves, Hope Woodlands; Mr. Fleming, Manchester; George Eyre, Hope Farm; G. Bingham; Joseph H. Bennett; Mr. Benton, Glossop; Bagshaw's Exors.; Joseph Wilson, Oker; George Hall, Hope; Edmund Nicholson; and the Exors. of John Middleton.

The royal manor of Hope at the time of the Domesday Survey was of considerable extent, and included seven berewicks or hamlets. It had also at that time its church and priest. Subsequently it was considered as part of the manor of High Peak, that manor having since been divided into two. Hope now forms part of the manor of Castleton, which is held on lease by the Duke of Devonshire.

The ancient and important family of Eyre were long identified with the parish of Hope, their connection dating as far back as the reign of Henry III. or earlier, and their arms were formerly to be seen emblazoned in the window of the chancel and in other parts of the church. The Balguys, another ancient Derbyshire family, possessed considerable lands here. Their chief seat for some time was Hope Hall, now an inn, called the Hall Hotel. The Woodroffes, a name not long extinct in the parish, were settled at Hope as early as the reign of Edward I., when Ralph Woodroffe, armiger, was keeper of the King's Forest of High Peak, and was succeeded in his office by his son Robert. Ellis Woodroffe, the last heir male of the elder branch, died in 1634, leaving five daughters co-heiresses, one of whom married Peter Foljambe.

The surface is diversified, and the scenery of a pleasing pastoral character. The soil is generally fertile. Limestone, of excellent quality for agricultural purposes and roads, is extensively quarried at Pindale, about one mile south of the village, by Mr. A. Furness, who has also his limekilns here. A large quantity of this lime was used in the construction of the Dore and Chinley railway, which passes through the parish.

The village of Hope is of small dimensions, but pleasantly situated at the confluence of two streams which form the river Noe, 6 miles N. by E. from Tideswell, 4 S.W. from Hathersage, and 15 from Sheffield. It is now easily accessible by the new line of railway, Dore and Chinley branch, on which there is a station near the village. In 1715 John Balguy, Esq., of Hope Hall, procured a grant of a weekly market on Saturday and four fairs. This weekly market was discontinued many years ago, and a monthly cattle market established, which is held on the last Wednesday of the month. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is an ancient edifice of stone, rebuilt on the site of an earlier one in the 14th century, and very extensively restored in the Perpendicular style in the following century. It consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and west tower, surmounted by a dumpy octagonal spire. The chancel was rebuilt in 1881, at a cost of £1,195, subscribed by various benefactors, and the rest of the fabric was thoroughly restored by E. Firth, Esq., of Birchfield, at a cost of £2,050, in commemoration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty Queen Victoria. The clerestory, aisles, and choir are surmounted by an embattled parapet, with pinnacles, and projecting from the building are some grotesque gurgoyles. Above the porch is a parvise, or chamber, which was once probably occupied by the sacristan. The gallery, which blocked up the west end of the nave, was happily removed at the late restoration. At this end stands a massive octagonal font, believed to be 14th century work. The pulpit is worthy of notice. It is a piece of good carving in oak, and bears the date 1652. The eagle lectern, of the same material, was designed and carved by Mr. Hedley Hill, of Tideswell.

The organ was presented by W. J. Marrow, Esq., of Liverpool, in 1893. There are six bells in the tower, all of 18th century date. Two 14th century monuments of the Woodroffe family were discovered during the rebuilding of the chancel in 1881. They are now in the chancel. Here also is the funeral brass of Henry Balguy, who died in 1685. Engraved upon it is a full-length figure, in pointed hat, doublet, and breeches, and the following quaint inscription:—

"A mundo abiactans oculos tamen ipse reflecto
Sperno, flens vitiiis lene sopore cado.
Wained from the world, upon it yet I peepe,
Disdaine it, weepe for sinne, and sweetlie sleepe."

The church of Hope, with its chapel of Tideswell, was given by King John to the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, and it was subsequently transferred to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, with whom the patronage still remains. The rectory manor was sold in the reign of Edward VI. to Ralph Gell, of Hopton. The living is a vicarage worth £170 nett, held since 1871 by the Rev. Henry Buckston, M.A.

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village, erected in 1835. The parochial school was endowed by Thomas Stevenson in 7 Charles II. It is believed to have been formerly kept in the chamber over the porch, and the teacher's old oak chair, bearing the date 1664 and the Latin aphorism, "Ex torto ligno non fit Mercurius" ("An Apollo is not made out of a twisted log"), is still preserved in the church.

In the vicarage grounds is the stem of an ancient cross, profusely ornamented with interlacing knot work and foliage. It somewhat resembles those at Bakewell and Eyam, and probably dates from Saxon times. The head is gone, and what remains of the shaft measures about seven feet. This was discovered in 1858, when taking down the old school house, one part forming the lintel door and the other built into one of the walls.

There is also here a quern or ancient British millstone, which was found during the excavations of the Dore and Chinley railway.

Seated on a wooded eminence about half-a-mile south of the village is Eccles House, a commodious farmhouse, occupied by Mrs. S. Bennett. From this elevated spot there are extensive and beautiful views of Hope Dale and the surrounding country. Away to the west is seen Peveril Castle, crowning a rocky height, at the foot of which, nestle the village of Castleton, and beyond, Mam Tor raises its giant head against the blue sky. Win Hill closes in the view to the north-east, and in the opposite direction is seen the rugged outline of Bradwell Edge. At a little distance is "Folly Ring," supposed to have been in some way connected with the mysteries of Druidism. The house affords excellent accommodation for visitors and families on reasonable terms.

Aston is a small township containing 702 acres (?) of land, lying about one mile east from Hope. The principal owners are Robert How Ashton (Castleton), the Rev. J. B. Nodder (Ashover), lords of the manor; Exors. of Colonel Leslie. Edward Firth, Esq., Exors. of Robert Littlewood, Morton's Poor Charity, and James Ronksley, Esq. (Sheffield). Its ratable value is £600, and the population —. Aston Hall was formerly the residence of the Balguys, one of whom acquired this estate about the reign of Edward I. by marriage with the heiress of the Aston family. They subsequently lived at Hope Hall and Rowlee, and in the 17th century purchased Derwent Hall.

Aston is in the Chapel-en-le-Frith rural district and returns one district councillor.

BROUGH AND SHATTON are two hamlets forming a joint township, containing 1,022 acres, including about 500 acres of common. The soil is light, lying on gritstone; there is also some clay. The total ratable value is £811, and the population 56. The township is included in the manor of Castleton. The landowners are Jonathan Colley, Esq. (Sheffield), C. S. Leslie, Esq. (Hassop), Samuel Needham, Esq., Robert How Ashton Esq. (Castleton), Mr. J. Robinson (Offerton), R. Jenninson, Esq. (Belle Vue, Manchester), Exors. of Thomas Wilson, and J. B. Howell, Esq.

Brough is a small village, pleasantly situated about one mile S.E. from Hope. Here the Bradwell brook unites its waters with the river Noe, and in the angle formed by their confluence was the site of a Roman station. The ground is slightly elevated, and bears the name of Halsteads. The camp enclosed an area measuring 310 feet by 270. Roman remains have been frequently turned up by the plough; amongst them have been urns, bricks, tiles, coins, a bust of Apollo, weapons of war, foundations of buildings and stone pillars. Two Roman roads have been traced leading from this camp; one still known in places as Bathomgate or Bathgate, proceeds to Buxton, and the other goes northwards to Melandra Castle, near Glossop. There is a tradition that the Peverils had a residence here.

Brough Mill, in the occupation of Mr. William Eyre, is probably coeval with the Norman Conquest. In the reign of Edward III. it belonged to the Strelleys, who held it by the singular service of attending the King on horseback, carrying a heron-falcon, whenever he should come into Derbyshire. If his horse should die in the journey the King was to buy him another, and provide him with two robes and bouche of court. A very ancient stone may be seen built into the end wall of the mill, and another on the gate post of a field by the road-side.

Shatton (Upper and Lower) consists of three or four farms situated one mile east of Brough.

Brough and Shatton elect one rural district councillor.

FERNILEE is a wild, straggling township, extending from Whaley Bridge to Buxton, a distance of 7 miles; but the ruggedness of the scenery is relieved by the picturesque appearance of the Goyt Valley, with its luxuriant growth of trees. Its estimated extent is 2,627 acres, ratable value £4,895, and population 1,233. The principal landowners are Captain Henry Shaw, Colonel E. T. D. C. Jodrell, George Dunn, Esq., the Misses Grimshaw (Errwood Hall), Albert Slack, Esq., Thomas Dunn, Esq., Chilworth Powder Co., Ltd., and the Duke of Devonshire. Fernilee was one of the many places granted to William Peveril. It is now included in the manor of High Peak, which is held on lease from the Crown by the Duke of Devonshire. The High Peak railway, extending from Whaley Bridge to Cromford, passes through the township. The Chilworth Powder Co., Ltd., have works here, at which about 50 men are employed. For carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act, seven parish councillors have been assigned to Fernilee and two district councillors.

The village is situated near the river Goyt, four miles from Chapel-en-le-Frith, $5\frac{1}{2}$ from Buxton, and 12 from the parish church of Hope. A Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1871. It is a neat building of brick, lighted by semi-circular windows, and seated with pitchpine benches to accommodate 150. Underneath the chapel is a well-lighted Sunday school. The chapel is in the Whaley Bridge circuit. A portion of Whaley Bridge is included in this township. Adjoining it is Horridge or Horwich End, a populous village, three miles from Chapel-en-le-Frith. A temporary chapel-of-ease, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, has been erected here, and at no distant date a permanent edifice will take its place. The Rev. J. Douglas Gawn, M.A., is the curate-in-charge. There is a good National school built in 1848, and attended by 120. A reading-room was opened a few years ago, and the 2nd Battalion of Sherwood Foresters have an armoury here. The Wesleys have a chapel at Whaley Bridge. It is a handsome edifice of stone, lighted by semi-circular windows, and surrounded by a gallery which almost doubles the sitting accommodation. It is neatly furnished in pitchpine. Adjoining is a day-school with an average attendance of 250.

HIGHLOW, a small township lying between Hathersage and Abney, contains 413 acres, belonging solely to the Duke of Devonshire, who is also lord of the manor. There were formerly lead works here, but the district is now purely agricultural, the land being devoted almost entirely to grazing. The ratable value is £326, and the inhabitants number 44. Highlow was long the seat of a branch of the Eyre family. The first of the family that settled here was Thomas Eyre, grandson of Robert Eyre and Joan Padley. Robert Eyre, of Highlow, was high sheriff of the county in 1658. His descendant assumed the name of Archer in the early part of the 18th century, and after the death of John Archer, the estate was sold under a decree of chancery, in 1842, to the Duke of Devonshire. Highlow Hall, an Elizabethan mansion with massive walls, is the residence of Mr. John Bateman Bagshaw, an extensive farmer.

Highlow is in the Western parliamentary division and Bakewell union and rural district. It is united with Abney for the election of a rural district councillor.

NETHER PADLEY is a small township containing 299½ acres, belonging solely to E. A. Jefferson Maynard, Esq., Rolleston, Burton-on-Trent. The ratable value is £272, and the population 42. The village, if such it can be called, is situated on the Sheffield Road, near the Derwent, 2¼ miles south from Hathersage. The township is in the Western parliamentary division and Bakewell union and rural district. This township is united with Froggatt for the election of a district councillor.

Padley anciently belonged to a family who took their name from the place, and were seated here as early as the reign of Henry III. It subsequently became the property of the Eyres by the marriage of Robert Eyre with the heiress, Joan Padley. The Eyres were once an influential and powerful family in the Peak, where they possessed considerable estates. The founder of the family, according to the Hassop pedigree, was named Truelove. He was present at the battle of Hastings, and seeing William unhorsed, and his helmet beaten down over his face so that he could not breathe, pulled off the helmet and assisted him to mount his horse again. The Conqueror said, "Thou shalt hereafter from Truelove be called 'Air' or 'Eyre,' because thou hast given me the air I breathe." After the battle, the king called for him, and being found with his thigh cut off, William ordered him to be taken care of, and after his recovery gave him lands in the county of Derby, in reward for his services. The seat he lived at was called Hope, because he had hope in the greatest extremity, and the king gave him the leg and thigh cut off in armour for his crest, which is still the crest of all the Eyres in England. The Eyres built a large mansion here, of which only the chapel with offices beneath now remains. The estate continued in the possession of the family for three generations, and then passed by the marriage of an heiress to Sir Thomas Fitzherbert, of Norbury. The Fitzherberts, like the Eyres, remained firm in their attachment to the faith of their fathers, and suffered much persecution for their recusancy under the mild sway of Queen Elizabeth. They were suspected of harbouring priests at Padley, and the hall was subject to constant domiciliary visits. During one of these searches in 1588, two Catholic priests, Nicholas Garlick and Robert Ludlam, were discovered in concealment. They were confined in Derby gaol, and condemned at the following assizes to be drawn, hanged, and quartered, which barbarous sentence was carried out on the 25th of July of the same year. The old chapel has been converted into a hayloft, but it still retains many of its ecclesiastical features, drawings of some of which are given in Dr. Cox's "Churches of Derbyshire."

OFFERTON township lies four miles S.E. from Hope, and 1¼ miles W. from Hathersage. Its extent, according to the overseer's returns, is 617 acres, of which about 245 acres are common lands. The ratable value is £313, and the number of inhabitants 27. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Offerton was a berewick or hamlet under Hope; it is now held by the Duke of Devonshire under the Crown. The principal landowners are Henry Cunliffe Shaw, Esq., George Robinson, Edale; Mrs. E. A. Greaves, Offerton; and the trustees of Mellor School. The soil is hazel on gritstone, with some clay, and is chiefly in pasture. The tithes were commuted in 1848, the large for £24, lamb and wool for £4 5s., and the vicarial for £4.

A branch of the Eyre family settled here in the 15th century. The Hall has been converted into a farmhouse, but still retains traces of its former importance.

Offerton is in the Western parliamentary division and Bakewell union and rural district. It is united with outseats for the election of a district councillor.

STOKE is a small township containing 511 acres of land, situated $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Stoney Middleton. The ratable value is £648, and the population in 1891 was 46. Michael Hunter, Esq., is sole owner and lord of the manor. Stoke Hall, the residence of Mr. Hunter, is an 18th century mansion, situated on the bank of the Derwent and embowered in woods. The district around is highly picturesque. There are in the township quarries of excellent gritstone, of which Sheffield Town Hall is now being built. Stoke is in the Baslow electoral division, Western parliamentary division, and Bakewell union and rural district. It is united with Eyam Woodlands for the election of a district councillor.

THORNHILL township embraces an area of 586 acres, ratable value £739, population 123. It is in the manor of Castleton, of which the Duke of Devonshire is the lessee from the Crown. The trustees of Col. Leslie are the principal owners; and James Ronksley, Esq., Joseph Ward Bennett, and John Wilson, also have land here. Thornhill was anciently owned by a family who took their name from the place. It afterwards came into the possession of the Eyres, of Hassop, from whom it descended to the late Colonel Leslie. The village is situated on the flank of Winhill, two miles E. from Hope. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here with burial ground attached, and the Primitive Methodists have also a place of worship.

Thornhill is in the Chapel-en-le-Frith union and rural district, and elects one district councillor.

MELLOR.

This is a parish in the High Peak hundred, Hayfield county council electoral division, union and rural district; county court district of Hyde, Cheshire, petty sessional division and deanery of Glossop, comprising an area of 2,353 acres, rateable value £5,736, and population 1,096. Under the new Local Government Act seven parish councillors have been assigned to Mellor, and three district councillors. The landowners are Jonas Craven, Esq., J.P., Mellor Hall, who is lord of the manor; Jonathan Jowett, Esq., Lower Hall, Mellor; Frederic Charles Arkwright, Esq., Willersley, Cromford; Lord Howard of Glossop; Lord Egerton, and a number of small freeholders. The soil is clayey, and is chiefly laid down in grass. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the cotton mills and collieries.

The early owners of the manor were the Mellors, descended from a younger son of Simon de Montford, from whom it passed by marriage to the Radcliffes. In 1686 the ancient seat of the family was bought by James Cheetham, Esq. In 1797 the estate was again sold, the appointment of the minister having already been bought by Mr. Thornton, of Clapham.

The village is pleasantly situated on the Hayfield and Stockport road, about eight miles S.W. from Glossop, and seven miles from Stockport. The Church, dedicated to St. Thomas, was, with the exception of the tower, rebuilt about 70 years ago, when little attention was bestowed on ecclesiastical architecture. The Gothic tower has been recently repaired, the old pews replaced by open seats of pitchpine, and the chancel furnished with carved oak stalls and sedilia, and the walls lined with carved oak panelling. Galleries on the south and west sides of the nave increase the accommodation, but do not improve the internal appearance. The east window is inscribed:—"To the Glory of God and to commemorate the confirmation by the Lord Bishop of Lichfield of Mary Beatrice and Margaret, daughters of Frederick and Mary Anne Cooper, of West Tower, Marple, July, 1874." A curious old font stands in a recess at the west end. It is circular, cut out of a block of sandstone, and ornamented with three quaintly incised figures of strange proportions. One represents a human figure on horse-back, but what it was intended to symbolize it is impossible to say. Another relic of the old church is a beautifully carved oak pulpit, of which Dr. Cox gives a drawing in his "Churches of Derbyshire." The living is a vicarage, worth £140 yearly, in the gift of and held by the Rev. T. M. Freeman since 1859.

The United Methodist Free Church is a neat, substantial stone building with gabled front, erected in 1846. It is well lighted with semicircular-headed windows, and comfortably furnished with pews of painted wood. The chapel, with the gallery, affords accommodation for 250.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel, built in 1827, and situated in Mellor Moor End, is a plain, oblong stone structure with accommodation for about 200 worshippers.

The earliest provision for educational purposes was made by Thomas Walklate, who died in 1639. In accordance with his will a Free Grammar School was erected in the churchyard, and the premises were rebuilt in 1806. This building was taken down in 1880, and a new school erected on another site without the churchyard, by the School Board, to which the endowment, about £90 yearly, has been transferred.

Mellor Hall, the seat and property of Jonas Craven, Esq., J.P., is a handsome cut-stone mansion, nestling amidst a profusion of luxuriant trees on an eminence overlooking the Marple Valley. It is lighted by pendicular stone-mullioned and square-headed windows. On an adjoining building are these initials: I C (James Cheetham) 1688.

We may mention two very praiseworthy institutions located here. One is a holiday home for girls employed in mills; the other is "The Manchester Cathedral Cottage Home," for invalids of both sexes belonging to the Church of England.

Part of the hamlet of Brook Bottom is situated in this parish.

Post Office, Spring bank, Mellor. Letters, via Stockport, arrive at 7-30 a.m. daily, and are despatched at 6-20 p.m. on week-days, and 10 a.m. on Sundays. Wall Letter Box, at the Church, cleared at 6-35 p.m. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office, Marple Bridge, two miles distant. James Marsland, sub-postmaster.

Letters for names marked † should be addressed Mellor, Marple Bridge, Stockport; and marked * Mellor, New Mills, Stockport.

NEW MILLS.

New Mills is an extensive modern parish, containing 4,890 acres of land, lying on the border of Cheshire, from which it is separated by the river Goyt. It is in the hundred of High Peak, police district of Chapel-en-le-Frith and Glossop; county council electoral division of New Mills; county court district of Buxton; union of Hayfield, and deanery of Glossop. The total ratable value of the parish is £21,899, and the population in 1891 was 5,498. The Duke of Devonshire, F. J. Sumner, Jonathan Jowett, Lord Egerton, Turner and Brentnall, Joseph Handfield, and Mrs. John Mackie are the principal landowners. The Duke of Devonshire is lessee of the manor from the Duchy of Lancaster.

New Mills is under the control of an urban parish council whose district also includes Beard, Ollersett, Thornsett, Whittle, and Newtown. The latter is situated on the Cheshire side of the river and, under the Parish and District Councils Act, forms a separate urban parish returning one guardian. New Mills parish, embracing the rest of the urban sanitary district, returns five guardians.

The village of New Mills, or we might say the busy little town, is situated on the bank of the river Goyt, from which the houses and factories rise tier above tier on the hill side to a considerable height. It is eight miles from Stockport, 11 miles from Buxton, and 43 miles from Derby. It is skirted by the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland railway, and the London & North-Western approaches within a mile. The church, dedicated to St. George, was erected in 1831, at a cost of £2,500. It is a handsome Gothic edifice comprising nave, chancel, side aisles, and a pinnacled tower surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire, but the interior aspect is somewhat disappointing. The chancel is lighted by three tall single-light lancet windows which have been filled with stained glass at the expense of Mrs. Mackie. Windows of the same character, seven on each side, light the nave and aisles. Two on the north side bear representations of our Saviour and St. John the Baptist, and Moses and Aaron. On a brass is inscribed "In memory of the Rev. John Rigg, M.A., vicar of New Mills for 20 years, who finished his work November 10th, 1868, aged 56 years. His parishioners and friends have placed these windows to record their appreciation of his labours." Two on the south side are also memorials. On the north wall of the nave, under the gallery, is a marble tablet inscribed "In memory of James Ingham, Esq., J.P., of Watford villa, New Mills, who departed this life, May 8th, 1868, aged 67 years," and on a brass underneath is "The above tablet was erected by his neighbours and friends in acknowledgment of the liberal support he rendered to this church, and the Bequest of £500 contained in his will, the interest of which is paid towards educating and clothing the poor of this parish." The Font, which stands in the middle of the nave, is a beautiful piece of sculpture, erected by the parishioners and tenants of Lord Egerton's estate in Lancashire, in memory of John Taylor, J.P. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 yearly, with residence, in the gift of the Vicar of Glossop, and held by the Rev. F. W. Newman, M.A.

The Church schools form a pretty block of stone buildings, with teacher's residence attached. There are two departments, mixed and infants, with an average attendance of 220.

The chapel-of-ease, dedicated to St. James the Less, and the almshouses to which it is attached, were erected in 1880, by the late John Mackie, Esq., J.P., and Mary his wife, in memory of the parents of the latter—the late Mr. and Mrs. Ingham. The edifice consists of nave and apsidal chancel, and is in the style of architecture that prevailed in the latter part of the 13th century. In the apse are three lancet windows, filled with stained glass from the studio of Mr. Kempe, Beaumont street, London. A three-light window, with traceried head, in the south wall, and two large two-light windows in the west wall, are also pictorial. Frescoes by Mr. Powell, of Leeds, illustrating events in the life of Our Lord, adorn the north wall. A beautiful marble panel has been placed on the same side by Mrs. Mackie, in memory of her late husband. The total cost of the church was £2,750.

The Ingham Almshouses consist of six handsome cottages of stone, containing a good sitting-room, a bedroom, and a small scullery. The houses are divided by a covered porch, with pointed arches resting on circular pillars, with sculptured capitals. In front is a beautifully laid-out piece of garden ground. The church and almshouses occupy two sides of a quadrangular plot of land adjoining Spring Bank.

The Catholic Church, dedicated to St. Mary, occupies a commanding situation in High Lee. It is a handsome edifice of stone, in the Decorative Gothic style, erected in 1845-6 at a cost of £4,000, and comprises sanctuary with a chapel on either side, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and western tower surmounted by a spire. The interior aspect is solemn and impressive. The arcade on either side of the nave rests on low, massive, octagonal columns; and the noble chancel arch springs from similar responds. The east window is a three-light one, filled with stained glass representing scenes from sacred history. Beneath this is the high altar, a very fine one of alabaster and stone, given by Mr. Denis Lane, of London. Statues of various saints adorn the walls, as well as a very fine set of stations of the Cross, in high relief and richly coloured, against a back ground of gold. In connection with the church is a day school, attended by about 80 children.

The Wesleyan Chapel, in St. George's road, erected in 1813, is a good stone building, seated on an eminence and approached by a flight of 34 steps. A gallery is carried round three sides, which increases the accommodation to 340. The chapel is provided with an excellent organ, built by Hardy, of Manchester, at a cost of £400. Adjoining the chapel is a small cemetery. There is a large day school in connection with the chapel, situated in High street. The Congregational Church, in Chapel street, is a substantial building of cut stone, with Sunday school and classrooms on the basement, erected in 1823. A gallery surrounds it on three sides. The interior is furnished with open pews of pitch-pine to seat 500. There is another church belonging to the same sect in Thornsett. The United Methodist Free Church, Spring Bank, erected in 1892, at a cost of about £2,700, is a spacious structure, lighted by semicircular-headed windows, and is furnished throughout in polished pitchpine. There is sitting accommodation for 450. A handsome organ stands in a deep recess in the western gable, beneath which is the rostrum upon an elevated platform. Adjoining the church is the Sunday school, comprising one large room and four classrooms.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in Spring Bank, built in 1876 at a cost of £2,700. It is a substantial edifice of stone in an attractive style of architecture, and is furnished with open pews of pitchpine to seat 350. On the basement are the Sunday school and classrooms. They have another chapel in Thornsett, built in 1867 at a cost of £2,900.

A School Board of seven members was formed in 1876, and handsome and capacious schools have been erected at Spring Bank, Hague Bar, and Thornsett. In addition to providing an excellent elementary education, the Board has established a technical department under the scheme of the Derbyshire County Council.

The town has its Public Hall and its Victoria Market Hall. The former was erected in 1870, by public subscription, at a cost of over £2,000. The latter is private property. There are several cotton mills, calico printing works, engineering works, engraving works, and chemical works.

This district was formerly known as Middlecale, and embraced a number of hamlets extending from Kinder Scout to the banks of the Goyt. In accordance with manorial privilege all the inhabitants were compelled to grind their corn at the common mill at Hayfield. About a century and a half ago a re-arrangement of the hamlets took place, three being added to Chinley, three to Hayfield, and the remainder, Beard, Ollersett, Thornsett, and Whittle, were formed into a township. A new mill was built on the river Sett, in the hamlet of Ollersett, and hence arose the name New Mills.

Beard is a hamlet extending southwards from New Mills. The surface is beautifully diversified by hill and dale, and richly wooded. Hague Bar is a small village on the Marple road. From the rising ground to the right there is a beautiful view of the country on the Cheshire side of the river Goyt. Ollersett hamlet stretches eastward from New Mills. Low Leighton is a small village between New Mills and Hayfield. Here is the Hayfield Union Workhouse. Here also is a Friends' Meeting House, erected in 1717, though there are no resident Friends in the village. Coal and gritstone are worked in the district. Thornsett hamlet extends N.E., and contains a portion of New Mills, including the Parish Church, Congregational Chapel, Garrison Bleach Works, &c. Coal is worked on a small scale. At the eastern extremity of the hamlet on the border of Hayfield parish is Lantern Pike—a hill of considerable altitude, commanding from its summit an excellent bird's-eye view of the surrounding district. A portion of Birch Vale extends into Thornsett hamlet. Birch Vale House, the property and residence of Thomas Bennett, Esq., J.P., is a substantial structure, pleasantly situated on rising ground above the river Sett. It is surrounded by four acres of pleasure grounds.

Rowarth is a scattered village in this hamlet, a little N.W. of Lantern Pike. It was once a busy little place, and could boast three or four cotton mills, but the only industry now is a bleachworks. There is a United Methodist Free Church. On a stone above the door is inscribed "Sunday school for children of all denominations, A.D. 1824."

Whittle is another hamlet in this township, extending N. and N.W. from New Mills.

PEAK FOREST.

This chapelry and extra parochial liberty embraces 5,050 acres of land lying about half-way between Tideswell and Chapel-en-le-Frith. It is in the hundred of High Peak; county council electoral division of Fairfield; petty sessional division and poor law union of Chapel-en-le-Frith; county court district and deanery of Buxton. The population in 1891 was 502. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal landowner. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Peak Forest returns six parish councillors and one district councillor.

A chapel was erected here in 1657, and dedicated to "Charles, King and Martyr." This building, which possessed no architectural pretensions, was taken down after the erection of the present handsome church by the Duke of Devonshire in 1878. This chapel was under no parochial obligations, nor was it subject to any episcopal authority. The minister consequently possessed many privileges, and was himself "Judge in Spiritualities in the Peculiar Court of Peak Forest." He was his own surrogate, and could grant marriage licenses without any fear of consequences, either spiritual or temporal. The chapel became a sort of purified Gretna Green, where runaway couples could be married with all the formalities of the ritual. These marriage fees added considerably to the chaplain's income, but the privilege was abolished by an Act of Parliament in 1804. The living is now a vicarage worth £198 yearly, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. George Rogerson.

The village stands on the Tideswell and Chapel-en-le-Frith road, three miles N.W. of the former, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. of the latter, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Peak Forest or Peak Dale Station, on the Derby and Manchester branch of the Midland railway. About a mile north of the village is Eldon Hill, a bleak, limestone mountain but sparingly covered with grass. In the side of the hill is Eldon Hole, once reputed bottomless, and about which many stories have been told. It is a perpendicular chasm or rift in the limestone rock, and has excited the attention of the curious for several centuries. The Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favourite, had a man let down into it to find the bottom; but when drawn up he was speechless, so it is said, and shortly afterwards died. Cotton, the poet of the Peak, endeavoured to ascertain its depths, but failed, as he tells us:—

"For I, myself, with half the Peak surrounded,
Eight hundred four score and four yards have sounded;
And though of these four score returned back wet,
The plummet drew and found no bottom yet;
Though when I went to make a new essay
I could not get the lead down half the way."

Mr. Lloyd, F.R.S., who descended in 1773, was more successful, and reached the bottom at 180 feet. Another successful descent was made by Mr. Rooke Pennington, F.G.S., Mr. J. Tym, of Castleton, and others on the 11th of September, 1873, and a descriptive account of their experiences was published in the "Manchester Literary and Philosophical Magazine," 1875. A wooden stage was erected and a rope and windlass provided. Securely fastened to the rope, Mr. Tym was the first to descend. At the depth of 15 or 20 yards he came in contact with the projecting sides of the chasm. At a distance of 180 feet from the top a landing place was reached, which inclined at an angle of 45 degrees. Mr. Pennington and the others then descended one at a time. There was sufficient light at this point to enable any one to sketch or read. The floor was entirely covered with loose fragments of limestone, which had probably been thrown down by visitors to the Hole. From this point there was a cavern of steep descent, from which daylight was totally excluded. Traversing this for some distance the narrow tunnel-like passage "suddenly expanded into a magnificent hall, about 100 feet across and 70 feet high. The roof and sides were covered with splendid stalagmitic deposits, and from the roof hung fine stalactites that glittered and sparkled with fairy-like effect when the cave was illumined by Bengal fire. From this expansive cavern they could find no opening except the one by which they had entered it, thus disproving the popular local tradition about the old woman's goose that flew down and, after being given up for lost, subsequently reappeared at the mouth of the Peak Cavern, at Castleton.*

Barmoor, an extensive moorland district, is partly within this parish. Here, at Barmoor Clough, is the Ebbing and Flowing Well, which used to be considered another of the wonders of the Peak. (See page 146.)

WORMHILL.

This is a parish and township containing 4,404 acres, in the hundred of High Peak, poor law union and rural district of Chapel-en-le-Frith, electoral division of Fairfield, petty sessional division, county court district and rural deanery of Buxton. The parish includes a portion of Millers Dale. Its total rateable value is £14,353, and the population in 1891 was 1,350. The principal landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, lord of the manor; F. W. Bagshawe, Esq., T. B. Fleining, Esq., W. H. G. Bagshawe, Esq., Rev. A. D. Bagshawe, and W. Swann, Esq.

The name of this place is written Wruenele in Domesday Book, but tradition says it was originally called Wolfhill, from the number of those animals that harboured in the surrounding woods; be that as it may, we know that in the 14th century a family of the name of Wolfhunt held a house and lands in Wormhill, by the service of chasing and taking all wolves that should come into the King's Forest of the Peak.

The village, scattered and bleak looking, is situated in a secluded dell, 2½ miles from Tideswell, six miles from Buxton and 1½ miles from Millers Dale station, on the Midland railway. In the year 1273 permission was given to the inhabitants of Wormhill to erect a chapel and maintain a chaplain at their own expense, but this permission carefully guarded the interests of the mother church. It remained a chapelry under Tideswell until 1859, when it was constituted a parish. The church, which is dedicated to St. Margaret, was rebuilt in 1864, but the coating of ivy which covers the walls, gives it a picturesque and venerable appearance. The edifice comprises chancel, nave, porch, and a square tower terminating in a hexagonal spire. The style is Gothic. An expansive arch, about midway down the church, shows the extent of the recent enlargement at the west end. On each side of the chancel arch and over all the windows are scripture texts. The pulpit is a very fine piece of work. The font, of white marble, supported on four black marble pillars and pedestal, is enclosed by handsome brass rails. The tower contains a peal of six bells, cast by J. Taylor & Co., Loughborough, in 1863. "They are said to be, in point of size and weight, the smallest peal of church bells in existence."* The registers date from 1670. The living is a vicarage, net value £300, with residence, in the gift of trustees, and held by the Rev. A. Drake Bagshawe, M.A.

The school was rebuilt by the Rev. William Bagshawe, and enlarged in 1871. There is accommodation for 80 children, and an average attendance of 50. Embowered in a grove of holly and yew trees is a well, surmounted by a monument, triangular in shape, and about 12 feet high, on which is inscribed "1875. In memory of James Brindley, civil engineer, born in this parish, A.D., 1716." Brindley is said to have been born at Tunstead. After serving his apprenticeship with a wheelwright, he obtained considerable fame for his skill in the erection of mills. He attracted the notice of the Duke of Bridgewater, who employed him in the construction of the famous Bridgewater canal. He was a self-taught genius, whose early life was spent without the advantages of a school education; and so illiterate was he when he entered on his career, that he could neither read nor write. His wages were only half-a-crown a day, for skill and labour, when he entered the Duke's service, and he offered to contract to serve for three years at the rate of one guinea per week. In consequence of the success of his undertakings his reputation stood very high, and he was employed in a variety of similar works in different parts of the country. He died in 1772.

About half-a-mile south from the village is Chee Dale, a sequestered dell, bounded on one side by a crescent of precipitous rocks, and on the other, Chee Tor, a mighty limestone rock, raises its bold and majestic head to a perpendicular height of more than 300 feet. This rock is semicircular in shape, answerable to the concavity of the opposite rocks, from which both its form and stratification show that it was riven by some mighty force in the long, long past. Its rocky surface is naked, grim, and lifeless, except in the crevices, where some stunted forms of vegetable life retain with difficulty a foothold, and round the topmost rim, where there is, as it were, a diadem of yew trees crowning its craggy forehead. At the base, the Wye babbles along its rocky bed, guarded on the other side by a semicircular sweep of precipitous cliffs, presenting the appearance of an immense amphitheatre, where the rocks, "stage upon stage, ascending, rise." These rocky ledges are thickly clothed with vegetation, and are fringed with the yew, wych-elm, and mountain ash. "This vale of rocks, with its high impending cliffs, its rocky rampart, its tottering battlements, and its various combinations of crag and foliage, presents a scene of wild magnificence and grandeur, the effect of which is increased by the dark water rushing with foaming impetuosity through the leafy chasm beneath."†

The hamlets of Dove Hole Dale, Tunstead Great Rocks, Upper End, and Bibbington were incorporated under the name of Peak Forest, where there is a station on the Midland railway, but recently, to prevent its being confounded with another Peak Forest a little further north, the name has been changed to Peak Dale. There are extensive quarries and lime works here. A handsome church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected in 1885, at a cost of about £1,500. The pulpit, reading desk, communion table, and lectern were given by a member of the Bagshawe family, in memory of the Rev. E. B. Bagshawe, M.A., for 36 years rector of Eyam. The chancel arch is spanned by very handsome brass rails, erected by the late Mrs. Phayre in memory of her husband, the Rev. Maxwell Phayre. The church is a chapel-of-ease to Wormhill. Annexed to it is a reading room, well lighted and furnished. The Wesleyan chapel at Great Rocks was built in 1885. It is a neat stone building, capable of seating 200. Underneath is a school. Peak Dale Board School was erected in

* "Reliquary," vol. xiv., p. 104.

† "On Foot through the Peak."

1884, at a cost of £1,200. It is a substantial structure of stone, with accommodation for 220, and an average attendance of 150.

Hargate Wall, The Meadow, Tunstead Upper, and Tunstead Lower are small hamlets in this parish. Millers Dale is partly in this parish, and partly in Tideswell. The surrounding country is precipitous and barren, with here and there a spread of green that relieves the sombre appearance of the landscape. There is here a station on the Midland railway, situated at a considerable elevation, whence there is a good view of the river Wye, as it winds its way through the sequestered valley below. A little distance from the station are extensive limestone quarries. Further up the dale, the cliffs on both sides become more precipitous, and in some places their connection with the parent rock appears so slender as to cause fear and trepidation in the mind of the spectator below. Here and there the beetling cliffs are embellished with overhanging trees and shrubs, which impart life and beauty to the rugged landscape.

Under the Local Government Act of 1894, seven parish councillors have been assigned to Wormhill, and two rural district councillors.

NORTH-EASTERN PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

BARLBOROUGH.

This is a parish and township containing 3,306 acres of land lying on the borders of Yorkshire, from which it is separated by a rivulet that runs into Pebbley Pond—a small lake covering an area of about 50 acres, partly in this parish and partly in Yorkshire. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale; electoral division of Bolsover; petty sessional division of Chesterfield; county court district and poor law union of Worksop, and deanery of Staveley. The total rateable value is £10,472, and the population in 1891 was 1,900. The trustees of the late W. H. de Rodes, Esq., Barlborough Hall; and R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., Radborne Hall, are joint owners of the manor and principal landowners.

The earliest notice of Barlborough occurs in the will of Wulfric Spott, dated 1002, wherein he gives this and the adjacent manors of Clowne and Eckington to Morcare. At the time of the Domesday Survey, it formed a joint manor with Whitwell, belonging to Ralph Fitzhubert; under whom it was held by one Robert, supposed to have been the ancestor of Robert de Meinell, who subsequently appears as lord of Barlborough. One of his coheireses brought the manors of Barlborough, Killamarsh and Whitwell to Sir Matthew de Hathersage in the reign of John; and in the latter end of the reign of Henry III. the coheireses of Hathersage brought it in moieties to the families of Goushill and Longford. The latter family retained possession of their moiety till 1610, when one of the coheireses of Sir Nicholas Longford conveyed it to a younger son of the Poles of Wakebridge. The Poles resided on their estate here, till the death of Margaret and Mary Pole, two maiden ladies and the last representatives of the family, in 1755. It then passed by will to another branch of the Pole family. The descent of the other moiety is somewhat complicated. It appears to have remained with the Goushill family till about the close of the 15th century, when Anthony Wingfield, who had married a coheiress of Sir Robert Goushill, suffered a recovery in 1513. Thomas, Earl of Derby, died in 1521, seized of a manor in Barlborough, which is supposed to have been this moiety; and it was probably this same manor that was in the possession of Sir William Holles, sometime Lord Mayor of London, at the time of his death, in 1542. Queen Mary, in 1554, granted the manor that had belonged to the Stanleys, to Dame Anne Stanhope; and Sir Thomas Stanhope sold it, in 1571, to Sir Richard Pype, another Lord Mayor of London, who died seized of it and the advowson of the rectory in 1587. There appears to have been at one time a third moiety, about which very little is known; and the three parks described in a survey of Barlborough, taken in 1630, evidently point to this tripartite division. Francis Rodes, Esq., made a justice of the common pleas in 1585, purchased an estate here described as the manor of Barlborough, of the Seliokes. A dispute arose about the manorial rights, which led to a law suit between Humphrey Pype, son of the above-named Lord Mayor, and Sir John Rodes, the son of Francis Rodes. It is probable that Sir John Rodes eventually purchased Pype's moiety. The Seliok estate had previously belonged to the Constables of Yorkshire; and it was probably the one described in the Esche. 23 Edward I. as the "manor of Ada de Grydeling and the park of Barlborough," then held by William de Fauconberg.

Barlborough Hall, the seat of the Rodes, is a handsome mansion, erected in the reign of Elizabeth, and is a good specimen of the style that then prevailed. The principal front is ornamented by three semi-octagonal bays, which terminate in turrets above the roof, and give it an imposing appearance. The hall stands in a spacious, well-wooded park, and is approached through an avenue of lofty lime trees. The family of Rodes derives its descent from Gerard de Rodes, who lived in the reign of Henry II. (1154-1189), and had the lordships of Laugar and Barneston, in Lincolnshire, by grant from Richard I. John Rodes, son of the judge, was knighted in 1603; and Francis Rodes, son of the latter, was created a baronet in 1641. Sir John, the fourth baronet, died unmarried in 1743, when the title became extinct, and the estate descended to his sister's grandson, Gilbert Heathcote, who assumed the name of Rodes. This gentleman was never married, and was succeeded at his death, in 1768, by his nephew, Cornelius Heathcote, who also adopted the name of Rodes. He died unmarried in 1825, and was succeeded by his nephew, the Rev. Cornelius Heathcote Reaston, who assumed the name and arms of Rodes, and at his death, in 1844, without issue, devised the estate to his wife's nephew, William Hatfield Gossip, who took the name, de Rodes. This gentleman died in 1856, leaving a son, William Hatfield de Rodes (who succeeded to the estate), and a daughter. Mr. de Rodes married Sophia Felicité Curzon, sister of Lord Scarsdale, and died in 1883. The estate is now in the hands of the trustees.

Park Hall, the mansion house of the other moiety of the manor, is an ancient structure, belonging, together with the estate, to R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., of Radbourne Hall, and the residence of S. Chandos-Pole, Esq., his son.

The village of Barlborough stands on the Sheffield and Worksoy road which skirts the park, eight miles N.E. from Chesterfield, 10 S.E. from Sheffield, one mile from Clowne station, and 2½ from Eckington, on the Midland railway. Agriculture and coal mining are the chief occupations of the inhabitants. Barlborough colliery, commenced about 20 years ago, gives employment to 550 hands. The shaft is 270 yards deep where the Top Hard seam is reached, and the output is about 200,000 tons per annum. A new colliery has been recently opened out by Mr. Job, an American gentleman, who has leased about 1,000 acres of the High Hazle seam on the Park Hall estate. The coal is undercut by machinery of the latest type, worked by electricity. There was a church here at the time of the Domesday Survey. The present edifice, dedicated to St. James, consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and embattled tower. The oldest part of the fabric is the four semicircular arches of the aisle, which date from later Norman times. Restorations in the Early English, Perpendicular, and later styles are also visible. The repairs and alterations effected in the church in the early part of last century, betray that utter want of taste that characterised the architecture of the period. On a brass at the east end of the north aisle is inscribed: "In hopes of a blessed resurrection are hereunder deposited the remains of Mrs. Margaret Pole and Mrs. Mary Pole, two maiden sisters, whose lives were employed in the exercise of piety and works of charity, in which they had a special regard for the House of God, and His living temples, the poor; whereof, as to the former, the handsome addition made to this sacred edifice, and the new seating of another in an adjoining parish, and as to the latter an almshouse erected in this town are generous instances; as they were always joined together in these good works, so in their deaths they were not long divided: Mrs. Margaret Pole died 7th August, and Mrs. Mary Pole 17th September, 1755." Mr. Gilbert Rodes, who died in 1768, is said to have rebuilt the front of the church. On the west side of the tower are the arms of Goushill and Longford, and there are other shields on the walls of the chancel. The most interesting monument in the church is a mutilated slab bearing the effigy of a lady, sculptured in low relief. Only two or three words of the inscription are legible; but when Bassam visited Barlborough in 1705, sufficient then remained to show that it was the monument of Joan, daughter and heiress of William Furnival. She married Sir Thomas Nevile, who became lord of Furnival in right of his wife, and was buried in Worksop Priory in 1395; where also her husband was buried in 1406. They left one daughter, who married John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury. It is supposed to have been removed from the old priory church of Worksop to Barlborough by Judge Rodes, who was seneschall to the Earl of Shrewsbury. In the chancel there is a tablet to Richard Pype, citizen, and once Lord Mayor of London, and sole patron of this rectory, who died in 1587. There are also a few monuments of modern date. The tower contains a peal of five bells, two of which bear pre-Reformation inscriptions.

The living is a rectory, in the gift of the trustees of Barlborough Hall estate, worth £650 net, derived from tithe rent charge and 73 acres of glebe, and held by the Rev. M. Stapylton, M.A.; curate, A. S. Dowling.

The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here.

The village is well provided with educational facilities. New schools for boys and girls were built in 1866, by the late Mrs. de Rodes, and are now supported by the trustees of the estate. They are attended by about 140 children. In front is a beautiful gateway erected by the late W. H. de Rodes, Esq., in memory of his wife. It is surmounted by a cornice, bearing, on a mosaic ground of gold and silver, "MIZPAH," and the date MDCCCLIX.; and the lady's monogram appears in the centre of each half gate. The old National School is appropriated solely to infants, of whom about 90 attend on an average. It is endowed with £20 a year from the De Rodes' estate.

Barlborough House, an ancient mansion, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles west of the village, is the property of J. E. Butler-Bowdon, Esq., Pleasington Hall, Lancashire, and the residence of his brother, Lancelot George Butler-Bowden, Esq., J.P. The Bowdens are of considerable antiquity in Derbyshire, and were originally seated at Bowdon Hall, near Chapel-en-le-Frith. That estate passed from the family by an heiress in 1680. The present branch has been seated in this parish for upwards of 200 years. The late John Butler-Bowdon, Esq., second son of John Peter Bruno Bowdon, Esq., of Beighton Fields and Southgate House, inherited the Pleasington Hall estates from his cousin, Mary Anne Butler, whose name and arms he took in addition to his own, by Royal sign-manual dated Jan. 21, 1841; and he succeeded to the Southgate estate on the death of his brother Henry in 1875. He died in 1878 leaving issue by his wife, Amelia Catherine Frances, daughter of George Thomas Whitgreave, Esq., of Moseley court, Staffordshire, John Erdeswick, of Pleasington Hall, county Lancaster, and Southgate House, county Derby, married (1st) Madeline Mary, daughter of Edward Wright, Esq., who died in 1877; (2nd) Monica, daughter of the 12th Lord Petre, and has issue; Lancelot George, of Barlborough House, J.P. and C.C. for Bolsover division, married Ella Cecily Mary, daughter of A. W. Clifton, Esq., of Warton Hall, Lytham; Jermyne Thomas, and Bruno Aloysius.

Beighton Fields came into the possession of the Bowden family in 1665 by the marriage of Mary Hewit, daughter of John Hewit, of Beighton Fields, to Henry Bowden. The house was originally a hospice for aged and sick monks, chiefly from Welbeck Abbey, and a block of monk's cells is still to be seen, also a hiding hole where priests were secreted in the days of religious persecution. Part of the priest's hiding hole and chapel still remain at Barlborough House.

The Arthur family have been residents in the parish for at least 200 years as tenants of the same farm, and the present occupant possesses several silver cups which have been won by various members of the family for the best kept farm.

Whitebrick Moor, one mile E.N.E. of the village, consists of a few scattered farms.

CHARITIES.—Margaret and Mary Pole, in 1752, founded an almshouse here for six poor persons, and endowed it with 46 acres of land at Froggatt, to which an allotment of 33a. 3r. 23p. was made at the enclosure in 1824. The total income from all sources amounts to about £75 per annum, and the six annuitants receive 4s. 6d. each per week, and a load of coals four times a year. Godfrey Godley, in 1623, left the interest of £30, for which £1 10s. is received, out of Barlborough Hall estate, and given to the poor. Christopher Slater, in 1649, left £1 yearly. For this charity 5s. is received from Barlborough Hall estate, and 6s. 8d. is paid by Appleby & Co., of Cottam Colliery. Several small bequests by William Cooke and others were invested in land, now producing £15 a year, which is distributed amongst the poor. The sum of £3 19s. 4d. from Webster's charity is distributed on St. Thomas's Day, and £6 12s. 11d. from Gisborne's bequest is expended in flannel and coarse cloth for the poor.

Post, Money Order, Savings, and Telegraph Office, at Mrs. Sarah Hannah Hibbard's, Barlborough, Chesterfield. Letters arrive at 7-20 a.m., and are despatched at 5-40 p.m.; Sunday, 2-40 p.m.

BEAUCHIEF.

This is a small extra-parochial liberty, containing 706 acres of land, belonging chiefly to Edward Strelley Pegge-Burnell, Esq., of Winkburn Hall, Notts, who is also lord of the manor. It lies on the borders of Yorkshire, and is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division of Eckington, county court district of Sheffield, county council division of Norton, deanery of Dronfield, poor law union of Ecclesall Bierlow, Norton rural district, and under the Local Government Act of 1894 it elects one rural district councillor. The ratable value is £2,293, and the population in 1891 was 70.

The Abbey of Beauchief, or as the Norman-French name was rendered in Latin, De Bello Capite (Anglicè "fair head"), was founded by Robert Fitzranulph, about the year 1176, and endowed with the churches of Alfreton, Norton and Elvaston, in Derbyshire; Wymeswold, in Leicestershire; and lands in Norton and elsewhere. It was peopled by monks of the Premonstratensian order, then but recently introduced into England, who, from the colour of their habit, were generally known as the White Canons. The abbey was dedicated to St. Thomas of Canterbury and the Blessed Virgin; and a belief, countenanced by Dugdale, Fuller, Tanner, and others, became popular in later years, that Robert Fitzranulph was one of the four knights who murdered the archbishop in his cathedral at Canterbury, and built this monastery in expiation of his crime. This statement has been proved by Dr. Pegge, in his history of the abbey, to be erroneous. The four "noble" knights who assassinated Becket were Reginald Fitzurse, William Tracy, Hugh de Moreville, and Richard Brito. The founder's son and grandson were also benefactors to the abbey; Gerard de Furnival, and Thomas his son, gave the monks lands and common of pasture at Fulwood and Rivington; and Sir Thomas Chaworth gave Greenhill, in Norton, for the support of an additional canon. The community consisted of an abbot and twelve canons or brothers. The list of abbots is very incomplete, and does not include the name of one illustrious personage; though Glover says the Abbot of Beauchief was summoned to Parliament in the reign of Edward I. John Sheffield was the last abbot. He surrendered the abbey to the King in 1536, but does not appear to have received any pension. The revenues were valued at £126 3s. 4d.; and the following year the site of the abbey and the surrounding estate were granted to Sir Nicholas Strelley for £223. About the middle of the 17th century, Gertrude, only daughter and heiress of Nicholas Strelley, Esq., conveyed the estate by marriage to Edward Pegge, Esq., of Ashbourne, and it still remains in the possession of this family.

The various buildings of the abbey are said to have covered an acre of ground, but the only remains now left are "the western tower and a patched up portion of the nave of the church." After Mr. Edward Pegge came into possession of the abbey lands, he completely demolished the ruins, and used the materials in the erection of Beauchief Hall in the immediate vicinity. There is an interesting relic of the old abbey preserved at Osberton, Nottinghamshire, the seat of the Foljambes. It is a carving in alabaster representing the murder of Thomas à Becket, which is believed to have been the original altar-piece of the abbey church; and it is further supposed, from the Foljambe arms which it bears, that it was presented to the abbey by a member of that family.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Thomas, was patched and made fit for Divine service when the hall was built, in the reign of Charles II.; and the old-fashioned box pews and the almost obsolete two-decker pulpit, show that little change has been made since that time. The tower—a portion of the abbey church—is supported by elegant diagonal buttresses at the corners. It was originally a stage higher, and local gossip attributes its destruction to Oliver Cromwell, who is said to have blown the top off with canon planted on Bole Hill. A Norman window in the south wall of the nave, and a doorway of the same character, seem to have belonged to the first abbey, built by Robert Fitzranulph. The interior is plain and unattractive. There are no pre-Reformation memorials, though it is known that several wealthy persons were buried at Beauchief. The family vault of the Pegges is here; and there are monuments to some members of the family. One to the memory of Elizabeth, wife of Benjamin Broughton Steade, Esq., who afterwards assumed the name of Pegge-Burnell on inheriting the estate, is a fine piece of carving in marble, representing an old woman at the door of a mansion craving charity from the lady of the house. The living is a donative, in the gift of Colonel Pegge-Burnell, and held conjointly with the vicarage of Norton Woodseats.

Beauchief Hall, the property of Colonel Pegge-Burnell, and residence of William Wilson, Esq., J.P., is a large mansion, delightfully situated on the summit of a wood-crowned eminence, and surrounded by a park upwards of 100 acres in extent. The grounds on the south side are laid out in terraces ornamented with flower beds. The gardens and pleasure grounds cover about four acres. There are here some grand specimens of Irish yews, magnolia, tulip trees, and a cork tree 200 years old. Below the terraces are some ornamental waters well stocked with fish. The hall is one mile distant from Beauchief and Abbeydale station on the Midland railway.

BEIGHTON.

This is an important and populous parish, situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county, on the borders of Yorkshire, from which it is separated by the Rother and a small tributary of that river. Its total extent is 3,136 acres, of which 2,998 are under assessment, ratable value £18,306, and population 2,852. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division of Eckington; poor law union and county court district of Rotherham; deanery of Staveley; and gives name to a division for the election of a member of the County Council. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, an arrangement has been made between the County Council of Derbyshire and that of the West Riding, for the transference of Beighton parish to Chesterfield union and rural sanitary district, and eight parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to it. Earl Manvers is lord of the manor and principal landowner. The Midland, and the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Companies own the land occupied by their lines which pass through the parish; and the east to west railway now in course of construction will also intersect it.

The earliest notice of Beighton occurs in the will of Wulfrie Spott, A.D. 1002, wherein he bequeaths to Morcar his land at Beighton and other places. At the time of the Domesday Survey there appear to have been two manors in Bectune (Beighton), one of which was held by Lewin, under Roger de Busli, and the other belonged to Roger de Poitou. Before 1276 Sir Gervase Bernake was lord of Beighton, and in 1279 Walter de Furneaux possessed the manor. Subsequently, through the marriage of a co-heiress, it passed to Henry Fitzhugh. A co-heiress of Henry, the last Baron Fitzhugh, brought Beighton to Sir John Fiennes, son of the first Lord Dacre of the south. From this family it was purchased in 1570, by Francis Wortley, Esq. It soon afterwards came into the possession of the Pierreponts, and the sister and heiress of William Pierrepont, the last Duke of Kingston, brought it to an ancestor of Earl Manvers, the present possessor. Near the railway station is a field called Castle Stead, and the moat is still traceable.

The surface of the parish is undulated, and the soil in a high state of cultivation. The common lands, about 600 acres in extent, were enclosed in 1798, and an allotment awarded in lieu of the tithes of the land enclosed. Good building stone is abundant, and seams of coal are worked at several places.

The village is pleasantly situated on an eminence near the Rother, seven miles S.E. from Sheffield, 11 N.E. from Chesterfield, and close to the station of its own name on the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure of stone in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and an embattled tower containing six bells, recast in 1837. The church was thoroughly restored in 1868, at an expense of about £3,000, the greater part of which was contributed by the late Rev. G. W. Antrobus, vicar of the parish. The chancel and south aisle were entirely rebuilt, and the clerestory windows inserted. Many pieces of stained glass were found embedded in the plaster; these were collected, and have been placed in the upper part of the windows of the aisles. During the progress of the restoration the semicircular arch of the previous Norman church was discovered; but as it was too much decayed for retention, an arch of the same proportions and mouldings was built in the new work. The floor of the church was lowered to its original level by the removal of hundreds of cartloads of gravel, by which it had been raised, probably about the beginning of the present century, nearly half way up the columns. The old altar stone in use before the Reformation, was found buried beneath the floor at the end of the north aisle. It was quite perfect—the fine consecration crosses being still visible—and it has again been utilised for the altar table. There appears to have been a subsidiary altar at the end of the south aisle; and the piscina and a niche for a statue still remain. In the wall on the north side a squint which had been built up was opened out. The roofs were raised to their original high pitch, and the walls were denuded of their plaster and whitewash coverings.

Very few memorials remain in the church, but many fragments of incised stones were found during the restoration. On the floor of the sacristy lies a gritstone slab bearing an incised floriated cross and the following inscription—“Orate pro anima domini Johannis Tynker quondam vicari de Beighton: ejus corpus hic jacet et anime propitiatur Deus.” An D. Millessimo quadragintessimo octogessimo.” (Pray for the soul of Sir John Tynker, formerly vicar of Beighton, whose body lies here, and may God have mercy on his soul. A.D. 1480.) There is another slab, the inscription on which cannot now be read, but which, according to Bassano's church notes, taken about 1710, was “Hic jacent Edwardus Dowcett armiger et Johanna uxor ejus, Mill: quingentesimo primo. Quorum animabus propitiatur Deus. Amen.” (Here lies Edward Dowcett and Johanna his wife, 1501. On whose souls may God have mercy. Amen.) The arms of the Linacre family were formerly in the church; and the east end of the north aisle was screened off and called “Linacre's Quire.” There was, according to tradition, an altar here, and it is very probable that such was the case. In the Chantry Rolls there is a record of a chantry at Beighton, “founded by dyverse persons which gave lands unto Our Lady's alter for fyndynge a priest to syng or saye masse daylye.” These lands passed into lay hands at the Reformation.

The living was originally a rectory in the patronage of the Darcys, who owned the adjoining manor of Eckington. Sir James Strangeways, who married a Darcy heiress, gave the rectory in 1455 to the Priory of Mount Grace of Ingleby, in Yorkshire, and a vicarage was ordained, John Tynker, whose monumental inscription we have quoted, being the first vicar. At the dissolution of monasteries the rectory and advowson of Beighton were granted by Henry VIII. to Robert and William Swift, of Rotherham. One of the daughters of Robert Swift brought the rectory estate to her husband, Francis Wortley, Esq., and the rectory and advowson have since passed with the manor. The net value of the living is £215, derived from an endowment of £10 per annum, vicarial tithe, Queen Anne's Bounty, and about 40 acres of glebe. Present incumbent, the Rev. R. S. Harb. M.A.

The churchyard was considerably enlarged in 1886. Two of the steps of the old churchyard cross remain. There is nothing else of interest in the graveyard except the tombstone of Lucretia Smith, "Queen of the Gipsies," and her daughter.

A handsome Mission Room was erected in 1893 by the Earl and Countess of Manvers, at a cost of £1,700. It also serves as a Sunday school.

Sothal is a village almost adjoining Beighton, and with which it is associated in all local matters. It has been considerably extended in late years by the erection of many new houses and shops. The Beighton and Sothal Primitive Methodist Chapel was built in 1890, at an expense of about £900. It is a handsome structure of stone, and is the most attractive edifice of its kind for several miles around. It will seat about 200. The Wesleyans have a chapel in Sothal erected in 1880, at a cost of £1,060, raised by subscription. It will seat 225. The site was granted by Earl Manvers for a yearly rental of £10, on condition that the building was always kept as a place of worship. The United Methodist Free Church, built in 1870-1, at a cost of £600, will seat 200. The Sunday school is attended by between 200 and 300 children, and funds are now being collected for the erection of new schools at an estimated cost of £500.

The educational affairs of the parish have been committed to a School Board, by whom a school was erected at Beighton in 1880, at a cost of £2,987, and enlarged in 1891 at a further outlay of £1,400. There are two departments, mixed and infants, and an attendance of over 500 children.

Hackenthorpe is a village about two miles W. from Beighton, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Sheffield. Many of the inhabitants are employed in the sickle and scythe manufacture, which has been carried on here for a great number of years. There is a Mission Room, in which Church service is held every Sunday. A school was erected by the School Board.

A Workman's Club was built and fitted up at the entire expense of James Hounsfield, Esq., in 1892-3, and presented through trustees to the villagers, who appreciated, by their frequent attendance, the boon conferred upon them by their generous benefactor. About half-a-mile from the village is Hackenthorpe Hall, the seat and property of Mr. Hounsfield. It formerly belonged to the Newbolds, and the initials of John and Alice Newbold, with the date of erection, 1653, are carved on a stone above the kitchen door. The hall was restored and beautified by the present owner in 1875. From the Newbolds the property descended to the Hounsfields.

On the western border of the parish is the hamlet of Birley, where a colliery has been in operation for several years. The coals are suitable for household purposes, and about 800 tons are supplied weekly to the steel smelting furnaces of Sheffield.

In a pretty sylvan glen is a spa, the water of which is reputed to possess curative properties. In 1843 a commodious establishment with seven baths was erected, but the undertaking did not turn out remunerative. There is only one—a plunge bath—now, and it is not much frequented.

CHARITIES.—Wm. Jessop, in 1666, left certain lands, one moiety of the rent thereof to be applied in apprenticing poor boys, and the other to be given to poor householders. These lands are now let for £20 10s. John Newbold, in 1699, devised certain lands at Handsworth, in Yorkshire, for educational and charitable purposes. This land was sold to the Sheffield Coal Company, in 1881, for £550, which sum is invested in consols at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Since the passing of the Free Education Act the whole income has been distributed amongst the poor. Robert Green, in 1712, left an acre of land in Mean Meadow for the benefit of the poor. This was afterwards exchanged for 3 rods 20 poles in Davy Gap, now let for £2 1s. per annum. In addition to the above the sum of £26 11s. 4d. yearly is received from various sources. All these charities are distributed by three trustees—Mr. John Jubb, Drake House; Mr. James Hounsfield, Hackenthorpe Hall; and Mr. Henry Stanforth, Mosbro' Hill. The sum of £6 10s. yearly is received from the Rev. F. Osborne's bequest, and distributed in warm clothing by the vicar; and Mrs. Elizabeth Lowe, of Hackenthorpe, about twenty years ago left a sum of money to the overseers for the time being, the interest thereof (£10) to be by them distributed amongst the poor yearly on her birthday.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank: Joseph Lowe, postmaster. Letters, via Rotherham, arrive at 6 a.m., and are despatched at 5-45 p.m. by mail cart, and at 8 p.m. by train; and on Sundays at 5 p.m. only, by cart.

BOLSOVER.

This is an extensive parish and township in the hundred of Scarsdale; county council electoral division of Bolsover; union, petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Chesterfield. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Bolsover forms an urban parish with one urban district guardian. The parish embraces an area of 4,915 acres, and had, in 1891, a population of 3,662. Its ratable value is £15,765. The surface is diversified by swelling undulations, some of which attain considerable altitude. Limestone is abundant, and is extensively quarried for building purposes. This stone is of a beautiful crystalline structure, very heavy, and remarkable for its weather-resisting qualities. It contains 50 per cent. of carbonate of lime, 40 per cent. of carbonate of magnesia, and the remaining 10 parts are chiefly silica and alumina. The top hard seam of coal is worked here by the Bolsover Colliery Co., Ltd. The pit has been in operation about three years, and gives employment to 850 hands. The daily output is about 1,800 tons, which is chiefly used for steam purposes. In connection with the colliery is a brick works.

The Duke of Portland is the principal landowner and lord of the manor, which is copyhold; and the Earl of Bathurst and the Duke of Devonshire have also considerable estates here. Manor Courts for taking Admittances and passing Surrenders are held every third Friday at the White Swan Inn.

The manor of Belesovre was one of the many estates given by William the Conqueror to his illegitimate son, William Peverel. The latter erected a castle on the brow of a commanding eminence overlooking the valley, whence he could bid defiance to the combined assaults of the conquered English. In the next generation the castle and manor were forfeited to the Crown by William Peverel the second, for poisoning his relative, Ranulph, Earl of Chester, in 1152. Richard I. granted Bolsover to his brother John, Earl of Mortaigne, and the castle was committed to the custody of Richard del Pec. John subsequently succeeded to the throne, and ordered the sum of £3 to be expended on the enclosure of Bolsover park. The castle was a fortress of some importance, and many noble and knightly personages were appointed its castellans. During the Magna Charta struggle it was seized by the disaffected barons and held till 1215, when William Ferrers, Earl of Derby, having raised a body of troops for the king, recaptured the castle, and in recompense for his service was appointed governor. Two years later, John issued a mandate to Bryan de L'Isle, then governor, to fortify the castle and hold it against the rebellious barons, or if he could not make it tenable, to demolish it. The trenches and earthworks, still visible about Bolsover, were probably constructed at this time for the defence of the castle. Henry III., about the year 1233, granted the manor and castle to John Scott, Earl of Chester; and he dying without issue the estate was assigned to Ada, his fourth sister and coheir, wife of Henry de Hastings, Lord of Abergavenny. It was resumed by the Crown in 1243 in exchange for other lands. In 1255, Roger de Lovetot was appointed governor, and Ralph Pipard had a grant of the castles of Bolsover and Hareston for life. He died in 1308, and Sir Richard Surry died seized of the castle and manor in 1395. Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, father of Henry VII., held Bolsover and Hareston at the time of his death. Henry VIII. in the early part of his reign, granted the two castles to Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk, to be held by the service of one knight's fee, but they reverted to the Crown by the attainder of the second duke, in 1547. Edward VI. granted a lease of the manor and castle of Bolsover for 50 years to Sir John Byron, and two years afterwards the fee-farm was granted to George Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury. It remained in the possession of this family till 1613, when Gilbert, Earl of Shrewsbury, sold the manor of Bolsover to Sir Charles Cavendish. William Cavendish, his son, was created Earl, Marquis, and Duke of Newcastle, and was appointed, by Charles I., General of all his Majesty's forces north of the Trent. Henry, the second Duke, survived his son Henry Cavendish, Baron Ogle, and on his death Bolsover devolved on Margaret, his third daughter, wife of John Holles, Earl of Clare, and afterwards Duke of Newcastle. Henrietta Cavendish Holles, the only child of this marriage, conveyed the estates to her husband, Edward Harley, Earl of Oxford, whose only daughter and heiress in like manner conveyed them to William Bentick, Duke of Portland, from whom they have descended to the present owner.

The Castle occupies the plain of a rocky hill and forms a conspicuous object in the landscape for miles around. The fortress, built by the Peverels, was in ruins when Leland visited Bolsover about the year 1550, and now not a vestige of it is to be seen. The present castellated mansion, which occupies the site of the old Norman keep, was commenced by the Countess of Shrewsbury, the renowned Bess of Hardwick, and completed by her son Sir Charles Cavendish, in 1615. It is a lofty square embattled structure, with a high and massive tower at the north-eastern angle, and smaller turrets at the other corners. Its ancient Norman character has been well preserved, both within and without, with certain Elizabethan modifications. The rooms are small, wainscotted, and fancifully inlaid with quaint devices, and painted. The drawing-room and dining-hall have central pillars of stone which support the arched and beautifully carved ceilings. The only large apartment is the star-chamber on the second floor, so named from its stellated ceiling. The Bailey Wall which surrounds the castle was restored on its original Norman lines, and beyond it is the riding-house erected by the first duke.

Stretching along the terrace is a magnificent range of buildings, now in picturesque ruins. It is not known either when or by whom they were erected. Diepenbeck's view of Bolsover, taken in 1652, shows that this grand palace was then in existence; it is, therefore, probable that its erection was commenced, if not completed, by the first Cavendish owner. The magnitude of the various apartments shows that it was a noble and majestic structure, beside which the adjoining castle dwarfed into insignificance.

Bolsover was the favourite residence of Sir William Cavendish, who was successively Earl, Marquis, and Duke of Newcastle. Here he entertained Charles I., in 1633, when he went to Scotland to be crowned. The dinner on this occasion cost £4,000; and Lord Clarendon speaks of it as "such an excess of feasting as had scarce ever been known in England before." Two years later, the King, accompanied by the Queen and his court, paid a second visit to Bolsover. The entertainment was on a scale of royal magnificence; all the gentry of the country were invited to come and wait on their Majesties, and Ben Jonson's masque, "Love's Welcome," written for the occasion, was performed on the terrace. The Duchess, in her memoirs of her husband, tells us that this entertainment cost the Duke between £14,000 and £15,000.

When the Civil war broke out, the Earl, for such was then his rank, espoused the cause of his royal master, and was appointed commander-in-chief of the King's forces for the northern and midland counties. He fortified and garrisoned his castle of Bolsover, and placed it under the command of Colonel Muschamp, but it was taken in 1644 by a Parliamentary force, "with much plunder." The Earl gained a few successes over the Roundheads, but after the utter collapse of the Royalists at Marston Moor in the same year, he escaped to the Continent, where he remained till the Restoration. His estates were sequestrated by the parliament, and Bolsover was sold to some speculators who commenced the demolition of the castle for the sake of the materials. Its entire destruction was, however, happily averted. Sir Charles Cavendish, on behalf of his brother, the Marquis, made an offer that satisfied the cupidity of the speculators, and the castle and estate were re-purchased. He returned to England after the proclamation of Charles II., and being raised to the Dukedom in recognition of his unflinching loyalty, he repaired the castle and made it his occasional residence. He was an authority on horsemanship, and published a work on the subject. He also courted the Muses as did likewise his eccentric wife, the Duchess, but their plays and poems possess but little merit, and are scarcely ever read. The Dukedom of Newcastle became extinct in 1711, and this estate subsequently passed by marriage to the Bentincks, Dukes of Portland, who added Cavendish as a prefix surname to Bentinck. The widow of the late Lieut.-Gen. Arthur Cavendish-Bentinck was created Baroness Bolsover in 1880. Her ladyship died in 1893, and was buried in the family mausoleum in Bolsover Church.

The village, described as a "decayed market town," occupies an elevated situation, six miles E. from Chesterfield, 24 miles by road from Derby, and about half-a-mile from the station of its own name on the Sheffield and Derby branch of the Midland railway. The East to West railway, now in course of construction, passes through the parish. A market was formerly held here on Fridays, but it was discontinued about the middle of last century, and the fairs and hirings are also obsolete. Gas Works were established in 1859 by a company of shareholders, with a capital of £1,000. These works are now inadequate to meet the requirements of the largely increased population, and a new company has been formed with an additional capital of £4,000. The parish is under the control of a local board, and under the new Parish and District Councils Act will form an urban parish returning one guardian. A School Board was formed in 1883, and handsome schools have been erected at Whaley Thornes at a cost of £3,000. The National school was rebuilt in 1868 at a cost of £800. An infants' room was added in 1870 at a further expense of £500. A separate boys' school, with classrooms, &c., was built last year, and the three departments form a block in every way up to the requirements of the Education Board.

Bolsover was for centuries celebrated for the manufacture of steel buckles and spurs of a very superior quality, but that handicraft has long been discontinued; and the manufacture of tobacco pipes, once extensively carried on here, has also been abandoned.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary, is an ancient structure of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and west tower, surmounted by a short, broached spire. The church dates from Norman times, and the semicircular chancel arch of the original edifice remained until the recent restoration. The rest of the edifice is chiefly in the Early English style, with a little work of the Decorated and Perpendicular periods. The fabric was restored in 1773, after the usual churchwarden fashion, in which everything touched was spoiled. Fixed against the wall of the south aisle is a stone slab, on which is carved a representation of the adoration of the Magi. The sculpture was once richly coloured, but it is now much mutilated. This slab, supposed to have been the original altar-piece, was discovered at the beginning of last century, face downwards, forming a step at the north door, where it had probably been placed in conformity with one of the iconoclastic edicts issued at the Reformation. There is another interesting piece of sculpture over the south door of the chancel. It represents the Crucifixion, and is believed by some to be pre-Norman work. At the east end of the south aisle is the mortuary chapel of the Cavendish family, to whom there are some very costly marble monuments. The church was thoroughly restored in 1877 at a cost of upwards of £5,000, raised by subscription, towards which the late duke was a very liberal subscriber. A large north aisle was added, with north porch, vestry and organ chamber; the whole edifice was re-roofed, and a Burmated floor laid down to prevent dampness. A handsome reredos, of Bath stone, and a beautiful carved oak rood screen, were erected, and the church newly seated throughout. A new peal of six bells and a clock were placed in the tower.

The church was appropriated to the Abbey of Darley by the second William Peverel, and the living thenceforth became a vicarage. The Duke of Portland is the patron and impropiator. In the King's Books the living is valued at £5 19s. 4d.; it is now worth £150 net, with residence, and is held by the Rev. Thomas Charles Hills.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected in 1865 at a cost of £450, exclusive of much gratuitous labour. A new Congregational Chapel was built in 1893 at a cost £1,500, exclusive of the site, which was given by the late Mr. John Wardley. It is a neat stone building, in the Gothic style. The old chapel, now used as a Sunday school, was established in 1662 by the vicar of Bolsover—one of the evicted ministers under the Act of Uniformity. The Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1866 at a cost of £600; a Sunday school was added in 1876 at a further outlay of £350, and at the same time a new organ was put in at an expense of £140. The entire debt was cleared off in 1878, and funds are now being collected for another chapel.

Hockley is a district forming the north-west part of the village.

Oxcroft is a hamlet and manor belonging to the Duke of Portland. It comprises a large farm occupied by Mr. T. W. Bower.

Shuttlewood is a hamlet two miles N.N.W. A school was erected here in 1893, at a cost of £400. Church service is also held in it every Sunday evening.

Stanfree is a small hamlet two miles N.N.W. A Mission Chapel was erected here in 1881, at a cost of £350, chiefly through the exertions of the vicar. Service is conducted every Sunday afternoon. Whaley is a small village about three miles N.E. A Mission Room, with dwelling-house, was built in 1869, at a cost of £650, raised by subscription.

Whaley Thornes is a colliery village of considerable size, that has sprung into existence during the past few years. There are 205 miners' cottages, a Mission Church built in 1880, a Board School, and several shops. Another colliery village of very recent origin is named, par excellence, "The Model Village." It comprises 200 miners' cottages, arranged round three sides of a large square recreation ground, the fourth side being closed in by commodious school buildings. The semi-detached villas occupied by the officials stand in a row. A Club House has been provided for the benefit of the tenants. It comprises reading-room, smoking and billiard rooms, and a large room for evening classes in connection with the County Council—ambulance and mining for the men, and cookery and laundry for the women. There is a farm of 150 acres, and allotment gardens are apportioned to each tenant. The schools are a noble block of brick buildings, roofed with red tiles to harmonize. The heating and ventilating arrangements are on the latest and most approved principles. By means of a fan there is a continuous supply of fresh air, and the whole can be renewed from seven to nine times an hour; and the heating apparatus is so constructed that the temperature can be mechanically regulated for each room. There are two departments, with accommodation for 600 children. Evening continuation classes are held, and religious service on Sundays. The architects were Messrs. Brewill & Bayley, of Nottingham; and the builder, Mr. J. R. Simkin.

GLAPWELL is a township ecclesiastically under Bolsover, but in the North-Eastern Parliamentary division and Mansfield union. It contains 774 acres, and had in 1891 a population of 94. The ratable value is £3,242. The entire township is the property of T. R. F. B. Hallows, Esq., who is also lord of the manor.

Glapewelle, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was held with Bolsover. In the 13th century it belonged to a family named Glapwell. William Woodhouse died in 1411 seized of the manor, and it remained with this family till the latter part of the 17th century, when the heiress of Woodhouse married Samuel Hallows, of Dethick. The Hall, an ancient mansion surrounded by tastefully-laid-out grounds, is now in the charge of a caretaker. There was formerly a chapel at Glapwell, which is mentioned in an agreement made about the year 1260, between the Abbot of Darley and the inhabitants. The latter agreed to give five acres of land as an endowment to keep it in repair. It was probably demolished at the Reformation.

CHARITIES.—Bequests amounting to about £104 yearly have been left to the poor of the parish. The sum of £5 10s. is also received from Gisborne's charity, and distributed in warm clothing.

CLOWNE.

This parish embraces an area of 1,851 acres of land, in the hundred of Scarsdale, electoral division of Bolsover, petty sessional division of Eckington, Worksop union and county court district, and deanery of Staveley. In accordance with the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, eight parish councillors have been assigned to Clowne.

Its ratable value is £9,862, and the population in 1851 was 2,349. The Duke of Portland is lord of the manor, and J. E. Butler Bowden, Esq., of Pleasington Hall, Lancashire; Mr. Olivier, Pear Tree, Derby; and Mr. Thomas Ludlow, Norton Cuckney, Notts.; are the principal owners of the land which is chiefly copyhold. The soil is encumbent on limestone and gritstone, and is watered by numerous springs, whence the parish was named Clowne, or "a place of springs." In Spa field, on Romley Hall Farm, there is a spring of sulphurous water which is conveyed by a pipe to a bath, five yards by three yards, now disused. The Mansfield and Chesterfield branch of the Midland railway, and also the east to west line, now in course of construction, pass through the parish in close proximity to the village. The Southgate Colliery commenced working in 1877. The shaft is 330 yards deep to the Top Hard seam, which is the kind of coal worked here. About 600 tons are raised per day, giving employment to about 400 hands.

In the reign of Ethelred the Unready, Clowne belonged to Wulfrie Spott, a noble thane, who built and endowed Burton Abbey. By his will, dated 1002, he bequeathed the manors of Clown, Barlborough, and Eckington, to Moreare. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Ernui had here six oxgangs of land which he held under the king. In the sixth year of the reign of Richard II., Sir Roger Folville, and Elizabeth, his wife, held 40 acres of glebe land under the church, and 21 acres of land under the King in the same manner as the Castle of Bolsover. The parish is partly within the manor of Bolsover and partly in that of Barlborough. The common was enclosed in 1780.

The village of Clowne is pleasantly situated on the high road between Mansfield and Sheffield, eight miles N.E. from Chesterfield. It is well built and of considerable extent, having largely increased since the construction of the East to West railway was commenced. About 100 new houses have been erected since 1891. The church of St. John the Baptist is an ancient building of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and western tower, containing three bells. There was no church here at the time of the Domesday Survey, but the remains of Norman architecture, still to be seen in various parts of the present edifice, show that one was erected shortly afterwards, apparently in the reign of Stephen (1135-1154). The tower was added in the 15th century, when the Perpendicular style was in vogue, and later restorations are also visible. The arch between the chancel and nave was recently denuded of its coat of plaster, and exhibits a piece of good Norman work. The end of the nave above it is panelled with oak, on which is emblazoned the royal arms. Against the north wall of the chancel is a large oil painting of the Ascension, at the bottom of which is "Charles Basseldine, his gift, 1725." Another picture, given by the same gentleman, exhibits the Decalogue, with Moses and Aaron, one on either side. On another picture, the church, symbolised by the emblems of the four Evangelists, is represented as being inspired by the Holy Spirit (a dove), to draw up the Creed on the basis of the gospels. Mr. Basseldine, as appears from an inscription, built the porch and south wall, and, on his monumental slab in the chancel, it is recorded that he was a benefactor to the church, £50; that he founded and endowed a school with £6 per annum for ever to teach twelve of the poorest children of Clowne. He died in 1736, at the venerable age of 84. In the centre of the chancel is a slab inscribed "In memory of William Inskip, parson of Clown, 54 years, was buried the 30th day of November, 1582." As he held the rectory in the reigns of Henry VIII., Edward VI., Mary and Elizabeth, his religious creed must have been similar to that of the vicar of Bray. The registers date from 1564.

The church of Clowne was given by Robert de Mennil to the Priory of Worksop, and the grant was confirmed by Henry III. (1216-1272). In this charter it is called "All Saints'." After the dissolution of monasteries, the patronage of the rectory passed to the Crown, and is now exercised by the Lord Chancellor. In 1535 the living was valued at £7 0s. 10d.; it is now worth £250, and is held by the Rev. C. L. Helps; curate-in-charge, Rev. J. Waugh, B.A. The Rectory House was rebuilt about twenty years ago, at a cost of £1,100, borrowed from Queen Anne's Bounty. There are 65a. 1r. 8p. of glebe. The tithes were commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £295.

A chapel is now in course of erection by the United Methodist Free Church, at a cost of £2,000. The foundation stone was laid by T. D. Bolton, Esq., M.P., on Whit-Monday, 1894, and the building will also contain Sunday school, vestries, and caretaker's house. The old chapel, built in 1888, with ground, being required for the site of the new East to West railway, has been purchased by the Railway Company for £1,200. The Primitive Methodist chapel was built in 1876, at a cost of £930, and further improved at an additional outlay of £70. It comprises chapel, vestries, gallery, and Sunday school, and will accommodate about 350 persons. The chapel originally erected by the Wesleyan Association is now used as a Salvation Army barracks.

A school was founded here, in 1730, by Charles Basseldine, who endowed it with land in Bolsover of the yearly rent of £6. At the Inclosure, an allotment of 5a. 1r. 6p. was made in lieu of common rights. In 1876 the school and its endowments were transferred to the School Board. In the following year new schools were erected at a cost of £10,000, and the premises have been altered and enlarged during 1894 at an expense of £1,675. There are three departments, with an attendance of about 800.

Romley Hall belonged, in the reign of Elizabeth, to the family of Wood, afterwards to that of Routh, of whom it was purchased by Mr. Wright, of Sheffield. It passed thence to the Hills, and now belongs to Mrs. Olivier, daughter of the late Archdeacon Hill. The hall is now a farmhouse, in the occupation of Mr. William Bingham. The upper storey forms one room 60 feet in length. Many of the window frames, doors, and stairs are of oak. The capacious fireplace—12 feet wide—remains in the kitchen, with rannel balk and chimney four yards square.

Harlethorpe is a small hamlet and manor three-quarters of a mile north from Clowne, belonging to J. E. Butler-Bowdon, Esq., of Pleasington Hall, Lancashire. Southgate House, one of the seats of Mr. Butler-Bowdon, is a handsome mansion on the estate, now occupied by H. A. Fowler, Esq., J.P. Here is Clowne Dam, six acres in extent, stocked with trout, carp, eels, tench, bream, and perch; and the resort of wild fowl.

CHARITIES.—William Wilkson, in 1666, left a rent-charge of 5s. for the poor; Edward Woodhead, in 1697, gave 20s. yearly to the poor out of Romley Close; Andrew Clayton, in 1701, left 20s. yearly out of lands at Romley for the same purpose; Watkinson's Bequest, now invested in consols, yields £2 15s. per annum; Francis Tomkin, in 1705, left a close of land, let at £3 per annum, to the poor; Rev. George Chantrey, in 1722, left a rent-charge of 20s., charged on High Cross closes, in Barlborough, to be given to the ten poorest families in Clowne; and £2 yearly is received from an allotment, whereof 20s. is given to Clowne and 20s. to Eckington.

Post, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank—Robert Hanford, postmaster. Letters, Clowne, Chesterfield, arrive at 7-35 a.m., and are despatched at 5-25 p.m.; Sunday, arrive at 7-35 a.m., and are despatched at 2-25 p.m.

DORE.

This parish comprises the townships of Dore and Totley, divided by the Totley brook. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale, petty sessional division of Eckington, county court district of Sheffield; Ecclesall Bierlow poor law union, Norton county council division, and rural district and deanery of Dronfield. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Dore and Totley form distinct parishes, each having a parish council of seven members and one district councillor.

The township of Dore adjoins the Yorkshire Moors on the west, and on the north is bounded by the Eccleshall brook. It has an extent of about 3,271 acres, rateable value £5,968. A considerable portion of the land is moorland. The principal owners are the Duke of Devonshire, who is also lord of the manor; Duke of Rutland; Joseph Hancock, Rushley; Mrs. Hannah Wilson, The Moss; Ebenezer Hall, Esq., Abbeydale Park; Thomas Sanderson Furness, Croft Cottage. During the last few years the population has increased to a considerable extent. The village, large and scattered, is distant about five miles S.S.W. from Sheffield, and situated on the verge of the Yorkshire Moors. In the neighbourhood are numerous villa residences, mostly occupied by business people from Sheffield. The annual wakes are held on the Sunday falling nearest to July 6th. Through the village runs the Sheffield and Derby branch of the Midland railway, and here also converges the Dore and Chinley railway, opened in 1894. By the construction of this line, the wild and romantic scenery of Peakland is thrown open to the admiring gaze of visitors and tourists.

Christ Church. Although Dore possessed a parochial chapel in past ages, the history of it is by no means clear, as no part, either ruinous or otherwise, of the old building remains. The present church was built in 1828, and dedicated to Christ. It is a neat Gothic structure of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, tower, vestry, and entrance porch. The tower is embattled, and contains one bell. The east window is of four lights, filled with stained glass, as a memorial of Avarilda Jane Newbold. The windows of coloured glass on the north side represent "The raising to life of the widow's son and Lazarus," and "Behold the Lamb of God;" on the south side, "The agony in the garden and carrying of the cross," "The Ascension," and "Suffer little children, &c." The font was given by Mrs. Emma Aldred in memory of her daughter, and the stone pulpit was the gift of Mrs. Waterfall in 1880. The living is a vicarage, worth £130 yearly, in the patronage of Earl Fitzwilliam, and held by the Rev. —

The Rev. Robert Turie, by will in 1720, left endowments for educational purposes to various parishes, amongst which was Dore. A new school was built by subscription in 1821 upon the site of the old chapel. A portion of the endowment, about £40, is applied to the support of the school and the remainder is given to the poor.

Mount Zion Chapel, belonging to the Primitive Methodists, is a large stone structure, built in 1860, and lately altered and improved at an expense of over £500.

There are several handsome residences in the vicinity of Dore. The Moss, the seat and property of Mrs. Wilson, erected in 1854, stands within its own grounds of over three acres in extent. Another handsome mansion is Abbeydale Park, the residence and property of Ebenezer Hall, Esq., J.P.

Owing to the increased number of houses and the influx of residents in and about Abbeydale Road, a new ecclesiastical parish was formed some eighteen years ago, taken from Dore and Totley, Ecclesall, and Norton parishes. The church, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist, is a neat stone edifice, consisting of chancel, nave, and vestry, and capable of accommodating 200 worshippers. The foundation stone was laid by John Roberts, Esq., who also defrayed the cost of the building, which amounted to about £6,000. The church is lighted throughout by beautiful stained-glass windows, and furnished with seats of pitchpine. The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £160 per annum, with residence, in the gift of trustees, and held by the Rev. H. D. Hubbard, M.A. A handsome church-room and Sunday school was erected in 1894 by E. Hall, Esq., J.P., who also defrayed the cost of furnishing it.

Licensed Victuallers' Institute.—This consists of a group of houses, twelve in number, and a school, originally intended for old licensed victuallers, but as yet it has not been applied to that purpose, the houses now being rented and the school used as a ladies' academy. In the grounds in front of the institute stands a monument bearing the following inscription:—"This monument was erected to the memory of the late Alderman Thos. Wiley, by the voluntary subscription of the members and friends of the Sheffield and Rotherham Licensed Victuallers' Association, to record their respect and esteem for his munificent donations to their asylum, he being the first donor to this institution, and by his spirited example causing a number of liberal and benevolent gentlemen to subscribe sufficient funds to erect the adjacent buildings. Anno dom. 1853."

TOTLEY comprises an area of 1,811 acres. The principal owners are Lord Middleton, who is also lord of the manor; Ebenezer Hall, Esq., J.P., W. A. Milner, Esq., J.P., Duke of Rutland, T. S. Furness, Esq., John Green, E. S. P. Burnell, Mrs. Earnshaw, Astley Creswick, Ward & Co., and the Midland Railway Company. The village is small, but pleasantly situated on a slight eminence, $\frac{3}{4}$ miles W.N.W. from Dronfield, and 6 miles S.W. from Sheffield. On the Bakewell Road, about $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from Sheffield, are the chemical works of Thos. Kilner, and near the Sheffield Road are the remains of an ancient cupola, formerly used for the smelting of lead.

Totley National School, opened in 1875, is a stone building, comprising one large room with two classrooms; it is a mixed school, with infants, and is the property of the managers. The present head-mistress is Miss Louisa Yates. The old school has been turned into a teacher's residence.

The Cherry Tree Orphanage, Totley Rise, occupies a delightful position, being situated on an eminence on the road leading to Dronfield. It is a large stone building, capable of accommodating over 50 orphans of both sexes. A sanatorium was added a few years ago, built and furnished throughout by Col. Bingham, of Ranmoor, Sheffield.

The Bents is the name given to a few scattered farms and houses, half-a-mile N.W. from Totley. Totley Hall, built in 1623, is the property and residence of Wm. Aldam Milner, Esq., J.P. It has recently been enlarged and improved, and now presents an attractive appearance. Totley Grange is the property and residence of Mrs. Earnshaw.

CHARITIES AND BENEFACCTIONS.—In 1577 Richard Stevenson, of Unstone, bequeathed a hundred herrings and as much bread as can be made from one strike of wheat, to be distributed to the parish upon every Friday in Lent, and thirty pence to be given to thirty of the most needy poor on every Good Friday. In 1611 James Swift left £3 per annum, to be distributed to the poor of this parish on the feast of St. Philip and James. In 1619 Godfrey Godley, of Balbrough left 30s., to be distributed to the poor of this parish every Good Friday. In 1623 Laurence Banks, of Stanton, clerk, left the yearly rent of five parcels of land, to be distributed among the poor on Good Friday for ever. In 1659 John Revel, gent., gave the yearly rents of two parcels of land, to be distributed amongst the poor of this parish twice in the year. John Haworth gave by will, dated August 17th, 1824, to the churchwarden and overseer of Dore and their successors the sum of £20, the interest to be distributed among four widows or others on some Sunday in each month. In 1757 Elizabeth Dawce, of Dore, left twelve pennyworth of bread, to be distributed in Dore chapel to the poor on the first Sunday in each month. In 1764 Joseph Wostenholme left £30, the interest thereof to be given in bread to the poor of Dore on one Sunday in each calendar month, with which sum and other money belonging to the said town is enclosed 7½ acres of common on Ronset Moor, on which is charged 30s. for the above purpose, and the remainder of the said rent is applied in the teaching of a certain number of children at Dore school, under the direction of trustees appointed by Act of Parliament on the enclosure of the whole of the common in Dore. The Rev. Mr. Turie, of Sheffield, gave in 1720 £10, to be put out at interest, to be applied to the teaching of six poor children in Dore to read English; and in 1747 £26 18s., part of the said benefaction was expended in enclosing four acres of common lying at Dore Moor Side. With the remainder of the said money and other money belonging the township of Totley was enclosed a quantity of land on Totley Common, the rent of which to be applied to the teaching of six children to read English. In 1786 William Green, of Totley, bequeathed the sum of 12s., to be paid yearly to the poor, out of the rents and profits arising from certain lands and tenements in the township of Totley—this money to be paid by the nephew of the benefactor, and at his death to be vested in the hands of the chapelwarden of Dore for ever for the above purpose. Isaac Shepherd, late of Green Hill, Norton, bequeathed the sum of 20s., to be distributed in bread annually to the poor of Dore on St. Thomas' Day, and 20s. to be paid annually to the schoolmaster of Dore for teaching two poor children to read in English. At the enclosure of Dore Commons the commissioners were instructed to set apart land to the value of £30 for the benefit of the schoolmaster or for such charitable purpose as the majority of the trustees shall direct. The Rev. F. Gisborne bequeathed £5 10s. in trust, to be distributed annually in clothing to the poor of Dore.

Dore School.—Rev. Robert Turie left £40 to Dore school and £100 to the chapel. Thomas Biggin left £30 a year to the school. The income of Dore school from charities is now over £100 per annum.

Totley School.—In 1786 William Green left out of his houses and croft a rent charge of 46 10s., to be paid to the schoolmistress of Totley for the education of six poor children. The 46 from land at Coal Aston is not paid; the land was sold, and the proceeds expended in building the present school.

Post Office; Elishah Parker, sub-postmaster. Letters, via Sheffield, arrive at 6-30 a.m., and are despatched at 6-55 p.m. Wall Boz, Dore and Totley, cleared at 6-20 p.m.; and that at Totley Brook at 6-5 p.m.

DRONFIELD.

This is an extensive parish comprising the townships of Dronfield, Coal Aston, and Unstone, embracing upwards of 10,000 acres of land, situated near the Yorkshire border. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale; petty sessional division of Eckington; poor law union and county court district of Chesterfield; and is the head of a deanery, and a division for the election of a county councillor.

Under the Local Government Act of 1894, the township of Dronfield has been divided into two civil parishes, Dronfield and Dronfield Woodhouse, the former containing 950 acres, ratable value £9,079; and the latter 1,404 acres, having a ratable value of £5,749. The population of the township in 1891 was 4,166. Dronfield is under the jurisdiction of an urban council of nine members, and Dronfield Woodhouse under its parish council of six members.

The manor of Dronfield, Drane-field in Domesday Book, belonged to the Crown at the time of the Norman Survey, and continued in the royal possession till the reign of King John, when it was granted to William Briwere. At a later period it came into the possession of the Cromwells, and it thence passed successively to the Hastings, Seliokes, Morewoods, Burtons, and Rossingtons. Samuel Rotherham, who was high sheriff in 1773, died in 1795, seized of this manor; and his sister and heiress at her death bequeathed it to Joseph Cecil, Esq. The late Rotherham Cecil, Esq., died in the early part of 1894, leaving a widow, who is now the lady of the manor, and two infant children. Besides Mrs. Cecil, the following also own land in Dronfield:—George Greaves, Esq. (Sheffield), F. E. Greaves, Esq., Trustees of the Grammar School, Mr. Samuel Lucas (The Hall), Wm. Wake (Sheffield), F. G. Barnes, Esq., W. W. Barker, John Ward, and Samuel Rooth, M.D.

The village, which is of considerable extent, is situated in a valley on the Chesterfield road, six miles S.W. from Sheffield, and the same distance N. by W. from Chesterfield, and is on the main line of the Midland Railway. Coal of good quality is worked in the neighbourhood, and various branches of the cutlery, steel and iron trades are carried on; but the place has lost much of its prosperity since the removal of Messrs. Cammell's gigantic steel-rail making business to Workington. The extensive works of Messrs. Edward Lucas & Son, manufacturers of cast steel, spindles, and flyers and malleable castings give employment to a considerable number of hands; and an extensive business is carried on by Messrs. Edward & William Lucas, at the Dronfield forge and shovel works; and by C. Lowcock & Co., in the manufacture of sickles and hooks. There are several other important industries, which will be found in the directory. Dronfield is of considerable antiquity, and formerly had its market, but in consequence of the proximity of Sheffield and Chesterfield, it gradually fell into abeyance, and has long been discontinued. The old market cross was taken down in 1854, and a monument to Sir Robert Peel erected on the site. This a stone column surmounted by a cross, and was built by subscription, at a cost of £30. Gasworks were erected in 1855, and subsequently enlarged. The original capital of the company was £2,000, raised in 400 shares of £5 each. The registered capital is now £24,000, of which £10,854 is paid up. The holder has a capacity of 40,000 cubic feet, and the gas is retailed at 4s., 4s. 3d., and 4s. 6d., according to the amount of consumption. The Local Board of Health, formed in 1861, has given place to an Urban District Council, which is now carrying out a new sewage scheme, under the direction of Mr. George White, C.E., of Mexborough.

The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a large and handsome edifice in the Decorated Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave with side aisles, south porch, and a west tower, embattled and pinnacled, containing a clock and six bells, and surmounted by a graceful octagonal spire. The latter was so seriously damaged by a storm in 1818 that it had to be rebuilt and the roofs repaired, the estimated cost being £256. In 1855 about £1,000 was spent in repairing and re-pewing the church, and during the past seven years a gradual but thorough restoration has been carried out. An organ chamber has been recently added on the north side of the chancel, the organ rebuilt and renovated, and new choir stalls placed in the chancel. This part of the church is very spacious, and is lighted by a large and handsome east window, representing various scenes in the Old and New Testaments. It was erected, in 1886, by William Parker, Esq., J.P.

of Whittington Hall, in memory of his father. There are three very fine three-light pointed windows on the south side, containing some good specimens of ancient stained glass. On the opposite side of the chancel are two windows similar in size and shape to those on the south side, but filled with plain glass. The three ancient sedilia remain in good preservation in the south wall, and in the floor are the monumental brasses of the Eyre, Fanshawe, and other families who lie buried here. Two of the brasses represent priests, half life-size, dressed in chasubles, and between them is the matrix of a bugle-horn, from which the brass has been torn. Beneath the feet of each is a Latin inscription, which reads in English as follows:—"Here lies Thomas Gomfrey of Wormhill, formerly rector of the church of Dronfield, who died the 11th day of the month of October, A.D. 1399; and under him lies Master Roger Braylisforde, former rector of the said church of Dronfield." "Here lies Master Richd. Gomfrey, former rector of the church of Badenhull and prebend of Somerchal * * * and brother of the above Thomas, who died A.D. MCCC—(part of date obliterated). On whose souls may God have mercy." There are also several handsome monuments to the Biscoe, Sharman, Sauer, Spencer, Clark, Shaw, Earnshaw, Hardy, and Cecil families. Near the chancel arch is an altar tomb bearing the recumbent effigy of a knight in armour, in alabaster, said to represent Sir Richard Barley, knight, of Dronfield Woodhouse, who died about the year 1345. In the aisles also there are several monuments to local families. The pulpit is a beautiful piece of old oak carving. There was formerly a chantry in the church, founded in 1392, and amply endowed by Ralph Barker and others, for the maintenance of a priest. This chantry was probably in the south aisle, where a piscina niche still remains. The mansion house in which the chantry priests resided stood on the site now occupied by the Green Dragon. The living was originally a rectory, and a very valuable one, as its income in 1291 was estimated at £40 per annum, a very large sum in those days. In 1399 the tithes were appropriated to Beauchief Abbey, and three years later the vicarage was endowed with five acres of land, £10 per annum, and various small tithes and oblations. Since the dissolution of the abbey the patronage has belonged to the Crown, and is exercised by the Lord Chancellor. The vicarage is worth £330 net per annum, with residence, and has been held since 1888 by the Rev. Charles Isaac Bickerstaff, rural dean. The registers date from 1560. Belonging to the church are commodious Sunday schools, built in 1889, and used also for balls, concerts, &c. There are Mission Rooms at Hill Top, Coal Aston, and Unstone.

The Congregational Chapel, Lea Road, is a handsome stone structure in a semi-Gothic style, built in 1843 on the site of one that dated from the latter part of the 18th century. The organ was enlarged a few years ago, and the seats re-cushioned and made free, at a cost of £100. There is a commodious Sunday school on the ground floor. The United Methodist Free Church is a substantial stone building, with Sunday school beneath, erected in 1863. The Baptist Chapel, built in 1871, at a cost of £1,400, is a spacious stone building, with sitting accommodation for 450. The pulpit was presented by Mr. G. Poplar, in memory of his wife. It is a handsome piece of carving, by Advent Unstone, of Tideswell, representing scenes from the life of Christ. The Wesleyan Chapel, originally erected by the Society of Friends, is a plain, square building on the Sheffield Road. The Primitive Methodists worship in a corrugated iron structure.

The Grammar School was founded and endowed by Henry Fanshawe in 1579. Handsome new premises, in the Elizabethan style, were erected in 1867, near the Midland Railway Station, and in 1893 a new wing was added, including lavatories, cloakroom, porch, classroom, and an excellent chemical laboratory, at a cost of £1,200. The school was re-organised in 1888, and is now a recognised science school in connection with South Kensington. There are twelve "Fanshawe Scholarships," entitling the owners to free tuition and a yearly sum of £5, open to all boys attending a public school in the ancient parish of Dronfield who have passed the fifth standard. There are also twelve "Junior Technical Scholarships," instituted by the Derbyshire County Council, entitling the holders to free tuition, together with railway fares and books. The old school, situated near the church, is now in process of conversion into a gentlemen's club.

A School Board of seven members was formed in February, 1871, and commodious schools for boys, girls, and infants were erected in Cross Lane in 1874-5, to accommodate 620 children, at a cost of £7,000. Another school, for the accommodation of 180 children, was erected the same year at Woodhouse, at a cost, including master's house, of £3,000. Under the new Local Government Act, constituting Dronfield Woodhouse a separate civil parish, the new parish will have its own School Board.

The Cemetery, which occupies a gentle slope, covers an area of eight acres. The ground is neatly laid out, and is equally divided between the Church and the Dissenters. There are two mortuary chapels and a caretaker's lodge. The sexton is Geo. Platts, whose ancestors have held the same grim office for upwards of a century. The cemetery was opened in 1877. The Burial Board consists of nine members.

DRONFIELD WOODHOUSE is a small village, 2 miles N.W. from Dronfield, and gives the name to a new civil parish, which also includes Cowley, Stubley, and Mickley. It has its parish council of six members, and elects one rural district councillor. It has also now its own school board. The Wesleyans have a chapel at Woodhouse, built in 1844. Cowley is a small village 2 miles S.W. from Dronfield. Coal is worked to a small extent at Cowley New Colliery. There is a small Independent mission chapel, erected in 1893, at a cost of £90, in which two students from Hulme Cliff College, Curbar, preach every Sunday. Cowley Hall, a farmhouse, is the property and residence of Mr. Richard Bingham. It was purchased by the late Thomas Bingham, about 50 years ago. Mickley is a hamlet 2½ miles N.W. from Dronfield; and Hill Top is another hamlet half-a-mile S. There is a mission room in connection with the parish church.

COAL ASTON is a township and village containing 1,472 acres of land, belonging chiefly to F. W. Bagshawe, Esq., J.P., D.L., Norton; George Greaves, Esq.; William Isaac Greaves; William Greaves Blake; Exors. of James Rhodes; Francis Ward; Trustees of J. T. Scholes; Exors. of William Parker; H. C. and T. H. May; and Oldall's trustees. The ratable value is £2,969, and the population in 1891 was 534. By the Local Government Act of 1894, Coal Aston is constituted a civil parish, with a parish council of six members, and one representative on the district council. The village is situated on an eminence 1 mile N.E. of Dronfield, and is chiefly occupied by colliers. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels here, the former built in 1848, and the latter in 1866. A school for the accommodation of 138 children was erected in 1874, in which church service is held every Sunday. Several of the farms bear distinctive names, which are given in the directory. Thomas Kent, in 1695, left the sum of £100 for apprenticing poor children belonging to the township, and if there be no such children, then to the poor. The money was invested in land which was sold some years ago for building purposes. The funds consist of £1,134, invested in consols, and £335 7s. 4d., donor unknown. The dividends amount to £40, out of which the sum of £16 is appropriated to two scholarships at Dronfield Grammar School, each of the yearly value of £8, and the residue is distributed amongst the poor. The charity is vested in seven trustees—two co-optative, T. G. Harrison and J. J. Badger, Esquires—and five elected triennially by the ratepayers.

UNSTONE is a township containing 2,119 acres of land, and 1,687 inhabitants. Mrs. Thorold, of Welham Hall, Retford, is the lady of the manor; and that lady and Mr. Wm. Gill and W. H. Rangeley, Esq., are the principal landowners. The soil is a light loam on sandstone, and is chiefly in meadow. There are four collieries in the township; and here also are the extensive works of Messrs. John Harrison and Sons, manufacturers of sickles, scythes, hooks, &c.

Though now of less significance than Dronfield, Unstone was the more important place of the two at the time of the Domesday Survey, and had then a church and priest, but there are neither remains nor records to show where this sacred edifice stood, nor when or why it was demolished. Under the Local Government Act, which has recently come into operation, Unstone forms a distinct civil parish, with a parish council of seven members and one district councillor.

The village is situated on the Sheffield and Chesterfield Road, 7 miles from the former, 5 from the latter, and 1 mile S. from Dronfield. The Midland Railway passes through the township, and has a station in the village. A National School was erected here in 1833 by George Moore, Esq., and the premises were rebuilt in 1873 at a cost of £800. The school is also used as a mission chapel. There are also commodious schools on the Chesterfield Road, erected by the school board in 1874. There is accommodation in the two departments for 320 children, and an average attendance of 230. The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village, built in 1847; and the Primitive Methodists worship in a corrugated iron structure. Unstone Hall, or Manor House, is the property of Mrs. Thorold, and the residence of Mr. John Bradbury. It is a venerable structure, the oldest part of which dates from 1471, and the latter part from the 17th century. Apper-Knowle is a hamlet a little N.E. of the village. The school board have an infant school here; and a Wesleyan Chapel was erected in 1879 at a cost of £500.

ECKINGTON.

This is an extensive parish in the hundred of Scarsdale, Eckington petty sessional division, Chesterfield union, rural district, and county court district, and deanery of Staveley. It gives a name to a division for the election of a county councillor. For Local Government purposes, according to the Act of 1894, the parish is divided into four wards—Eckington, Mosborough, Renishaw, and Ridgway—each of which is co-extensive with the parliamentary polling district of the same name, and elects one district councillor. The parish council consists of 15 members. The total area of the parish is 7,072 acres, ratable value £45,236, and the population in 1891 was 12,357. The land, which is generally fertile, belongs chiefly to Sir Geo. Reresby Sitwell, Bart., who is also lord of the manor; Earl Fitzwilliam; J. Jubb, Drake House; J. & G. Wells, Limited; and J. F. Swallow, Esq., J.P. The manor of Eckington, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Ralph Fitzhubert. During the reign of Henry III., William de Stuteville held the manor, together with the advowson of the church; but, his descendants having forfeited their estates in 1340, the reigning monarch conferred the manor—or perhaps a part of it—upon John, Lord Darcy. The Longfords appear to have held a manor here at that time, and it seems probable that the manor of Eckington was divided between these two families.

Several seams of coal underlie the surface, and are extensively worked by Messrs. J. & G. Wells, who employ over 3,000 men and boys at their various collieries in the district. The coal is of good quality, suitable for gas, coke, or household purposes. The manufacture of sickles and reaping hooks was formerly the staple industry of the parish; but, since the introduction of agricultural machinery, the trade has very much declined, and nail-making has been almost abandoned.

The village—or rather market town—of Eckington is very irregularly built, and is situated 7 miles N.E. from Chesterfield, 7½ S.E. from Sheffield, and about 1½ miles from the stations of its own name on the Midland and the M. S. & L. railways.

The public market is held every Friday evening; it is well attended by people from the adjacent village. The fairs are now discontinued, and the hiring almost extinct.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter and St. Paul, is a large ancient edifice, consisting of nave, chancel, side aisles, and a western tower surmounted by an octagonal spire. There is no record of its foundation, but the semi-circular arches and massive pillars of the aisles belong undoubtedly to the Norman period. Later styles of architecture are visible in the pointed windows and archways. There was a chapel on the north side of the chancel, where now stands the organ, and piercing the wall of the north aisle is a hagioscope or "squint" of elaborate character. On the walls of the chancel are numerous monuments to the Sitwell, Newton, Wigfall, and other families. The church was thoroughly restored in 1878, when the unsightly galleries on the north, west, and south sides were removed, and the interior very much improved. The living is a rectory, net yearly value £507, in the gift of the Crown, and held by the Rev. Henry Thornhill Morgan, M.A. The registers commence in 1558, and on a blank page in one (1666-1695) are the following quaint lines:—

"Our grandfathers were Papists,
Our fathers Oliverians,
We, their sons, are Atheists—
Sure our sons will be queer ones!"*

The Westleyan Chapel, opened in 1876, affords accommodation for about 700 worshippers. It is in the Italian style of architecture, with a gallery round three sides. The United Methodist Free Church is a substantial stone edifice, erected in 1875 at a cost of £4,000. The Primitive Methodists have also a chapel in Chesterfield Road. The earliest provision for educational purposes was left by Thomas Cam, by will dated 1703, wherein he bequeathed certain lands for the free education of poor children for ever. The endowment was subsequently increased by other benefactions. The school is managed by seven trustees, appointed in 1876, when a new scheme was formulated for granting scholarships to successful pupils. There is also a Girls' School, re-erected in Southgate, in 1876, by Lady Sitwell, at a cost of about £600, and recently enlarged. A School Board was formed about twenty years ago, and commodious schools have been erected in each of the four quarters of the parish. Science classes are held, and also evening continuation schools, in connection with the Technical Education scheme of the Derbyshire County Council.

The Eckington and Mosbro' Gas Co., Ltd., was registered in 1860, with a capital of £600, in £1 shares. The office and works are in Mill Lane. The districts supplied are Eckington, Mosbro', Renishaw and Killamarsh stations, and Holbrook Colliery. The Water Works, formed some years ago by a company of shareholders, are now the property of the Chesterfield Rural Sanitary Authority. The Recreation Ground, occupying about three acres of ground, is the property of Mr. W. J. H. Cousins. The Burial Board was formed in 1877, when grounds covering about six acres were laid out, and two mortuary chapels and superintendent's house built, at a cost of £4,000. The Cemetery is situated on the Mosbro' road.

MOSBOROUGH is a large scattered village, eight miles N.N.E. from Chesterfield and six miles S.S.E. from Sheffield. This quarter lies to the north of Eckington. St. Mark's Church, opened in 1887, is an attractive stone building, with accommodation for about 400 people. It was built by subscription, and consists of nave, chancel, and tower. The Rev. S. Stookes, M.A., is the curate-in-charge. There are also chapels pertaining to the Primitive Methodists and Wesleyans, both respectively in 1869 and 1889.

The (C.E.) schools, endowed by Joseph Stones in 1680, and consisting of mixed and infants' departments, with master's residence, were enlarged in 1873, at a cost of £650. Some of the land has been sold, and the yearly income now amounts to about £30. Upwards of 400 children attend the schools.

The Workman's Club, erected by J. F. Swallow, Esq., J.P., of Mosbro Hill, is a substantial building, comprising reading, recreation, and billiard rooms, with several apartments. Mosborough Hall is a square, stone, balustraded mansion, built by E. M. Eaton. Close to it is Eckington Hall, a large handsome stone house, built in 1871 by Joseph Wells. Besides the village there are several small hamlets—Mosbro' Moor, Plumley (consisting of scattered dwelling and farm houses, three-quarters of a mile west of Mosbro'), and Holbrook, three-quarters of a mile east. Half-way House consists of a number of cottages, mostly occupied by workmen. Here are Board schools, built in 1876 at a cost of £3,400.

RENISHAW QUARTER, which includes Spinkhill and part of Eckington, is a small village to the east of Eckington. The Midland, and Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire railway companies have stations here, the former, built in 1874, a short distance from the site of the old one, the latter opened for traffic in 1892. Close to the last-named is the public-house known as the Sitwell Arms, and also the extensive ironworks formerly carried on by Appleby & Co., but now leased by the Renishaw Iron Co. The Renishaw colliery, owned by J. & G. Wells, Ltd., is adjacent. An iron church, dedicated to St. Matthew, was erected here in 1887, at a cost of about £300. There is also a United Methodist chapel, or Free Church, and schoolroom, built in 1869, at a cost of £1,200, the site being the gift of F. R. Appleby, Esq. The Board schools, with master's residence attached, were erected in 1874 at a cost of about £300, and are attended by about 300 scholars. Renishaw Hall, half-a-mile S.E. from Eckington, is a large ancient mansion, the property and occasional residence of Sir Geo. Reresby Sitwell. It has a fine situation, in the midst of an extensive and beautifully-wooded park, whose charms have been enhanced by the construction of a lake. Emmett Carr, adjacent to the village, consists of a number of cottages, chiefly occupied by workmen from the ironworks, an inn, and several shops. Spinkhill is a hamlet and small village, one mile E. from Eckington. Here is the well-known Catholic church and college of Mount St. Mary's, founded about 1842. The church, a handsome structure crowning the summit of an eminence from which it has taken its name, is surmounted by a spire rising to the height of about fifty feet. Some twenty years ago greater accommodation was given by the addition of a south tribune adjoining the chancel; at the same time the church was renovated and beautifully decorated throughout. The college belongs to the Society of Jesus, or the Jesuits. Since its erection many improvements have been made in the shape of additional wings for classrooms, &c.; a piazza or corridor has also been converted into a refectory capable of seating 200 students. Other extensions and improvements are still being made. In connection with the church are the elementary schools, erected in 1852, with a residence for the master. It is a handsome Gothic building of stone, but is now being enlarged by additional class and cloakrooms, and playgrounds. The schools are attended by about 300 children.

Ridgeway is a small village five miles S.S.E. from Sheffield, forming the western portion of the parish of Eckington. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was erected in 1840 at a cost of £2,000, and restored in 1868. It is a neat stone building, comprising nave, chancel, north and south aisles, and tower. The aisles are supported by five arches, and lighted with lancet windows. The tower was added at the south-west in 1874; in appearance it is handsome, square in shape, adorned with pinnacles, and surmounted by a graceful weather vane. The east window of four lights, filled with stained glass, representing the Agony in the Garden, Crucifixion, Resurrection, and Transfiguration, has been inserted to the memory of the Turner family, and is inscribed underneath: "A. M. D. G. This window has been drawn, designed, and painted by their son Reuben, with the assistance of a few friends, and erected to their memories, 1867." The living is a vicarage, value £300 annually; patron, the rector of Eckington; present vicar, Rev. M. G. Hubback, M.A. The Wesleyans and Methodists also have places of worship here. Board Schools were erected at Ridgeway and Marsh Lane in 1874.

Marsh Lane is a populous district adjoining Eckington; other hamlets are Carter Lane, one mile west from Ridgeway; Ford, one mile S. by W., once a seat of the sickle manufacture; High Lane, White Lane, and Sload Lane.

Troway is a small scattered village, situated on an eminence about 1½ miles from Ridgeway, and six miles N. by E. from Sheffield. In the vicinity are the hamlets of Bramley, distant one mile, to the north of which is Bole Hill.

CHARITIES.—In 1762 Margaret Foljambe left a yearly sum of £5 to be paid out of land. The money is distributed on St. Thomas' Day, 40s. equally divided amongst 20 poor widows, and the remainder in sums of 1s. to 60 poor persons of Eckington and Renishaw. An annual sum of £2, a charge upon the estate of Chandos-Pole, is distributed in sums of 1s. to 2s. 6d. In 1791 Jonathan Bromehead left, for the benefit of the poor, property and land. The sum of £200 in 1819, and £100 in 1827, were invested for the same purpose. Out of the income seven leaves are given weekly to poor families of Eckington and Renishaw. In 1711 Henry Inman left the rents and profits of certain lands to be expended in providing gowns marked with the letters H. and I. The Rev. Francis Gisborne left, in 1817, the sum of £5 10s. to be expended in clothing and distributed to the poor in winter. In 1680 Margaret Freeton surrendered the rents of certain lands, amounting to £15 14s. per annum, to the overseers for the benefit of the poor.

ELMTON.

This is a parish and township containing 2,830 acres of land, lying on the borders of Nottinghamshire. The ratable value is £3,622, and the population in 1891 was 673. The Duke of Portland is lord of the manor, and his Grace and Rd. Skinner, Esq., Holbeck Hall, Cuckney, Mansfield, are the principal land-owners. Elmton is in the hundred of Scarsdale, the poor-law union and county court district of Worksop, petty sessional division of Eckington, and deanery of Staveley.

The soil is chiefly encumbent on limestone, which rises into bold undulations. On the northern border there is some romantic scenery. The rocks have in various places been rent asunder or worn by the action of water into great fissures which have assumed various fantastic shapes. These are known as Markland's Grips. The Creswell Crags, on the Nottinghamshire border, is a singular and beautiful assemblage of rocks and cliffs, mimic rivals of the far-famed rocks of Dovedale. In the cliffs there are several caverns, the three largest are respectively known as Robin Hood's Cave, Church Hole, and Mother Grundy's Parlour.

Elmton had its church and priest at the time of the Domesday Survey. The manor then belonged to Walter Deincourt; Ralph Deincourt, his son, was the founder of Thurgarton Priory, in Nottinghamshire, to which establishment he gave the church of Elmton. The manor remained with this family till the death of William, Lord Deincourt, in 1422, when it passed to his sister and co-heiress, the wife of Lord Cromwell. Shortly after it was conveyed by marriage to Lord Lovel. Another Lord Lovel was one of the chief supporters of the impostor, Lambert Simnel. He escaped after the battle of Stoke, in 1486, and was never again heard of. This and other of his estates were granted by the Crown to Sir John Savage. In the reign of Elizabeth, Elmton came into the possession of Sir Francis Rodes, and it remained with this family till 1854, when it was sold by William Hatfield de Rodes, Esq., to the Duke of Portland.

The village of Elmton, named from the abundant elm trees that formerly grew in the neighbourhood, is situated 9 miles E. from Chesterfield, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ from Elmton and Creswell station on the Mansfield and Chesterfield branch of the Midland Railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, was wholly rebuilt in 1771, in the tasteless style that characterised that period. It consists of chancel, nave, and a bell turret containing three bells. The church was re-seated in 1894 by the Duke of Portland, and a vestry and organ chamber were added at the expense of the parishioners. An old sepulchral slab has been preserved; it is ornamented with a cross fleury, and bears a portion of the inscription, "Orate pro anima Roberti Berbi" ("Pray for the soul of Robert Berbi"). The rectorial tithes were appropriated to Thurgarton Priory, and a vicarage ordained. After the dissolution of the priory the patronage reverted to the Crown, and was granted to Thomas West. After one or two changes it came into the possession of the Rodes, and was purchased by the Duke of Rutland about forty years ago. The living was valued by the Parliamentary Commissioners, in 1650, at £5; it is now worth £98, and is held by the Rev. C. W. Tibbits. The tithes are valued at £56.

Elmton Park, containing 500 acres, including two adjacent farms, formerly belonged to Thurgarton Priory, and is now owned by the Duke of Portland. It is occupied by Mr. G. Cox, who keeps here a large stud of horses. Mr. Cox has been a successful breeder for many years, and his animals have carried off numerous valuable prizes at the various agricultural shows.

There is said to have been a Roman encampment on the site now called Camp Hill or Sand Hill. On the summit is a blackened space, as if caused by fire. Several ancient coins were found on the adjoining farm by Mr. Jackson (now of The Elms), and a silver coin was recently discovered bearing a bust and the word "Cæsar" on one side, but the obverse side is much worn and difficult to decipher.

Creswell is a scattered village on the borders of Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, partly in this parish and partly in that of Whitwell. The manor was given to the monks of Welbeck, and in the reign of Edward I. the abbot obtained the right of free warren in Creswell, North Winfield, and other places. There was an ancient chapel here, but the only vestige of it now remaining, is a walled up window over the stables of the Portland Arms public house. The road leading to the railway station is still known as Chapel lane. The chapel was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and the village "wakes" are even now regulated by that feast. There is a good National school in the village built by the late Duke of Portland, and entirely supported by the present Duke, in which also church service is held. A Free Methodist Chapel was built by subscription in 1894. It is a neat building of brick, capable of seating 300 persons. Near the village is Elmton and Creswell station, which is the junction for Clowne, Staveley, and Chesterfield. Sinking operations are now being carried on by the Bolsover Colliery Co., Ltd., and coal, it is expected, will be reached at a depth of 500 yards. Near the village are "Creswell Craggs," now much frequented by tourists and visitors.

Jedediah Buxton, the celebrated arithmetical calculator, was born at Elmton, in 1707. His father was the schoolmaster; but Jedediah, as a child, exhibited the utmost stupidity, and neither could, nor would be taught. It was in after years, when he was following the occupation of a day labourer, that his arithmetical powers exhibited themselves. How he first became acquainted with the relative proportions of numbers and their progressive denominations he did not know; but having found himself possessed of the power he applied the whole force of his mind to it, and without pencil, slate, or chalk, he could perform very abstruse calculations. It is said that he could measure a piece of land by striding over it as accurately as if it had been done by the chain. He died in 1777.

Post Office, Creswell, at F. Binge's. Arrivals, 7-20 a.m.; despatches, 7-27 p.m. (week-days only). Letters for Elmton are via Chesterfield, and Creswell via Mansfield (unless otherwise specified). Wall Box, Elmton—Collection at 3 p.m.

HOLMESFIELD.

This parish, formerly a chapelry under Dronfield, comprises the township of Holmesfield, containing 4,556 acres, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Rutland, who is also lord of the manor; William Wilson, Esq., J.P., Beauchief Hall; Herbert Lowe, Unthank; H. W. Bland, Esq., Barlow; George Greaves; Exors. of Thomas Holleley; S. E. Lowe, Horsleygate; and William Franklin, Sheffield. It is valued for rating purposes at £2,866, and has a population of 500.

Holmesfield is in the Scarsdale hundred, Norton county council division, Eckington petty sessional division, Chesterfield county court district, union and rural district, and deanery of Dronfield. It has, under the Local Government Act of 1894, a parish council of five members, and it elects one district councillor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Holmesfield was held by Walter Deincourt, and it remained in the possession of his descendants till the reign of Henry VI., when it passed to two coheiresses, who married Ralph, Lord Cromwell, and William, Lord Lovel. Subsequently the Lovels obtained possession of the whole manor. In consequence of the attainder of Francis, Lord Lovel, after the battle of Stoke, in 1486, the manor reverted to the Crown, and was granted to Sir John Savage, and at a later period it passed to the ancestors of the Duke of Rutland.

The village of Holmesfield is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Dronfield, which is the nearest railway station. A chapel, dedicated to St. Swithin, was erected here at an early period, and was endowed with 40 acres of glebe land. This chapel, which was in the Norman style and had a side aisle, was taken down in 1826, and the present church built on the site. It is a small structure, consisting of chancel, nave, and square tower, pinnacled and embattled, containing a clock and one bell—the latter a recent addition. A gallery is carried round the north side and west end of the church. The nave is seated with box pews. A marble tablet perpetuates the memory of the Rev. Thomas Hirst, B.A., who was for 37 years vicar of the parish, and died in 1887. The living, which has been augmented by grants from Queen Anne's Bounty, is now worth £130 per annum, with residence.

The patronage is now in the hands of trustees. The Rev. Charles Bradshaw is the present vicar.

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village, built in 1833, capable of seating 90 persons.

For the management of scholastic affairs there is a School Board of five members, who are now erecting a new school, at an estimated cost of about £1,000. The old school, built by the Duke of Rutland in 1831 for a Sunday school, will be appropriated to its original purpose. The earliest provision for educational purposes was made by Robert Moore, who, in 1719, gave the profits of two closes called Uggeth Lees, for the instruction of the children. Subsequently donations were given by various persons for the same purpose, and the sum, amounting to £220, was laid out in the purchase of 10a. 3r. 3p. of land, called Penny Acres, in Dronfield parish; and in addition to this there is an allotment of 1a. 0r. 27p.

Cartledge is a hamlet three-quarters of a mile from Holmesfield. Horsleygate, Lidgate, Woodthorpe, Moorwoods, Unthank, Cordwell, Millthorpe, and Fanshawgate, are names given to particular parts of the parish. Near Storth House, an ancient farmstead, are the remains of a moat. The site is known as Castle Hill; but if a castle ever occupied the spot no record of it is now extant. At Owler Bar, half-way between Sheffield and Baslow, is the Peacock Inn, a famous road-side hostelry. Here are the kennels of the Baslow Fox Hounds, built in 1887, by the late master, William Wilson, Esq., J.P., Beauchief Hall. The pack consists of 16½ couples of working hounds, which hunt Tuesdays and Fridays in Derbyshire. The present master is William M. Harrison, Esq., Abbeydale House, Sheffield.

Charity.—Isaac Tomlinson, formerly master of Holmesfield Endowed School for 37 years, at his death in 1876, bequeathed £100 to the vicar and churchwardens for the time being, the interest thereof to be distributed each 13th day of September amongst the deserving poor attending the Parish Church.

Post Office at Mr. Joseph Revill's. Letters, via Sheffield, arrive at 8-0 a.m.; despatch at 5-0 p.m. No Sunday business. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office, Totley (two miles); nearest Railway Stations, Dore and Totley and Dronfield (2½ miles).

KILLAMARSH.

This is a parish on the borders of Yorkshire, from which it is separated by a small tributary of the Rother. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Beighton, petty sessional division of Eckington, county court district, poor law union and rural district of Chesterfield, and deanery of Staveley. The parish council consists of nine members, and the parish also elects one rural district councillor. The superficial extent of Killamarsh is 1,601 acres, its ratable value is £12,114, and the population in 1891 was 3,202. R. W. Chandos-Pole, Esq., Radbourne Hall (lord of the manor); Sir G. R. Sitwell, Bart., Whitby; John Shaw, Esq., Darrington Hall, Pontefract; and M. J. G. Alderson, Esq., Norton Lees, Sheffield, are the principal landowners.

There appear to have been two manors in Chinewoldmarex (Killamarsh) at the time of the Domesday Survey, one of which belonged to Ascut Musard, and the other to the King's thanes. Nothing is known of the further descent of these manors till the reign of King John, when one of them was held by Philip de Dovecote, and in the following reign by Cecily Meynell. In the reign of Edward II., Hugh, the son of William Kiuwaldmarsh, is recorded as holding a manor here. Subsequently there is no record extant of any other manor than that which was held in the reign of Henry III. by the family of Hathersage, which passed in moieties to the Longfords and Goushills. Ralph de Longford died seized of a moiety of this manor in 1513, and Sir William Holles died seized of the other moiety in 1542. Sir Thomas Holles sold the moiety to Sir Richard Pype and George Basford, and Sir Richard, who was Lord Mayor of London, died seized of it in 1587. In 1817 the manor belonged to Sir George Sitwell, Bart., and subsequently it came into the possession of the Chandos-Poles. The tenure on which it was held until the abolition of feudal military services in the reign of Charles II., was the providing for the King's army in Wales of a horse of the value of 5s., with a sack and a spur for four days.

The village of Killamarsh is situated on the Sheffield Road, $8\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Chesterfield, one mile from Killamarsh station on the Midland railway, and close to the station on the Beighton and Annesley extension of the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railway, which was opened on the 1st of June, 1892. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, dates from Norman times, but the subsequent restorations that have taken place have effaced almost every vestige of the original work. It comprises chancel, nave, south porch, and an embattled tower. The latter is a good specimen of the Perpendicular style of the 15th century. The chancel was re-built in the Decorated style in 1846, at a cost of £600, and extensive repairs took place in 1878 at an expense of £500. The porch was re-built, the old nave roof replaced by one of high pitch, open seats were substituted for the pews; the west gallery was removed and the tower archway was opened out. A further sum of £400 was expended in the spring of 1889 in improving the interior, planting the churchyard with trees, and other minor improvements; and plans have been prepared for the enlargement to double the present accommodation by the addition of a north aisle, vestry, and organ chamber as soon as the necessary funds are forthcoming.

There is very little of interest within the church. Some fine old stained glass is preserved in the south window of the chancel. It represents the Virgin and Child, perhaps the only pre-Reformation Madonna in Derbyshire. The figure is about 2ft. 6in. high, and appears crowned, holding a septre in the right hand. The head and feet of the Holy Child are formed like a man's, to represent wisdom and age. In front of the figure is a scroll inscribed "Sancta Maria." The font is modern. The old 13th century one stands in the churchyard. It was rescued by the present rector, who found it, about two years ago.

in a yard serving as a water trough. There are six bells in the tower, presented by the inhabitants in 1845, and re-hung in 1892 at a cost of £150. On a board in the tower it is recorded that the first 5,040 changes were rung on these bells by the Ecclesfield ringers on the 10th of August, 1845, in two hours and 24 minutes, and the second 5,040 changes were accomplished by the Yorkshire and Old East Derbyshire Associations on the 14th of August, 1892, in three hours and half-a-minute. The earliest register book contains entries of births, marriages, and deaths from 1638 to 1812. Though nearly 200 years had passed the book is only about half full.

In the churchyard is part of the shaft of an old cross, standing on two steps. There is nothing very remarkable among the tombstones, but the inscription on a tablet against the south wall of the church may be quoted—"To the memory of John Wright, a pauper, of this parish, who died May 4th, 1797, in the 103rd year of his age. He was temperate and cheerful, and in the trying situation of darkness, poverty and old age, bore his infirmities with such christian meekness as excited the benevolence of good men, and is here recorded as an instructive lesson to others, Rev. C. Alderson, B.D., P.P.P., Anno Dni, 1797. The tablet was restored in 1894, by C. W. Alderson, Esq.

Killamarsh was formerly a parochial chapelry of Eckington, and the living was annexed to the rectory of the mother church until June 10th, 1843, when by an Order in Council, in pursuance of the plans of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, it was declared to be an independent rectory. It is in the gift of the Crown, and is worth £420 per annum, derived from coal rents, 70 acres of glebe, and tithes £150. The present rector is the Rev. Francis James Metcalfe, of Lichfield Theological College.

A Mission Room of corrugated iron, seating 300, was built in 1891 at a cost of £300, defrayed by the rector and his friends.

Nonconformity is also numerously represented. The Congregational Chapel dates from 1852 and has been twice enlarged, but is still inadequate for the increasing neighbourhood. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel, erected in 1876 at a cost of £400, and the members of the United Methodist Free Church have also a place of worship here.

Few parishes possess charities that date so far back as those of Killamarsh. In 1480 William Hewitt left a rent charge of 15s. yearly out of the Town Close, and another William Hewitt, in 1599, gave £100 which was invested in the purchase of 15½ acres of land. John Kaye, in 1531, gave a messuage for a school house, and Robert Turie, in 1720, endowed this school with a house and land for the instruction of six poor children. Other bequests have been made to the school, and the endowment now produces £41 a year. The school premises were re-built in 1872 at a cost £400, raised by voluntary contributions, and it was enlarged in 1887, raising the accommodation to 194. There are two departments, mixed and infants, and about 160 children attend.

A School Board, of five members, was formed in 1877, and a handsome school was erected at a cost of £5,240. There are three departments, with a total accommodation for 514, and an average attendance of 404.

The collieries give employment to a considerable number of the inhabitants; there are, besides, several thriving industries in the parish. A forge was established here about the end of last century by Mr. Joseph Butler, proprietor of the Wingerworth furnaces. The works were long carried on by Messrs. Webster and Horsfall, of Birmingham, and here was made the wire for the first Atlantic cable which was laid by the Great Eastern steamship in 1865-6. These extensive premises are now occupied by two firms as a steel works and a glass works. There are also two chemical works in the parish.

Near the forge is Killamarsh Old Hall, now a farm house, occupied by Mr. Edmund Nicholls. The East to West railway, at present in course of construction, will pass through the farm. Near it also is the Chesterfield canal. Upper Thorpe and West Thorpe are thriving villages, and there are, besides, several scattered hamlets in the parish.

NORTON.

This is an extensive and populous parish on the border of Yorkshire, from which it is separated by the River Sheaf. Its estimated extent according to the overseer's returns is 4,526 acres; ratable value, £24,150; and the population in 1891 was 1,362. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, petty sessional division of Eckington, county court district of Sheffield, poor law union of Ecclesall Bierlow, and deanery of Dronfield. It gives name to a division for the election of a member of the county council; and under the Local Government Act of 1894 it is the head of a rural district, and returns three district councillors. The parish council consists of eleven members. The manufacture of scythes, sickles, cutlery, files, &c., is extensively carried on in the district. The soil is generally light and fertile, and is chiefly devoted to dairy purposes. Corn, potatoes, and turnips are also grown. The land belongs to several owners, the principal of whom are William Frederick Goodliffe, Esq., lord of the manor, Norton Hall; F. W. Bagshawe, Esq., J.P., D.L., The Oakes, Norton; Cunliffe Shawe, Esq., Weddington Hall, Nuneaton; Col. Edward Strelley Pegge-Burnell, Winkburn Hall, Southwell; Sheffield Corporation; Mr. James Duffield, Workington; and the Hatfield family.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Norton was held by Ingram, under Roger de Busli. From Ingram was descended Robert Fitz Ranulph, lord of Alfreton and Norton, who founded the Abbey of Beauchief, and gave to the abbot and canons the churches of both those places. His great grandson, dying without issue, the manor passed with one of his sisters and co-heiresses to William Chaworth. In the 15th century it came to the Ormonds, and from this family it passed in moieties to Dynham and Babington. Subsequently both moieties were purchased by the Blythes; and Charles Blythe, about the year 1623, sold his rights to John Bullock. Mr. Bullock died in 1647, and in 1666 the manor became, by purchase, the property of Cornelius Clarke, Esq., of Ashgate. Mr. Clarke at his death in 1696 bequeathed it to his nephew Robert Offley, and subsequently it passed in marriage to Samuel Shore, Esq. Offley Shore, becoming involved in financial difficulties, placed the manor in the hands of his assignees. It subsequently passed through several hands, and in 1892, was purchased by W. F. Goodliffe, Esq., from the representatives of the late Charles Cammell, Esq.

The village of Norton is well built and pleasantly situated 4 miles S. from Sheffield, 7½ N. by W. from Chesterfield, and 2½ from Dronfield and Beauchief stations, on the Midland Railway. The church, dedicated to St. James, is an interesting old edifice, consisting of chancel with side chapel, nave, north and south aisles, and a western tower with embattled parapet and pinnacles. It is supposed to have been erected by Robert Fitz Ranulph, in the 12th century, and there still remains a considerable portion of the original Norman work. The aisles are separated from the nave by semi-circular arches, and two similar arches divide the chancel from the chapel on the south side. The edifice appears to have been partially rebuilt when the Perpendicular style of architecture prevailed.

(1400-1547), and it was again thoroughly restored under the direction of Mr. Street, the eminent architect, in 1883, at a cost of £4,000. The chancel was restored by Mrs. Cammell, in memory of her husband, Charles Cammell, who died in 1879; and the east window is a memorial of the same gentleman, inserted by B. C. Cammell, his son. This window is a very fine specimen of art, executed by Frampton. The south chapel is also enriched by a handsome stained-glass window of five lights, in memory of Captain George Cammell, who died in 1847. There also is the beautifully designed alabaster monument of William Blythe and his wife, bearing the recumbent effigies of the couple, who died about the close of the 15th century. The sides of the tomb are enriched with sculptured figures under crocketed canopies, now much mutilated, and several shields of arms, some of which can still be deciphered. William Blythe had by his wife five sons, two of whom—John and Geoffrey—became respectively Bishops of Salisbury and of Coventry and Lichfield. The latter, in 1524, founded a chantry in Norton Church, and endowed it for the maintenance of a priest to say mass for the souls of his parents. "The 'mancyon house,' belonging to this chantry," Dr. Cox tells us, "was, after the Reformation, turned into an ale-house, but was pulled down at the commencement of the century. It stood on the western side of Norton Green; and Geoffrey purchased the land from the parish for ten marks, on condition of their keeping up a stock of ten kine. The vicar was responsible for this, and in default was to forfeit his weekly allowance of nine gallons of ale and nine keyst of bread, which he received from Beauchief Abbey, till the stock was made good." Richard, a brother of the two bishops, is commemorated on a slab in the chancel, but the inscription is nearly obliterated. There is also a large marble monument to William and John Bullock, of Norton, gentlemen, who died in 1666 and 1682 respectively. There are several other monuments and mural tablets in the church; but the only one possessing special interest is that of Chantrey, the sculptor, of whom more anon. The font is an interesting example of Early English art. It stands on four groups of clustered pillars, and is ornamented with some curious sculpture. The tower contains a clock of six bells, all bearing the date 1810. The registers date from 1560.

The living is a vicarage, worth £570 net, in the gift of John Hall, Esq., and held by the Rev. Geo. W. Hall, M.A. (C.C.C., Camb.), since 1888.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, built in 1854.

The Endowed School, at Maugherhay, was founded in pursuance of the will of Leonard Gill, who died in 1654, and endowed with land and tenements for the education of five poor children. Subsequently other bequests were made, increasing the number of free scholars to 59. Sir Francis Chantrey left, amongst other charities, £50 yearly for the education of ten poor boys. New school premises were built in 1894, at a cost of £1,300, for the accommodation of 120 children. The old school was rebuilt and enlarged in 1787.

Norton Lees is a village and populous district on the Sheffield border of the parish, containing many neat villa residences. The Blythes possessed property here as early as the reign of Edward III. The mansion now called Bishop's House is an ancient half-timbered structure at the north entrance to Meerbrook Park. In the interior is some antique carved oak panelling, inscribed "W. B. 1627." Norton Lees formerly belonged to the family of De Gotham, from whom it passed by the marriage of an heiress to Thomas Parker in the reign of Richard II., and this family resided at Lees Hall till the extinction of the direct male line in the time of Charles I. Anne, daughter and heiress of John Parker, brought the estate to Francis Barker. The hall, now a farmhouse belonging to the Hatfield family, still bears traces of its former importance. The old oak staircase remains, and some of the rooms retain their wainscoting.

For the convenience of the increasing population of the Sheffield side of the parish a church was erected here, at a cost of £4,200, and a parochial district allotted to it in 1877. The edifice is in the Early English style of architecture, and consists of chancel, nave, porch, and belfry. The east window of four lights is filled with stained glass, representing the Nativity, Baptism, Transfiguration, and Ascension of Our Lord, and was inserted at the expense of Mr. G. Hall, of Thorpe House, in 1893, in memory of his parents. The west window, in the centre light of which is depicted St. Paul, the patron of the church, was also the gift of the same gentleman. The font was presented by Mr. W. Cockayne, of Lees House, who also contributed largely towards the erection of the church. The living is a vicarage, worth £280 per annum, with residence, in the gift of the Vicar of Norton, and held by the Rev. Wm. Mercer, M.A. (Corpus Christi Coll., Camb.), who also officiates at Beauchief Abbey Church on the Sunday afternoons. The parish is designated Norton Woodseats, which is a long, straggling village on the Chesterfield Road.

There is a Methodist New Connexion Chapel here, built in 1876, at a cost of £1,400, and a new school was added in 1892, at an expense of £600. The Connexion here dates from 1797. The United Free Methodists have a chapel in Derbyshire Lane, built in 1876, to seat 300. Here also is Norton Cemetery, covering about six acres of ground, overlooking Chesterfield Road. There is one mortuary chapel for all creeds. The Cemetery, which was opened on the 1st of June, 1869, is under the control of a Burial Board of nine members.

A School Board consisting of seven members was formed in 1872, and took over the existing National Schools, and erected commodious schools in Derbyshire Lane, which were opened March 15th, 1875. There are three departments having a total accommodation for 520 children. A junior school for children under the age of seven was built at Meersbrook Bank, in 1894, at a cost of £3,000, to accommodate 270 children. Greenhill School can accommodate 250 children, and the infant school at Norton Woodseats, 120.

The Oakes, the seat and property of Francis Westby Bagshawe, Esq., J.P., D.L., is an ancient stone mansion, picturesquely mantled with ivy, and surrounded by a fine park, about half-a-mile from the village of Norton. The house dates from the 16th century, and was formerly the seat of the Morewoods, from whom it passed to the Gills in the 17th century: and it subsequently came by marriage to the Bagshawes. The grounds are tastefully laid out, and an artificial lake 300 yards in length adds to their charms. The inner gates near the Hall are worthy of notice. They are massive, about 10 feet high, wholly constructed of wrought iron, and contain neither bolt nor screw; and though 300 years old are still in good preservation.

Bradway is a small village three miles S.W. from Norton Church, and five miles S. from Sheffield. Here the Midland Railway runs through a tunnel 2,020 yards in length. There is a Mission Room in the village in which church service is held. Greenhill is an ancient and considerable village, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Norton Church. The Wesleyans have a chapel here, built in 1823, and renovated in 1888, as also have the United Free Methodists, built in 1859. The established service is held in the schoolroom, now rented by the School Board. Hensworth is a small village, half-a-mile E. of Norton. The magistrates hold Petty Sessions for the north-west part of the Hundred, at the Bagshawe Arms in this village, on the second Monday in the month.

Meersbrook House and Park, formerly the property of the Shore family, now belongs to the Sheffield Corporation. The Park, beautifully situated on a slope two miles from Sheffield, has been laid out as pleasure grounds, and the house converted into a museum, named after Professor Ruskin, by whom the various objects in the collection were chiefly presented. The arrangement and display of the objects is in accordance with the principles laid down by the eminent art critic in Fora Clavigera, that a museum is not a place of entertainment but of education—where the student may, in his hours of leisure, study the workings of nature and the finest productions of art. The collection is large, but the number of objects or pictures exhibited at any one time is restricted, so that the mind may not be bewildered by the multiplicity of objects. Many visits are, therefore, necessary to see all the treasures of the museum.

LEGAL WORTHY.—Chantrey, the eminent sculptor, was born at Jordanthorpe, in this parish, in 1781. His father was a country carpenter and small farmer, and Chantrey, in his boyhood, was employed in carrying milk into Sheffield in barrels on an ass. His genius displayed itself at an early period, and in his daily journeys to Sheffield he used to amuse himself by carving the handles of walking-sticks and other pieces of wood. On one occasion, when asked what he was carving, he replied, "Old Fox," Mr. Fox being the master of the village school at which he was educated. The boy was twelve years of age when his father died, and three or four years afterwards his mother placed him with a grocer at Sheffield. That business, however, had no attractions for Chantrey, and he was apprenticed to a carver and gilder. This occupation was congenial to him, and he devoted his leisure time to the study of drawing and modelling in clay. For the latter he had remarkable aptitude. When twenty years of age he advertised his desire to receive orders for portraits in crayons, and two years later he sought commissions in painting and sculpture. There were no provincial schools of art in those days, and to further improve himself in modelling he journeyed to London and attended the Royal Academy. A bust, sent in 1811 to the exhibition of the Royal Academy, secured for him the friendship and praise of Nollekins, who declared on many occasions, "If you want a bust, Chantrey's the man." Commissions now came rapidly in, and his struggle with poverty was ended. He produced busts of Sir Walter Scott, Sir John Banks, Lord St. Vincent, the Duke of Sussex, George III., George IV., William IV., and many others, all remarkable for their life-like expression. A more important work of his is the monument of Mr. David Pike Watts, in Ilam Church, representing the venerable gentleman giving his dying benediction to his only daughter (Mrs. Russell) and her child, who surround the couch; but his chef d'œuvre is the world-renowned group, "The Sleeping Children," in Lichfield Cathedral. Banks's celebrated monument to Penelope Boothby, in Ashbourne Church, is said to have furnished Chantrey with the idea for this group; and such was probably the case, for though he was unequalled with the chisel, he possessed but little of the poetry of his art. In 1818 he was elected a member of the Royal Academy; the University of Oxford gave him the degree of D.C.L., and that of Cambridge M.A.; and William IV., in 1837, conferred upon him the honour of knighthood. He died in 1841, and is buried in Norton churchyard, where a plain granite slab covers his grave. An obelisk of grey granite was erected to his memory on the village green, by public subscription, in 1854, bearing the simple inscription, "CHANTREY." Sir Francis Chantrey forgot not the home of his youth, and at his death bequeathed £200 yearly to the vicar of Norton, or other resident clergyman of Norton, that he may, so long as the sculptor's tomb shall last, on the 21st day of December annually pay of it £50 to the resident schoolmaster, on condition that he shall instruct, free from any expense, ten poor boys in reading, writing, arithmetic, and other general branches of education. Also on the same day annually, pay £10 to each of five poor men, and the like sum of £10 to each of five poor women, widows or spinsters, parishioners of Norton, such clergyman to retain for his care and trouble the residue of the £200.

STAVELEY.

This is an extensive and populous parish, including the hamlets of Handley, or West Handley, Middle Handley, Nether Handley, Netherthorpe, and Woodthorpe, comprising a total of 6,825 acres. The ratable value is £41,876, and the population in 1891 was 9,363. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, the petty sessional division, county court district, and union of Chesterfield, and forms a division for the election of a member of the county council. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 it has a parish council of fifteen members, and it elects three district councillors and guardians. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal proprietor; and the Staveley Coal & Iron Co., Ltd., are also large owners.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Staveley was held by Aescut Musard, and there was then a church and a priest on the manor. Staveley remained in the possession of this family till the reign of Edward I., when it devolved on the three sisters of Nicholas Musard and their issue. One of them married Anker de Frecheville, Baron of Crich; another married John de Hibernia. The share of the third sister passed to the Cromwells, and subsequently to the Cliffords. John de Hibernia's heir was a son of the same name, who transferred his moiety of the manor to his cousin, Ralph de Frecheville. The Frechevilles thus became possessed of two-thirds of the manor, and Staveley was for several generations the principal seat of this powerful family. In the struggle between Charles I. and the Parliament, Sir John Frecheville espoused the Royal cause, and garrisoned his house at Staveley for the King. Sir John held the rank of colonel in the Royal army, and appears to have possessed some military capacity. In a skirmish with the Parliamentary troops he repulsed them, and they fled for shelter to Hassop Hall, where he took them all prisoners. His house at Staveley was besieged by a detachment of the Earl of Manchester's army, under Major-General Crawford, and the garrison, after some resistance, capitulated. The captors took 12 pieces of ordnance, 230 muskets, and 150 pikes, which represent the full strength of the defence. Sir John's loyalty brought him into evil repute with the Roundheads, and after the collapse of the King's cause he had to compound for his estates in the sum of £575. As some recompense for his losses, Charles II., on his accession to the throne, raised him to the peerage, under the title of Lord Frecheville of Staveley. He was the last of this ancient family, and shortly before his death, in 1682, he sold the manor and estate to the first Duke of Devonshire, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The Clifford moiety of the manor was forfeited by the attainder of John, called the Blackfaced Clifford, and granted by Edward IV. to Sir John Pilkington. It appears to have been again escheated to the Crown, and in 1544 was bestowed by Henry VIII. on Sir Francis Leake, who shortly afterwards conveyed it to Sir Peter Frecheville.

The parish is geologically situated on the great Midland coal field, and to this circumstance it owes its industrial importance. Associated with the coal are bands of ironstone, which are extensively worked by the Staveley Coal and Iron Co., Ltd. The iron trade at Staveley appears to have been established about the middle of the 17th century, the furnace and forge being leased from John Frecheville, Esq. This was previous to the use of coke for the furnaces, and the process was considerably inconvenienced by the difficulty of obtaining wood for fuel. The works were abandoned about the beginning of the 18th century, and no effort was made to revive the trade until 1786, when a furnace was erected by Messrs. Ward & Low. Subsequently the business was carried on by Messrs. Ward & Barrow, from whom it was purchased by the present company. There are eight blast furnaces, besides forges and foundries, producing about 1,700 tons of pig iron per week. Good cottage residences have been erected for the workmen; and in 1856 a commodious school was built by the late Richard Barrow, at a cost of nearly £5,000.

The village of Staveley, which is of considerable extent, is situated on an eminence overlooking the river Rother, four miles N.E. from Chesterfield, 10 miles S.E. from Sheffield, and one mile from the station of its own name on the Chesterfield and Eckington branch of the Midland railway, which intersects the parish. The church, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient edifice in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, with north and south aisles, south porch, and a square embattled tower containing eight bells. The fabric was thoroughly restored in 1866 from the designs of Sir Gilbert G. Scott, at which time also the north aisle was added. A continuation of the south aisle, parallel with the chancel, forms the Frecheville chantry or quire, in which many members of that family were interred. Two ancient monuments remain, each bearing on a brass the effigy of a knight in armour; and there are also handsome monuments to John, Lord Frecheville, the last of his family, and his daughter, Christian, wife of Lord St. John of Basing. She died in child-bed; and her figure, with the babe in her arms, finely sculptured in white marble, is recumbent on the tomb. The windows of the church were once rich in heraldic glass, but little of this is now left. The living is a rectory, worth £430 per annum, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. Charles H. Molineux.

There was formerly a "free chapel" at Staveley, which was founded and endowed by the Musards in the 13th century. It appears to have possessed full sacramental rights; but its endowment, some fifty acres of land, was confiscated at the Reformation, and given to Sir John Pinent and Thomas Reve. This edifice is supposed to have stood on the site of the present Mechanics' Institute.

Chapels-of-Ease have been erected at Handley and Woodthorpe, a Mission Church at Barrow Hill, and there are Mission Rooms at Mastin Moor, Speedwell, and Poolsbrook, in which there is Sunday service. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village and another at Poolsbrook; and the Primitive Methodists have chapels at Barrow Hill and Mastin Moor. A Catholic Mission was established at Staveley in 1883. The chapel is a temporary iron structure.

The village is lighted with gas by a company established about thirty years ago. A Market Hall was erected in 1893, containing one large room, used for public entertainments, and three smaller ones. Staveley has also its Mechanics' Institute and Workman's Hall.

Inkersall is a small hamlet, one mile S. Here was born Robert Sampson, an itinerant dealer in pottery, and a tombstone bard of some repute, who died in 1804. Mastin Moor, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E., and Norbriggs, one mile S.E., are also small hamlets.

Handley, now divided into Middle, Nether, and West Handley, was formerly a distinct manor and belonged to Beauchief Abbey. After the dissolution of the abbey, Handley was given by Henry VIII. to William West, Esq., and by this family it was sold to Judge Rodes, who was seneschal to the Earl of Shrewsbury. The manor is now merged in that of Staveley, and the Duke of Devonshire is the principal proprietor. Netherthorpe is a hamlet and small village half-a-mile E. of Staveley. A Grammar School was founded here by Judge Rodes in the reign of Elizabeth, and endowed with a rent-charge of about £40 a year. Woodthorpe, a hamlet and village $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. of Staveley, formerly belonged to the Rodes family, who resided at the hall here previous to their removal to Barlborough. Sir John Rodes, son of Judge Rodes, sold the estate to the Countess of Shrewsbury, and it is now the property of the Duke of Devonshire. Sir Peter Frecheville, in 1632, founded and endowed a hospital for four poor men and four poor women, all to be unmarried, and chosen from the parishes of Barlborough and Staveley. In connection with the hospital was a chapel. This was taken down in 1849, and the present church erected on the site, by the Duke of Devonshire, at a cost of £1,700.

Various bequests have been left to Staveley parish. They are now all amalgamated and vested with the Charity Commissioners. The income, amounting to about £220 yearly, is applied five-ninths to educational purposes and four-ninths to charitable purposes.

WHITTINGTON.

This flourishing and populous parish comprises an area of 1,573 acres, and includes the villages of Old Whittington, New Whittington, and Whittington Moor, each about a mile apart, stretching from $2\frac{1}{4}$ to $4\frac{1}{4}$ miles N. by E. of Chesterfield. It is valued for ratable purposes at £16,872, and had in 1891 a population of 8,798. The boundaries of the ecclesiastical parish are not coterminous with those of the civil one. The former includes Old and New Whittington and Sheepbridge, having a population of 6,388. The parish is in the hundred of Scarsdale, petty sessional division, county court district, and poor law union of Chesterfield, deanery of Dronfield, and forms a division for the election of a county councillor. An urban council has taken the place of the local board. There are nine members, three for each of the three wards into which the parish was divided when the local board was formed.

Whittington, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was a berewick or hamlet of Newbold, and we glean from Lysons that the paramount manor, which had been in the Peverels, was granted by King John to William Briwere, from which family it passed to the Wakes. The Boythorpes, Bretons, Loudhams, and Foljambes held it successively as mesne lords; but the immediate possession was, from an early period, in the family of Whittington, whose heiress married Dethic. About the year 1488 it passed by a coheirress of this family to the Poles, who held it under the Foljambes. George Pole had two daughters, coheirresses, who, towards the latter part of the 17th century, brought it in moieties to Frith and Chaworth. The moieties passed through several hands, and were subsequently purchased by John and William Fowler, Esqrs. The hall and park are now the property and seat of J. M. Clayton, Esq., by whom they were purchased, in 1893, from the exors of the late William Fowler, Esq.

The parish owes its prosperity to the abundance of coal and iron ore in the district. Extensive works for the manufacture of iron and steel were erected by Messrs. Firth & Sons in 1857, and the village of New Whittington sprang up for the accommodation of the employés; and the following year the Sheepbridge Iron Works (now the property of the Sheepbridge Coal & Iron Co., Ltd.) were established. The former works were closed in 1887. The latter company has eight blast furnaces and two rolling mills. The Albion Pottery of Messrs. Thos. Taylor & Son also gives employment to a considerable number of hands; and bricks are extensively manufactured at Brierley Bridge.

The old church of St. Bartholomew, which is supposed to have dated from Norman times, was pulled down in 1863, and the present one erected a few yards from the site, at a cost of £2,610. It is a handsome Gothic edifice, consisting of chancel, with vestry on the north side, clerestoried nave, north and south aisles, south porch, west tower with octagonal spire, containing four bells. The east window is a beautiful piece of stained glass work, presented by the Misses Smith, of Dunston Hall. It consists of three lights; the centre one represents the Crucifixion, and in the side lights are depicted the presentation of the keys to Peter, and Christ's commission to him, "Feed My lambs." In the upper part is represented the Ascension. The cost of the window was £200. A handsome reredos was erected by the parishioners in 1887, in memory of Sarah Catherine Aldam. It is of alabaster, and bears a representation, beautifully carved, of Christ blessing little children, and the house of Mary and Martha. The organ, built by Holditch in 1868, was the gift of Mr. Fowler. The font, which is evidently of considerable antiquity, and several mural tablets, belonged to the old church. Amongst the latter is one to the memory of the Rev. Samuel Pegge, LL.D., who held the rectory from 1751 to 1796. He was an eminent antiquary, and was the author of the "Life of Bishop Grosseteste," "History of Beauchief Abbey, Bolsover and Peak Castles." He also collected materials for a history of Derbyshire, now deposited in the Herald's College. The living is a rectory worth £210, with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. John Tomlinson, M.A. (Wadham Coll., Oxon), since 1892.* There is a Mission Church, dedicated to St. Barnabas, at New Whittington, built in 1884; and another—a corrugated iron structure—at Sheepbridge, opened in 1874. The latter cost £543, exclusive of the site, raised chiefly by the Aldam family of Whittington Grange.

Nonconformity is an important element in the parish. The Wesleyans have chapels at Old and New Whittington. Their first chapel was erected in 1828. A new one was built in 1894 from the plans of Mr. F. Blake, of Chesterfield, who has produced a handsome Gothic edifice. It is built wholly of stone, from the quarry of Messrs. Pierce and Hurst, near Darley Dale, and is seated to accommodate 280. At the rear is a commodious Sunday school. The total cost was £1,500, and the work reflects credit on the builder, Mr. John Sims. The Primitive Methodists have chapels bearing the names of Mount Tabor, Bethel, and Ebenezer. The Free Church Methodists have chapels at The Brushes and Whittington Moor. At the latter place the Salvation Army have a Barracks; and the Baptists have a small place of worship at New Whittington.

The earliest provision for educational purposes was left two centuries ago by Peter and Joshua Webster, who devised lands and messuages for the maintenance of a schoolmaster to teach freely a certain number of poor scholars. The school charity and estate are under the management of five governors, in whom also the various local charities have been vested by the Charity Commissioners. A new school was built in 1850, and subsequently enlarged to accommodate 450 children. There are two departments, mixed and infants, and an average attendance of 450. Schools have also been erected at New Whittington and Whittington Moor, each having two departments, mixed and infants. Evening continuation schools are held in the winter months, and are amongst the best attended in the county.

Whittington has become historically famous by its connection with the revolution which deposed James II. and placed William of Orange on the throne. A few of the nobility, amongst whom was the Duke of Devonshire, who beheld with dismay the toleration which the hitherto persecuted Catholics received from James II.—himself a convert to the Catholic religion—assembled on Whittington Moor to deliberate on a plan for the overthrow of the Popish King. A shower of rain happening to fall at the time, they removed to the village for shelter, and finished their deliberations in a public-house, then called "The Cock and Pynot." The old "Revolution House," as it has ever since been known, still stands, but a more commodious inn, "The Cock and Magpie," has been erected at the rear.

* Since the above was written the Parish Church has been reduced to a complete ruin by a conflagration that broke out shortly after midnight, Monday, January 28th, 1895; and with the exception of the tower nothing stands but the roofless walls.

WHITWELL.

This is an ancient and interesting parish, containing 5,230 acres of land, situated at the north-eastern extremity of the county. Its ratable value is £8,477, and the population in 1891 was 1,908. It is in Scarsdale hundred, Eckington petty sessional division, county council division of Bolsover, Worksop union and county court district, and deanery of Staveley. Seven parish councillors have been assigned to Whitwell under the Local Government Act of 1894. The Duke of Portland is lord of the manor, and his Grace, and Lieut.-Col. Butler-Bowdon, Pleasington Hall, Lancashire, are the principal landowners.

The earliest notice of the manor occurs in the will of Wulfric Spott, A.D. 1002, who bequeathed this and other manors to Morcare. At the time of the Domesday Survey it belonged to Ralph Fitzhubert, under whom it was held by one Robert, who is believed to have been an ancestor of the Meynells, who were subsequently lords of Whitwell, or rather a portion of Whitwell, for the manor appears to have become divided into two or more portions. Robert de Meynell was one of the early benefactors of Welbeck Abbey. His line terminated in an heiress, who brought the manor or estate to Matthew de Hathersage in the reign of King John; and in the following reign the coheirresses of Hathersage married Goushill and Longford, who held it in moieties. The Longfords retained their share till the reign of Henry VIII., when this and the Goushill moiety passed to the Pypes, and were sold by Humphrey Pype, in 1593, to Sir John Manners. Ralph de Rye, who was lord of one part of the manor, replied to a Quo Warranto in 1330 that his ancestors had held a park at Whitwell from time immemorial. The tombstone of another Ralph de Rye, who died in 1482, is in the chancel floor, and describes him as lord of the "ville" or town of Whitwell. Edward Rye sold his estates here, in 1563, to Richard Whalley, whose grandson of the same name conveyed them to Sir John Manners, ancestor of the Duke of Rutland. Another portion of Whitwell was held for many generations by the Musards and the Frechevilles, from whom it passed to the Wentworths in the latter part of the 16th century. In the early part of the present century the manor passed by exchange to the Duke of Portland.

The old hall, one of the seats of the Manners, has been utilized as the parish schools for upwards of forty years. The old dining hall, a fine spacious apartment, with an arch near the entrance and a splendidly-carved porch, is appropriated to the infants. The other portion was enlarged about twenty years ago, and plans and arrangements are now under consideration for building a new infant school in the village, at an estimated cost of £1,758. Rooms are set apart for the residence of the master and mistresses. A room in the master's house retains much of its ancient appearance. It is floored and panelled with oak and lighted by a large stone-mullioned window. The ivy-covered gable gives the building a very picturesque appearance. The schools are attended by upwards of 400 children, and are chiefly supported by the Duke of Portland.

The surface of the parish is diversified by gentle undulations and an abundance of woodlands. Whitwell Wood, extending from the precincts of the village to the Yorkshire border, covers about 400 acres. The subsoil is chiefly limestone, and some of the inhabitants are employed in the limeworks. Coal underlies the limestone at a depth of 300 or 400 yards, and a pit has been in operation for some time at Steetley. Another one, the property of the Shireoaks Colliery Co., is approaching completion at Whitwell, at which there will be an estimated output of 1,500 tons daily, giving employment to about 800 hands. At the north-eastern extremity of the parish, on Dumb Hall farm, is the Shire Oak, beneath which the counties of Derby, Nottingham, and York meet.

The village of Whitwell is situated on the Worksop and Chesterfield road, $11\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the former, and $4\frac{1}{2}$ from the latter, and near the station of its own name on the Mansfield and Retford branch of the Midland railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. Lawrence, stands on an eminence at the west end of the village. It is a handsome cruciform structure, comprising chancel, nave (with north and south transepts and north and south aisles), porch, and west tower containing three bells. A considerable portion of old Norman work remains. This is seen in the rounded arches and pillars of the aisles, the chancel arch, the semicircular western doorway of the tower, and a window of the same character at the west end of the south aisle. The transepts, south porch, and chancel were rebuilt in the Decorated style in the 14th century. The upper stage of the tower was a later addition; and there is evidence of alterations in the Perpendicular period. The whole fabric was thoroughly restored in 1886 at a cost of £2,400, raised by general subscription, fete at Welbeck, sale of work, &c. His Grace the Duke of Portland headed the subscription list with £500. Every care has been taken to preserve, as much as possible, the original character of the building. On the south side of the chancel are two sedilia, surmounted by handsome and elaborate tabernacle work; and near them is the ancient piscina under an ogee arch. The east window has been restored, and a small two-light window of stained glass inserted to the memory of the Rev. E. Boothby, a former rector. The tombstone of Radulphus Rye, before mentioned, is a large slab of magnesian limestone, with marginal inscription, now almost unreadable. The incised letters have been filled with pitch, which has in places permeated the stone so as to form one solid body. On the north wall of the chancel, in an elaborately sculptured stone, is a brass to the memory of the four-year-old son of Tobie Waterhous, Doctor in Divinitie, with a rhyming epitaph. In the north transept is the magnificent and costly marble monument of Sir Roger Manners, Knight, who died in 1632. In the centre is the reclining figure of the knight, and below, this very eulogistic epitaph:—

"A living academie was this knight,
Divinity, the arts, the tongs, what might
In learned schooles exactly be profest,
Tooke up theire lodgings in his noble brest,
Till death, like church dispoilers, did pull down
Manners true fabrique and the arts renowne."

In the north wall is an ogee-shaped sepulchral recess, now empty, but which probably once contained the tomb of the founder of the transept. The south transept was formerly a chapel, and contained an altar at which Mass was said. The church is seated to accommodate 300. Near the pulpit is an oaken chair bearing a brass plate on which is engraved—"Presented to the Rev. G. E. Mason, by the miners of Whitwell and Steetley, in grateful remembrance of his help during the lock-out of 1893." The parish registers begin in 1642. The living is a rectory worth £514, in the gift of the Duke of Portland, and held by the Rev. Canon G. E. Mason, M.A., whose curates are the Revs. J. T. Mumford, B.A., and S. W. Goldsmith, B.A. The Rectory is a commodious residence of stone, rebuilt by the present rector in 1886. The tithes were commuted for a rent-charge of £642 per annum.

The Wesleyan Methodists are numerous in the parish, and possess a commodious chapel, built in 1891-2 at a cost of £1,130, raised by subscriptions. It is a neat oblong building of brick in the Gothic style, with sitting accommodation for 350. The old chapel, erected in 1858, is for the present used as a Sunday school. The United Methodist Free Church, originally the chapel of the Wesleyan Association Methodists, was built in 1846, at a cost of £273. It is a plain brick building with a gallery at the east end, capable of seating 200 persons. The exterior appearance was improved about 12 years ago by a coating of stucco, and four new windows of coloured glass were recently inserted. The Plymouth Brethren established themselves here about 20 years ago. There are still a few members, who meet in a room converted out of a barn.

Ample provision has been made for the intellectual improvement and recreation of the inhabitants, as is evidenced by the existence of several clubs, societies, bands, and libraries. Cricket, too, plays an important part in the physical training, and there are resident in this comparatively small place as many as six professionals, five of whom play in various county teams.

Baxton, or Bakestone Moor, is a scattered hamlet half-a-mile south of the village. Belph is another hamlet on the border of Nottinghamshire, and chiefly occupied by the employés of the Duke of Portland at Welbeck.

Steetley is a hamlet situated at the north-east corner of the parish, bordering on Nottinghamshire. The estate, which comprised a messuage and one bovaté of land, was held soon after the Norman Conquest by Gley le Breton. Gley had four sons, one of whom was a witness to the foundation charter of Welbeck Abbey in 1154, and a daughter, Matilda. The sons appear to have left no issue, and the manor descended to their sister, the wife of Robert le Vavasour. It remained with this family till 1360, when it passed to the Frechevilles, in whose possession it remained till the reign of Elizabeth. The next owners were the Wentworths; it then passed to the Howards, Dukes of Norfolk, and was sold to the Duke of Newcastle in 1842.

A chapel was erected here soon after the Norman Conquest, probably by Gley le Breton for the convenience of his household. This chapel must have subsequently acquired some importance, for, in the 14th century, it was designated a rectory, and nine separate institutions are recorded. The second of these rectors, named Lawrence Leche, was instituted in the year 1348. We may infer from the title of "le Leche," or leech, conferred upon him, that he was possessed of considerable surgical or medical skill. It retained its independence only for about half a century, when it lapsed as mysteriously as it arose. The chapel was probably disused after the Reformation; there is no mention of it in the Valor Ecclesiasticus of Henry VIII.; nor is it named in the Parliamentary Survey of 1650. It long lay desecrated, being used as a barn, a sheepfold, and a pigstye. Happily there is a more religious spirit dawning on our 19th century Christianity, and praiseworthy efforts are now made to save places and vessels once consecrated to the service of God. Funds were raised, chiefly through the energy and perseverance of Canon Mason, and, in 1880, Steetley chapel was restored at a cost of £1,262. The plans were prepared by Mr. J. L. Pearson, B.A., and the work has been carried out in a thoroughly conservative spirit. The ancient carving has neither been replaced nor retouched, it still bears all the venerable signs and incomparable beauty of age, and it is now almost in every detail the same as it was when Mass was sung at its altar by Lawrence the Leech, or some later chaplain. Dr. Cox, writing in 1875, describes this chapel as "quite a gem of early architectural art," and "one of the most complete and beautiful specimens of Norman work, on a small scale, that can be met with anywhere in this country or in Normandy." The chapel stands on the Worksop Manor Estate, in a little wood of larches and yews. Abraham de la Pryme, in his diary under the date February 12th, 1698, describes the chapel of "Stickley," near Shire Oak, as "Staitly well built, with arched roof excellently enambled and gilt; the lead that covered the same is all stolen away, so that the weather begins to pierce through its fine roof to its utter decay." The decay which he predicted afterwards took place, and the groined roof of the apse only was left and still remains intact.

The chancel and nave, each 26 feet in length, are divided by a handsome semicircular arch, with three beautiful mouldings still in excellent preservation. The capitals of the pillars on the north side bear carved representations of St. George and the Dragon, and a double-bodied lion. At the east end of the chancel is a semicircular apse, at the entrance of which is another but plainer Norman arch, with beautifully carved capitals. The apse has a vaulted roof of stone, supported on four ribs, ornamented with beak heads. In the centre, where the groins meet, is a medallion bearing an Agnus Dei or Lamb of God. The capitals of the four engaged shafts, supporting the groins, are also beautifully carved, one representing the temptation of Adam and Eve. The south doorway is a richly ornamented piece of work, consisting of three receding arches. On the shafts, supporting these, the sculptor has lavished his art. Around the outside of the building, immediately beneath the roof, is a row of grotesque heads, and girdling the apse is a string course of beautifully carved foliage. Several skeletons were discovered in the chapel yard in 1828, and during the late restoration three tombstones were unearthed; one, apparently, that of a priest, bears an incised representation of an altar, a chalice and paten, and the figure of a hand extending towards them. The chapel was re-dedicated to All Saints, and reconciled or released from all canonical impediment arising out of its past profanation, on the 2nd November, 1880, and service is now held in it every Sunday afternoon and evening.

A colliery has been for some time in operation at Steetley; limeworks have also been erected, and a little village has sprung up for the accommodation of the workpeople. A day school has been erected by the Colliery Co., and is attended by about 50 children.

The Birks, a house near Steetley, bears many evidences of having been at one time a gentleman's mansion. It formerly belonged to the Norfolk family, and is now the property of H. S. Hodding, Esq., and the residence of Mr. Robert Barron.

Pat, Money Order, Telegraph Office, and Savings Bank; Thomas Rotherham, postmaster. Letters, via Chesterfield, arrive at 8-0 am. and are despatched at 4-55 p.m.

Marked 1 are at Baxton Moor, 2 Belp, 3 Common, and the rest at Whitwell or where specified.

WESTERN PARLIAMENTARY DIVISION.

ALKMONTON.

This parish comprises the township of its own name, and also that of Hungry Bentley, embracing a total area of 2,038 acres. It is in the hundred of Appletree, county court district, poor law union, and rural district of Ashbourne, electoral and petty sessional division of Sudbury, and rural deanery of Longford. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, Alkmonton has been united with Hungry Bentley.

Alkmonton township contains 714 acres of land under assessment, the ratable value of which is £713. The population in 1891 was 60. William Gisborne, Esq., of Allestree Hall, is sole owner and lord of the manor. Achementune, according to Domesday Book, was one of the many manors given to Henry de Ferrers, and it was subsequently held under the Ferrers by the Bakepuzes, one of whom founded a hospital here for female lepers, dedicated to St. Leonard. In 1381, this and some other manors belonging to that family were purchased by Sir Walter Blount, whose widow, Dame Sancha de Ayala, refounded the hospital (which appears to have fallen into disuse), and endowed it for the maintenance of a chaplain. Her great-grandson, Walter Blount, Lord Mountjoy, by his will dated 1474, further endowed it with lands of the yearly value of ten pounds, that prayers might be said for the souls of himself, his family, and ancestors, and the ancient lords of the hospital. He also directed that the master of the hospital was to maintain seven poor men who had been in the service of his family, or who had been tenants of their estates in Derbyshire or Staffordshire. The beneficiaries were to be of the age of 55 at least, to receive 2s. 4d. a week, and each to have a cowgate in Barton park, a load of fuel yearly, and a hood and gown every third year. The pensioners were to repeat the Psalter of our Lady twice daily in the chapel of the hospital. Lord Mountjoy further directed by his will that a chapel should be built at Alkmonton, dedicated to St. Nicholas, and that the master of the hospital should say Mass therein on the feast of the patron saint, and at other times when he thought proper. The hospital was suppressed at the Reformation, and the site, and lands forming the endowment, were granted by Edward VI. to John Barlowe and Edward Streetbury for £121 3s. 8d. Thus, what had been left for the benefit of the poor was filched from them and given to unscrupulous courtiers. Subsequently the hospital estate and the manor of Alkmonton came into the possession of the Barnesleys, and were sold by Charles Barnesley, Esq., in 1674, to Thomas Browne, Esq., for £2,300. The Earl of Chesterfield purchased the estate from the Brownes in 1727, and his descendant sold it in 1781 to Thomas Evans, Esq., of Derby, from whom it has descended to the present owner. There are no remains of the hospital nor of the chapel of St. Nicholas.

The village of Alkmonton is small and scattered, and stands two miles S.W. from Longford, seven miles from Ashbourne, and six miles from Tutbury station, on the North Staffordshire railway. The church, dedicated to St. John, was built by William Evans, Esq., in 1843, as a chapel-of-ease to Longford, but shortly afterwards the district allotted to it was constituted a separate ecclesiastical parish. The font belonged to the ancient chapel of St. Nicholas, and was found beneath the sward in Cockshut Croft, during some building operations, in 1844. The living is a vicarage, worth £106 a year, with residence, in the gift of William Gisborne, Esq., and held, in conjunction with Yeaveley, by the Rev. William Buck Dearden, since 1887.

A school with teacher's house was erected in 1856, and W. Gisborne, Esq., subscribes £20 yearly towards its support. There are 19 names on the books.

The land is devoted to dairy farming, and considerable attention is paid to the breeding of cattle. At Liberty House farm are some very fine specimens of the shorthorn breed from the famous Red Rose family. Sharon Duke 33rd (61780), bred by Mr. Fox, at Elmhurst Hall, is at present with the herd.

HUNGRY BENTLEY, a township and scattered village five miles S. from Ashbourne, contains 1,074 acres of land; ratable value, £1,287; and the population in 1891 was 77. Samuel Clowes, Esq., is lord of the manor and owner of the whole township, except 33 acres 2 roods 24 perches, which belong to Mr. R. J. Robinson, of Boothay, Yeaveley. The manor belonged to the Blounts, and afterwards to the Brownes, who had a house and park here. It was purchased from the latter by Sir Edward Wilmot, and passed again by sale a few years ago to the present owner. There was formerly a family of some note named Bentley resident here; but their lands were confiscated by Queen Elizabeth, on account of their adhesion to the old religion. Bentley Hall, the residence of some of the former owners of the estate, has long been occupied as a farmhouse, but it still retains some traces of its former importance.

ALSOP-EN-LE-DALE.

This parish consists of the township of Eaton and Alsop, containing 1,515 acres, and 76 inhabitants. The ratable value is £1,601. Lord Hindlip, the Duke of Rutland, Thomas Edge, and Mrs. Dale, of Parwich, are the principal landowners. The township is in the hundred of Wirksworth, county council electoral division of Hartington, petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union, and deanery of Ashbourne. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Newton Grange has been added to Eaton and Alsop to form a united parish, which elects one rural district councillor and guardian.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Elleshope and Eiton (Alsop and Eaton) were berewicks, or hamlets, subject to the manor of Parwich, which was part of the Crown demesnes. Alsop was granted to William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, who, in the reign of King John, gave it to Gweno, son of Gamel de Alsop. This family held the manor for seventeen generations, when it was sold by Anthony Alsop, in 1691, to Sir Philip Gell. Subsequently there were many changes of ownership by sale, and about ten years ago it came by purchase into the possession of a descendant of the old family, Sir Henry Allsop, now Lord Hindlip, who has a shooting box here, which he uses as an occasional residence. The Manor House, the old home of the Alsops, is now a farmhouse in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Critchlow.

Alsop-in-the-Dale has attained some celebrity from its association with Thomas Becon, one of the early Reformers, who found refuge here for about a year during the persecution in the reign of Queen Mary. He was received into the house of John Alsop, lord of the manor, and great-grandfather of Anthony, the last owner. The village is small and secluded, and stands a little off the Ashbourne and Buxton road, six miles N. of the former and 14 miles S. of the latter. The church, dedicated to St. Michael, dates from Norman times, and was until recently a dependency of the mother church of Ashbourne. It is a small structure, consisting of chancel, nave, and west tower containing one bell. It was rebuilt in 1883. On the south wall is a monument to Anthony Beresford, of Alstonfield, in Staffordshire, son of Francis and Anne Beresford, of Castern, who died March 3rd, 1874, aged 102; and another to Francis Beresford. The Beresfords were formerly lords of the manor of Alsop-in-the-Dale, and landowners in the parish. Under the tower are memorials of the families of Hardy and Wild. The nave is seated with open benches to accommodate 70. The living is a vicarage, worth £32 per annum, in the gift of the Duke of Rutland and Lord Hindlip, and held by the Rev. E. H. May, M.A., who is also vicar of Parwick. The registers date from 1701. The rectorial tithes (£175) are leased to Geo. H. Errington, Esq., and the vicarial tithes have been redeemed.

Cold Eaton is a hamlet consisting of two farms, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. from Alsop. The manor was formerly held by the Wendesleys. In the early part of the 16th century three-parts of the estate belonged to the Vernons of Haddon, ancestors of the Duke of Rutland, the present owner, and the fourth part was long held by the Boothbys. The whole now belongs to the Duke of Rutland.

The township lies on the east bank of the river Dove, amidst the beautiful scenery of Dovedale. The surface is boldly undulated, the soil a rich loam on limestone, and is excellent grazing land.

ASHBOURNE.

This parish comprises the township and town of Ashbourne, and the townships of Newton Grange, and Offcote and Underwood in the hundred of Wirksworth, and Sturston and Yeldersley in the Appletree hundred. It gives a name to a division for the election of a county councillor, and is the head of a petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union, and rural deanery. The parish was formerly more extensive, and included the townships of Alsop-en-le-Dale and Eaton, Hulland, Hulland Ward, Hulland Ward Intakes, and Clifton and Compton.

The township of Ashbourne comprises only about $59\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and is wholly occupied by the town. The ratable value, according to the last assessment, is £6,432, and the population in 1891 was 3809. The Urban Council, late Local Board, are lords of the manor. There are a great many freeholders. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, the parish of Ashbourne is co-extensive with the urban sanitary district and elects four guardians.

The earliest mention of Ashbourne occurs in Domesday Book, wherein it is recorded that in Esseburne there are three carucates of ratable land, then waste, but paying 20 shillings, and there was a church and a priest. The manor belonged to the King, and it is probable that it had been a royal possession in Saxon times. King John granted it, in the first year of his reign, to William de Ferrers, whom he created Earl of Derby. In the following reign, Robert de Ferrers, the third earl, rose in rebellion against the royal authority, and lost his inheritance. This manor, with the honour of Tutbury, was given by the King to his son Edmund, surnamed Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster. Henry, a subsequent earl, was created Duke of Lancaster; and at his death his manors in Derbyshire and Lancashire were assigned to his second daughter and coheir, Blanche, wife of John of Gaunt, Earl of Richmond, and afterwards Duke of Lancaster. When Henry Bolingbroke, son of John of Gaunt, wrested the throne from the unfortunate Richard II., he annexed the Duchy of Lancaster to the Crown. There is much doubt as to the later ownership of the manor of Ashbourne.

Glover says it remained parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster till 1633, when it was sold by Charles I.

The ancient family of Cokayne was long connected with Ashbourne, and for many generations they resided and flourished at the old hall. They were seated here as early as the middle of the 12th century, and possessed estates in various parts of the county. They held the manor of Ashbourne, but it is not known either when or how it came into their possession. In a document preserved amongst the national archives in the Tower of London, dated A.D. 1327, containing the reversal of the attainder of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, William Cokeny (Cokayne), farmer (i.e., lessee), of the borough of Asshebourne, occurs as one of the signatories. They appear to have retained it till 1671, when Sir Aston Cokayne, greatly impoverished by his devotion to the royal cause, sold his "fair lordship of Ashbourne" to Sir William Boothby, Bart., of Broadlow Ash. In accordance with the will of Sir William Boothby, his descendant, who died in 1846, his Ashbourne estate was divided and sold. The manor was purchased by Mr. Craddock in 1853, and afterwards sold to the late Francis Wright, Esq., to whose memory a monumental drinking fountain has been erected in the Market place. The ground which carries the manorial rights was purchased from his trustees by the Local Board, who erected a cattle market thereon. The hall, together with 90 acres of land, was purchased by Captain F. Holland, R.N., in 1852. It is now the seat and property of Mrs. Frank, daughter of the late Sir John Bent, a Liverpool brewer. The mansion, which possesses no architectural excellencies, stands within its own pleasure grounds, on a gentle slope overlooking the Henmore rivulet, which winds through the park, forming a series of miniature lakes and waterfalls.

The town of Ashbourne, which dates from far-off Saxon times, is delightfully situated in the bottom of a fertile valley amidst beautiful pastoral and sylvan scenery, sheltered on the north by lofty hills, whilst southward stretches the picturesque vale through which the Dove meanders. It is 13 miles N.W. from Derby, 12 S.W. from Matlock, 20 S. from Buxton, and is in communication with the North Staffordshire Railway by a branch line converging at Rocester Junction. Ashbourne is a quiet country town, far removed from the din and bustle that arise from the presence of great manufacturing industries. It depends for its prosperity chiefly on its market, held on Saturday, and being surrounded by a good agricultural district it is numerously attended by farmers and others. The market is mentioned as early as A.D. 1296; but the date of its establishment is not known. A market for cattle, sheep, and horses is held every alternate Thursday, in the Cattle Market erected a few years ago; and Chartered Fairs on February 13th, May 21st, August 16th, October 20th, and November 29th. A Fair for horses for agricultural purposes is held on the day previous to the February, August, and October Fairs. Cheese Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in March, first Tuesday in September, and Tuesday before November 11th. Should any of the fairs fall on a Sunday it is held on the following day, except that on the 29th of November, which is held the day previous. The Feast is held on the first Sunday after August 16th. The Town Hall, situated in the Market place, was erected in 1861, by S. Bradley, J. Skevington, E. Bradley, J. W. Lester, J. Whitham, and J. Smith. The butter market is held here, and the Local Board offices are in the front. The streets are lighted with gas from works established in 1840, at a cost of £2,200, raised in £10 shares. The gas is at present retailed at 3s. 4d. per 1,000 cubic feet.

The town consists of one main street, half a mile in length, with smaller streets branching off at right angles. The houses are chiefly built of brick, but many quaint old dwellings of stone, with their mullioned windows or projecting gables, remain to give the place some appearance of antiquity. On an eminence at the eastern extremity is Ashbourne Hall, long the seat of the Cokaynes, and afterwards of the Boothbys. During the Stuart rebellion of 1745 Ashbourne was the scene of no small commotion. Prince Charles Edward and his brawny Scots passed through the town, proclaimed the "Pretender" king in the Market place, and proceeded to Derby. The following day they retreated to Ashbourne, and passed the night there, the Prince and his officers taking up their quarters in the hall. The rebel army is said to have committed many depredations and plundered several gentlemen's houses in the district. A century earlier, in the troublous reign of Charles I., there were several encounters between the Royalists and Roundheads in Ashbourne and neighbourhood; marks of the bullets fired against the Royalists may still be seen on one side of the church, and a cannon ball once embedded in the tower is preserved in the vestry.

There are several good inns in the town, where comfortable accommodation may be had. One, the "Green Man," has obtained some celebrity from a notice in Boswell's "Life of Johnson." There are also "The White Hart," "George and Dragon," "Coach and Horses," "Bowling Green," "Wellington Inn," "The Old Tiger Inn," and several others, which are named in the directory.

Of all our national sports not one has become more deeply rooted in the affections of the people than football, and crowds numbering thousands will turn out and willingly pay for admission to witness a contest between two first-class teams. But scientific football is the creation of recent years; the game as played by our sturdy ancestors bore little resemblance to what we now see played either under Rugby or Association rules. The contestants were not as now a mere handful on each side, but one parish against another, and rough hard play was the general order. In times past the game was as popular as pancakes on Shrove Tuesday in various parts of the country; but times have changed, and we with them; modern sentimentality, aided by the law, has almost strangled it out of existence.

Ashbourne is one of the very few places where the ancient game still survives in spite of several attempts to suppress it. The origin of the game is lost in the mist of ages; but it is not unreasonable to suppose that it was introduced by the Romans. It has been played in the town from time immemorial, till within recent years, on each succeeding Shrove Tuesday and Ash Wednesday. The ball was thrown up in the Market Place, and the goals were at Sturston Mill and Clifton Mill. The struggle between the contending parties was rough and boisterous. According to Glover, "broken shins, broken heads, torn coats, and lost hats are among the minor accidents of this fearful contest." In 1860, the authorities determined to suppress the game. Several of the players were summoned by the police, under a section of the Highways Act, and convicted by the magistrates. The players carried their case to the Court of Queen's Bench, and were again worsted.

The following humorous account of the demise of the game was written and distributed through the town:—

DEATH OF THE RIGHT HONOURABLE GAME FOOTBALL.

Copied from the Court Circular.

It becomes our painful duty to record the death of the Right Honourable Game Football, which melancholy event took place in the Court of Queen's Bench, on Wednesday, November 15th, 1860. The deceased Gentleman was, we are informed, a native of Ashbourne, Derbyshire, at which place he was born in the Year of Grace, 217, and was consequently in the 1643rd year of his age. For some months the patriotic Old Man had been suffering from injuries sustained in his native town, so far back as Shrove-tide in last year; he was at once removed (by appeal) to London, where he lingered in suspense till the law of death put its icy hand upon him, and claimed as another trophy to magisterial interference one who had long lived in the hearts of the people. His untimely end has cast a gloom over the place, where the amusement he afforded the inhabitants will not soon be forgotten.

We cannot allow a calamity like the one we have detailed to pass over without giving publicity to circumstances proving so fatal in their results. It appears that the Honourable Game Football has long celebrated his birth in the most rational and peaceful manner, the tradesmen closing their shops, and the entire population turning out to take part in his festivity. The old custom was carried on from generation to generation, until it so happened that "certain of the powers that be" determined that this harmless old custom should be done away with, and they accordingly issued a formal notice that they intended riding iron shod over the town on Shrove Tuesday and Ash Wednesday, and any person causing any annoyance or interfering with their authority would be dealt with according to their Law. As the eventful day approached, great was the anxiety manifested as to whether these Distributors of Justice and Friends of Liberty would carry out their threat. Not long, however, were Mr. Football and his friends kept in suspense; sixty persons were more or less injured through their reckless determination, and the Right Honourable Gentleman, whose name we adore, received those fatal wounds from which he never recovered. Professional aid was at once obtained, a celebrated Practitioner recommended immediate removal to another district, giving his opinion that if the instructions laid down were strictly adhered to the unfortunate victim would ultimately recover; but those who knew him best saw that his end was fast approaching. He died honoured and in peace.

The funeral was public, though without ostentation, and the expenses (£200) were subscribed by his surrounding friends.

We understand that the Honourable Gentleman is succeeded by an only Son, a young man of Herculean strength, who inherits the valour of his Father, and his coming of age will be celebrated by Playing at the Old Game next Shrovetide.

The following Epitaph will be found on the Hon. Mr. Football's Tombstone:—

May Liberty meet with success,
May Prudence protect her from evil;
But may tyrants and tyranny tina* in the mist,
And wander their way to the Devil.

Notwithstanding the decision of the Queen's Bench, in 1862, the ball was again thrown up in the Market Place, but on a formal promise being given that they would for the future avoid playing football in the streets of the town, they were let off with the payment of costs.

The game still lives, and is played after the old fashion on Shrove Tuesday and Ash Wednesday, but the ball is thrown up in the Paddock and every endeavour is made to keep clear of the town.

The church is a handsome cruciform structure comprising chancel, double nave, north and south transepts, and a central tower surmounted by a lofty spire. Nothing remains of the church that stood here in Norman times; on its site the present one was erected in the 13th century, as appears from an inscription on a brass plate in the sacristy or chapel of St. Oswald. The inscription is in Latin, and translated reads:—"In the year from the incarnation of our Lord, 1241, in the eighth of the kalends of May, this church was dedicated, and this altar consecrated in honour of St. Oswald, king and martyr, by the venerable father, Hugh de Patshul, Lord Bishop of Coventry." At this time the Early English architecture was in its perfection, but subsequent restorations introduced the more florid styles of the later Gothic, which may be seen in the Decorated and Perpendicular windows that have taken the place of the Early English lancet ones in various parts of the edifice. The interior is noble in its proportions, but the effect is somewhat marred by the flat roof which superseded the original high pitch one in the 15th or 16th century. The total length of the church is 180 feet, and width across the transepts 85 feet. The chancel is spacious, measuring 65 feet by 25 feet. It was restored in 1877, under the direction of Sir Gilbert Scott, the whole expense being defrayed by G. H. Errington, Esq., the lessee of the great tithes. During the progress of the work various fragments of Norman moulding were found that had belonged to the original church; a portion of a Saxon cross was also discovered; and buried under the floor, at the east end, was found a stone box or reliquary which had once contained some relic of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. The east window is a magnificent one of seven lights, in the Perpendicular style, but the original lancet windows are still in the north and south walls. The three stone sedilia and piscina remain in the south wall, and on the opposite side is a large canopied arch resembling those usually erected for the tomb of the founder or rebuilder of the church. It is supposed to be a "Holy Sepulchre," used in the solemn service of Good Friday. A beautiful carved screen, with double gates of brass in the centre, has been placed at the entrance of the chancel in memory of the late Canon Errington. This screen, with two others recently erected, and the oak benches in the transepts, were the work of Mr. J. C. Pegg, of Ashbourne.

The south aisle is separated from the nave by lofty pointed arches, springing from clustered columns, and appears to have been added in the Decorated period.

*Tine—kindle.

The tower and spire are also supposed to have been built at this time. The tower is surmounted by a beautiful parapet, with trefoil openings, and is ascended by a turret staircase, which terminates in a crocketed pinnacle at the south-eastern angle. From within the parapet rises an octagonal spire, 212 feet in height from the ground, with ribbed angles, enriched with ball flower ornament, and pierced by twenty windows in five tiers. Its extreme lightness and elegance add beauty and grace to the cathedral-like church above which it towers, and justly entitle it to the proud distinction of "Pride of the Peak." It is a conspicuous object for miles around, but its exposed situation has often made it the prey of storm and tempest, and on these occasions it has suffered very considerably. It suffered still more cruelly from injudicious meddling with its foundations when repairs were done to the church in 1840. A timely restoration was commenced in 1891, and completed in 1894, at a cost of £4,942. The sum of £2,795 was received from voluntary contributions, and £1,000 was realized by a grand bazaar held August 1st, 2nd, and 3rd, 1894, leaving a deficiency of £1,147. The bells, eight in number, were removed to a temporary wooden belfry, in which they still remain, when this notice was written (August 8th, 1894). It was when listening to the sweet sound of this peal that Moore, the celebrated Irish poet, wrote those beautiful lines "Those Evening bells!" In the last verse the poet mournfully sings:—

"And so 'twill be when I am gone;
That tuneful peal will still ring on,
While other bards shall walk these dells,
And sing your praise, sweet evening bells!"

There is also a Sanctus bell of pre-Reformation date.

The gables of the north transept were rebuilt, and the Cokayne chapel restored in 1880, and the following year a thorough restoration of the nave, south aisle, and transepts, was commenced, which included the rebuilding of the west front.

The transepts are double ones, each being divided by piers and arches. A portion of the north transept is partitioned off by a screen, and was the mortuary chapel of the later lords of the manor. Here the Cokaynes, sire and son, for several generations, were buried; and are commemorated by several monuments. The oldest is an altar tomb, richly ornamented with quatrefoils and shields of arms. On the top are two recumbent effigies, in alabaster, believed to represent John Cokayne, who was for sometime knight of the shire, and died in 1375; and Edmund, his son, who was slain at the battle of Shrewsbury, in 1404. Another monument, wholly of alabaster, bears the effigies of a knight and his lady. The tomb is richly decorated with carving and tracery, and the sculpture of the figures has been well executed. There is no inscription, and opinions differ as to which of the Cokaynes is here commemorated. A raised altar tomb, less elaborately carved than the foregoing, bears on its upper surface the incised effigies of a knight and lady, and the following inscription:—

"Here lyeth Sir Thomas Cockaine
Made knight at Turney and Turwyne;
Who builded here fayre houses twayne,
With many profetts that remayne;
And three fayre parks impaled he,
For his successors here to be;
And did his house and name restore,
Which others had decay'd before;
And was a knight so worshipfull,
So vertuous, wyse and pitifull,
His dedes deserve that his good name
Lyve here in everlasting fame.
Who had issue III. sonnes and III. daughters."

Sir Thomas was knighted by Henry VIII., and was one of the attendants on that monarch at the gorgeous display of chivalry near the Castle of Guisnes, in France, styled the "Field of the Cloth of Gold." He was the author of a book now extremely rare, "A Treatise on Hunting." There are other two beautiful monuments of the same family that have been recently restored.

There are also several monuments of the Boothbys, later owners of the manor. The most beautiful of these, and the gem of sepulchral sculpture within the church, is the monument of Penelope Boothby, aged six years, only child of Sir Brooke Boothby, Bart., who gave forth to the world the anguish of his soul in a volume of poems entitled, "Sorrows sacred to Penelope." The monument is an exquisite piece of sculpture in statuary marble, by T. Banks, R.A. The child is represented reclining in sleep upon a mattress, the arms drawn up and resting on the pillow, and the feet carelessly folded over each other. Her only drapery is a frock, stretching to her ankles, and lying in easy graceful folds. The features are calm, but expressive of suffering mildness, and cannot be gazed upon without producing sorrowing emotions within the heart. The inscriptions are in English, Latin, French, and Italian. Those in English are:—"I was not in safety, neither had I rest, and the trouble came." "To Penelope, only child of Sir Brooke Boothby and Dame Susannah Boothby, born April 11th, 1785; died March 13th, 1791. She was in form and intellect most exquisite. The unfortunate parents ventured their all on this frail bark, and the wreck was total."

This beautiful work of art is said to have furnished Chantrey with the idea for his celebrated group, the "Sleeping Children," in Lichfield Cathedral.

Near this monument is a tablet in memory of Dean Langton, of Clogher, who was killed by falling with his horse over a precipice in Dove Dale, July 28th, 1761. The large stained-glass window is a beautiful piece of work, by Hardman & Co., of Birmingham, given in 1877 by the Misses E. & F. G. Hartshorne, in memory of their parents.

The south transept was the burial place of the Bradburne family, but at the restoration of the church, in 1840, their monuments received some rather rough treatment, and have been removed into the north transept. The Bradburnes were seated at Hough or Hulland. John Bradburne and Anne, his wife, founded a chantry in this church in 1483, and endowed it with lands of the value of £5 4s. 10d. yearly, to maintain "Godd's Service and praye for the founders' souls." Out of this income the priest had to distribute on a certain day 3s. 4d. amongst the poor, that they might pray for the souls of the founders. Making allowance for the greater value of money in those days the sum to be distributed yearly was not inconsiderable. This chantry, which was dedicated to St. Oswald, was probably in the south transept, where a piscina and an aumbrie still remain. Spanning the first arch in this transept is a beautiful screen erected in 1891, to commemorate William Forbes MacBean, Lieutenant-General, formerly Colonel of the 13th Light Infantry; and the beautiful large stained window was presented in 1874 as a memorial of the late Canon Errington.

There was another chantry founded by Henry de Kniveton, rector of Norbury, in the reign of Richard II., at the altar of St. Mary in this church, and endowed with land valued in 1536 at £4 per annum. This chantry was in the Lady Chapel, which was probably in the north transept.

Some ancient heraldic glass remains in the east window, representing the coats of arms of the principal families that held lands within the honour of Tutbury, and within the church are mural tablets to numerous local families. The registers date from 1538.

The churchyard has been several times enlarged, and now covers a considerable area. Along the north side is a fine avenue of lime trees, stretching about a quarter of a mile, which is a favourite resort of the townspeople and visitors.

The living is a vicarage, with the rectory of Mapleton attached, net value £150 with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. F. Jourdain, M.A. (Pemb. Coll., Oxon.), who has for curates the Rev. Spencer W. Day, B.A. (Jesus Coll., Camb.), and the Rev. A. B. Hutton, L. Th. (University Coll., Durham).

St. John's Chapel is a massive stone building, consisting of a semi-circular chancel, spacious nave, with two aisles, and west tower containing a clock and one bell. It was erected by the late Francis Wright, Esq., of Osmaston Manor, at a cost of upwards of £8,000, and was opened in 1871 as the Ashbourne Free Church of England. In 1883 it was licensed by the Bishop of Lichfield. The founder endowed it with £2,000 in the 5 per cent. Great Eastern Railway stock, now converted into £2,360 4 per cent. stock. Miss Annie Wright, the founder's sister, added £300 to the endowment in 1891, and the late Edwin Bradley, Esq., left £100 for the maintenance of the fabric, and a like sum to the Sunday school. The organ was the gift of the latter gentleman and T. O. Farmer. A marble tablet on the wall commemorates the good work of the founder, who died in 1873. The nave and aisles are seated with open benches to seat 546. The living, worth £200 a year with residence, is in the gift of trustees, subject to the approval of the Vicar of Ashbourne, and held by the Rev. Hy. Jones (Trin. Coll., Dublin).

The Catholics of Ashbourne were without any recognised place of worship from the Reformation till 1844. The present church, rebuilt in 1887, is a neat structure of brick in the Gothic style, occupying an elevated situation at Belle Vue. The ground on which the church and adjoining presbytery are built was given by John, Earl of Shrewsbury, and in 1877 "a plot of land in Ashbourne was freely granted to the Right Rev. Edward Gilpin Bagshaw, Bishop of Nottingham," and other trustees, by John Joseph Shuttleworth, of Bath, Esq., and Helen Catherine, his wife, for the benefit of the Catholic religion in Ashbourne. The church will seat 120. The present rector is the Rev. L. T. Middleton.

Zion Chapel (Congregational) was founded by Mr. John Cooper in 1801, and in 1868 it was remodelled, enlarged, and an organ chamber added, at a cost of £2,000. It is a handsome building of brick and stone, capable of seating 400. Adjoining are six almshouses, erected by Mr. Cooper, who left £4,350 to the society, out of the dividends thereof to pay ten guineas yearly to each inmate. The Rev. Benj. Hackett is the minister, and lives in the Manse adjoining the chapel.

The Primitive Methodist Chapel dates from 1846, and will seat 120. It has long been inadequate to meet the requirements of the increasing congregation and classes, and a new chapel is now in course of erection on the Paddock, in Station Street, at a cost of £1,465. The Rev. John Redhead is the minister.

The Wesleyan Chapel, situated in Church Street, is a handsome building of red brick with stone dressings, erected in 1880. The chapel forms the upper storey of the building, and will seat about 500. On the basement floor is a day school. The architecture is a pleasing mixture of the Grecian and Italian styles. The total cost including the purchase of the site, was £6,400, which was raised by subscription. The old chapel in Compton is now disused.

There is, in addition to the above, a Gospel Mission Chapel in South Street, built in 1889, at a cost of £340. Night schools are held here on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The earliest provision made for educational purposes was the Grammar School founded and endowed by several local gentlemen and others in 1585, and called Queen Elizabeth's Free Grammar School. The school was re-constituted in 1879, and to commemorate the ter-centenary the premises were put in thorough repair, the stonework and carving of the front was renewed, and the large school-room was lined with carved oak panelling. Adjoining is the master's house, in which from 20 to 30 boarders can be accommodated. Five junior scholarships, tenable for two years, are annually awarded by the Derbyshire County Council. This school is also a District Technical School under the scheme of the Derbyshire County Council. The income from the endowments amounts to about £300 per annum. The charter of foundation recites that three discreet, good and honest men shall be appointed Governors, and that there shall be 12 discreet and honest men Assistants to the Governors. The present Governors are William Richard Holland, Andrew George Corbet, and the Rev. F. Jourdain, M.A.; and Assistants, Philip Richard Littleton, John H. Maclean, William Dawson Smith, Joseph Henry Cooke, Neville Beard, Thomas Mellor, E. S. Bradley, John Lister, John Richard Rigby, John Howell, Thomas Orme Farmer, J.P., and George Boam.

So far there has been no lack of educational facilities provided by voluntary efforts, and the town escapes the infliction of a school board.

The National Schools provide accommodation for 630 children in three departments. The boys' school, a substantial stone structure built about 70 years ago for boys and girls, is now appropriated to the former only. There is an average attendance of 165 boys, who pay 1d. each weekly. A separate building was erected for the girls in 1876, at a cost of £3,000. It is a commodious structure, well lighted and ventilated, and attended by 141 on an average. The payments are the same as above. A new infants' school was erected in 1893, at a cost of about £2,000, to accommodate 196 children. The old infant school in Tiger Yard is now used by the Young Men's Association.

The Wesleyan School, two departments, is in the lower storey of the chapel, and will accommodate 250.

The Railway Station, situated on the outskirts of the town, was opened for traffic in 1852. It is at present the terminus of the branch from Rochester, and the point of debarkation for the beautiful valley of Dovedale. The distance by rail from Derby is 30 miles. There are eleven trains, goods and passenger, each way daily; and a large quantity of milk is conveyed to London and other large towns.

In Clifton Lane, near the station, is the Rosarium, leased by Messrs. Thompson and Uff, nurserymen and seedsmen. Besides the immense collection of rose trees that formed its original speciality, chrysanthemums of the choicest kinds, and other flowers, are extensively grown.

The Union Workhouse is a substantial building, beautifully situated on the side of a hill called Church Banks. It was erected in 1855 at a cost of about £8,000, for the accommodation of 160. The union comprises 60 parishes and townships, 45 of which are in Derbyshire and 15 in Staffordshire, as follows:—In Derbyshire: Alkmonton, Ashbourne, Atlow, Ballidon, Bentley Fenny, Bentley Hungry, Biggin, Bonsall, Bradbourne, Bradley, Brailsford, Brassington, Callow, Carsington, Clifton and Compton, Eaton and Alsop, Edlaston and Wyaston, Hartington Town Quarter, Hartington Nether Quarter, Hognaston, Hollington, Hopton, Hulland, Hulland Ward, Hulland Ward Intakes, Ible, Kirk Ireton, Kniveton, Lea Hall, Longford, Mappleton, Mercaston, Middleton-by-Wirksworth, Newton Grange, Offcote and Underwood, Osmaston, Parwich, Rodsley, Shirley, Snelston, Sturston, Thorpe, Tissington, Yeaveley, Yeldersley. In Staffordshire: Alstonefield, Blore-with-Swinscoe, Calton, Calwich, Ellastone, Ilam, Mayfield, Okeover, Prestwood, Ramshorn, Stanton, Waterfall, Woodhouses, Wetton, Wootton.

The town has its Conservative Club, with a membership of 250; and a Ladies' Club, which meets in the same building. It has also its weekly newspaper, the "Ashbourne News," but its politics are colourless.

CHARITIES.

Edward Shaw and Joan Denton, by deed dated 1st March, 1625, granted to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School an annual rent of £5 out of the tenements situate at Sturston, which is distributed as follows:—Vicar of Ashbourne, £1 10s.; Grammar School, 10s.; the poor of Ashbourne, on St. Thomas's Day, £3.

Field Rents.—By a decree of the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, made 10th Feb., 1625, in consequence of the following three fields, viz., Town Head Field, Low Field, and Wooddies Field, being part of the aforesaid Duchy of Lancaster, and common land for the parish of Ashbourne, had been enclosed, it was decreed that the sum of 1s. 6d. per acre should be paid annually to the governors and assistants of the Ashbourne Free Grammar School. Two shillings per acre is now charged, in consequence of a second decree, made 8th May, 1630. £12 4s. 3d. is now collected, and as some of the land has been redeemed, the proceeds, £60 16s. 10d., is invested in the names of the official trustees, and the income, together with the £12 4s. 3d., is distributed annually to the poor of the township of Ashbourne.

Roger Owfield, under his will, dated 28th January, 1630, left £100 towards the erection of an almshouse. In 1640, his widow, Tomasin Owfield, erected eight almshouses out of her estate, and at her further charges. Samuel Owfield, on 2nd November, 1640, conveyed the ground to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School; the annual income, £4, is applied to this charity. Under an indenture dated 7th June, 1652, between John Owfield, of London, and Wm. Owfield, of Ashbourne, on the one part, and the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School on the other part, conveyed a meadow situate at Mapleton to the aforesaid governors and assistants. This has been sold, and the proceeds, £448 16s. 3d., invested in the names of the official trustees.

Richard Peters, who was buried in 1708, by his will gave out of his lands situate at Uttoxeter the yearly sum of £4, to be distributed to the eight poor people of the old almshouses every Midsummer Day. This was redeemed in 1873, and the proceeds, £133 12s. 6d., invested in the names of the official trustees.

Lecturership.—In 1651, £40 per annum was left by rent-charge on property at Walton, near Chesterfield; also accumulated income in consols, producing £8 0s. 8d. per annum.

Paul Taylor.—By his will, dated 24th December, 1640, and by deed dated 28th March, 1659, Robert Webster, in consideration of £94 received from the above Paul Taylor, granted to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School a yearly rent of £4 16s., as an annual charge on his land, situate at Offcote, called Little Close, £2 12s. yearly to be distributed every Sunday in bread in the church, £1 4s. to the eight almshouse people on Good Friday, and £1 towards the maintenance of a lecturer.

Edward Pegg the Elder, by his will dated 31st March, 1666, gave £5 4s. to provide six loaves of bread every week to the poor of Ashbourne, and a like number to the poor of Osmaston. He also gave a yearly rent of £5 8s. to be paid out of land and house situate at Sturston, to be equally divided between the poor of Ashbourne and Osmaston.

George Taylor, by his will dated 2nd May, 1668, gave the governors and assistants of the Ashbourne Grammar School £100, to be lent on sufficient security to 10 young tradesmen, from time to time, at £5 per annum, and of the £5 thus provided he gave £2 12s. yearly to be dealt with every Sunday in bread to 12 poor of Ashbourne in the church, 8s. to the eight alms people on St. Thomas's Day, 20s. to the overseers of Ashbourne, to be distributed by them to 40 poor householders as 6d. a-piece, and 20s. to the vicar for a sermon on certain days as he should think fit. The £100 appears to have been lent on the security of Sole Meadow, situate in Offcote, and the £5 is collected annually and distributed as aforesaid.

Long Dales Rent.—George Taylor, by his will dated 1668, gave his field called the Long Dales, containing about two acres, to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School, the annual rent (£5) being paid for the increase of the master's salary. The remaining portion the parish clerk was allowed to occupy free. The whole of the land is now rented by Mr. B. Buxton, at a yearly rent of £10, the tenant having the right to the use of the land from Ladyday to 1st August; the rest of the year it is thrown open to the public as a general pasture. £5 is paid to the Grammar School fund, and £5 to the churchwardens of Ashbourne for repairs of church.

Jane James, by her will dated 13th July, 1669, gave to Thomas James, her nephew, two fields at Roston, on condition that he and his heirs should pay to eight poor people inhabiting Owfield's Almshouses 5s. each on St. Thomas's Day.

Christopher Pegg, of London, by his will dated 12th June, 1669, left his farm in Ashover and Wingerworth to German Pole, Gervas Bennett, and John Buxton, on the condition that they conveyed the same to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School. In 1777, all the lands given by the above were exchanged for land situate at Brailsford, called Brailsford Park, having an average of 157a. Or. 19p. Three-fifths of the income of the above land goes towards the payment of 7s. weekly to the occupants of the six almshouses situate in Church Street, and the remaining two-fifths to the Grammar School. By the will of German Pole, dated 6th October, 1682, the estate called Ravensdale Bank, containing 29a. Or. 30p., was transferred to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School, the income of which is devoted towards the weekly payment as above. The sum of £18 18s. 2d. is distributed amongst the poor of Ashbourne on St. Thomas's Day. The sum of £2 12s. annually is distributed in bread to the poor of Ashbourne. The annual rent of garden, £2 2s., is applied to this charity.

Nicholas Spalden, by his will dated 16th April, 1710, gave to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School all his lands at Parwich, the annual income of which was to be distributed amongst the inhabitants of Owfield's Almshouses, the vicar of Ashbourne £8, and £8 to lecturer, bellringer £1. He also gave to the above governors and assistants all his messuages, lands, &c., in the city of Dublin, in trust, to build 10 almshouses, and to pay each of the alms-people 2s. 6d. per week and £1 yearly for clothing. St. Patrick's Hospital is erected on the above land, the governors of which pay an annual rent charge of £210. Out of the residue of his personal estate four clergymen's widows' almshouses were erected in Church Street; £10 is paid to each annually, and the residue was invested in consols; the sum of £17 13s. being paid to the Grammar School and £17 13s. to the National School, in accordance with the scheme of the Charity Commissioners.

In 1637 Nicholas Hunt left the sum of £5 yearly, chargeable on his estate at Castern, to be distributed weekly in bread. According to the Charity Commissioners' report of 1828, the sum of £4 was then received, which is still collected.

In 1678 John Hanson left £5 yearly, chargeable on his lands at Ashbourne, to be distributed in bread. This was redeemed in 1874, and the proceeds invested in the names of the official trustees.

Thomas Chatterton, in 1811, left the sum of £80. This was supplemented by a public subscription, raising the amount to £500, and invested in consols, the income of which is distributed amongst the occupants of Spalden's Almshouses.

Paul Kirkland, in 1714, left for the same township, in the parish of Ashbourne, total value £27 12s. 6d., proceeds of land at Wyaston.

Catharine Port, in 1722, gave the annual sum of £11 5s., secured on the Ilam estates. The balance, after distribution to certain parishes, £5 is distributed by the vicar in the parish of Ashbourne.

Elizabeth Burton, in 1730, left £2 5s. a year, to be distributed as follows, viz. :—10s. to the vicar for sermon on 15th July; 5s. to the ringers, for a peal on that day; 20s. to the poor, to be distributed by the overseers on St. Swithin's day; 10s. to be laid out in Bibles for the children of the Free School. Since the closure of the Free School the money has been paid to the Grammar School for prizes.

William Hawford, according to Parliamentary returns of 1786, left £27 9s. 7d., accumulated from original endowment of £10, total amount value 15s., for the poor of Yeldersley, in parish of Ashbourne.

Isaac Hawkins, of Burton-on-Trent, by his will, dated 1804, left £400 in the 3 per cent. consols, the dividends of which are distributed to the four clergy widows, endowed by Nicholas Spalden, in equal shares.

Rev. Francis Gisborne, in 1817, gave a capital sum, the annual value of which, £6 12s. 11d., to be distributed by the vicar in flannel, &c., in the parish of Ashbourne.

Lady Boothby, in 1817, left £374 3s. 4d. in the 3 per cent. consols, which now brings in £10 17s. 4d., this sum to be distributed by the vicar and churchwardens.

Jesse Watts Russell, of Ilam, in 1841, gave the sum of £1,178 6s. 8d., which was laid out in the purchase of £1,333 6s. 8d. stock in the 3 per cent. consols, and the dividends thereof, amounting to £40 per annum, are paid to four inhabitants of Spalden's Clergy Widows Almshouses.

Edward Corden, of Clifton, in 1843, of his free will and in performance of his brother Uriah Corden's last will, transferred £4,720 in 3 per cent. consols into the names of the governors and assistants of the Ashbourne Free Grammar School upon trust, £48 thereof to be paid annually to the occupants of the four clergy widows' almshouses, £52 yearly to be paid to the 10 occupants of Spalden's Almshouses, and £41 12s. to the inmates of Owfield's Almshouses, in weekly sums of 2s. each. The same Edward Corden, in 1844, invested £500 in the 3 per cent. consols in the names of the said governors and assistants, to pay the dividends for the benefit of the Ashbourne National and Church Sunday Schools. He also left by his will £50 a year to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, on account of which sum the society is to supply Bibles and Prayer Books to that amount to the poor of Ashbourne, Clifton, Compton, Sturston and Offcote, to be distributed by the vicar. He also left by will £20 a year to the poor of Clifton and Compton to be distributed by the overseers in coals, &c.

David Bradley, of London, and Septimus Bradley, of Ashbourne, merchants, in 1844 invested £300 in 3 per cent. consols in the names of the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School, the dividends to be laid out in coals, potatoes, bread, flour, meat, provisions and clothing, or any of them, to be distributed in March every year to such poor of the town of Ashbourne, Compton, Sturston, and Clifton Lanes adjoining as the said governors shall think fit, in sums varying from 1s. 6d. to 4s.

Edwin Bradley, of Ashbourne, by will dated 9th February, 1884, left the sum of £100 to be invested in the 3 per cent. consols in the names of the governors and assistants, to be distributed in the above manner; and to the vicar and churchwardens, for the benefit of Sunday Schools, £100 in consols.

Mrs. M. A. Gresham, in 1886, left £200 to vicar and churchwardens for the benefit of Ashbourne Church at their discretion.

Mrs. Harriet Blount, by an indenture made 21st September, 1887, gave to the governors and assistants of the Free Grammar School the sum of £100, the income of which to be given to the committee of the Ashbourne Orphan Association. Should, however, the work of the above association be discontinued, the interest to be paid over to the treasurer of the Church Extension Society, Kilburn Park Road, county of Middlesex.

NEWTON GRANGE is a township containing 1,406 acres of land, lying on the bank of the river Dove. It is distant about five miles from the mother parish, and is entirely separated therefrom by the intervening parishes of Thorpe and Tissington. About 600 acres were taken from the former parish and added to Newton Grange in 1886. There is no village, the township consisting entirely of scattered farms. The ratable value is £1,761, and the population 47. This township is now united with Eaton and Alsop for the election of a district councillor and guardian. Newton Grange was given by Robert, Earl de Ferrars, one of its early owners, to the Abbey of Combermere, in Cheshire. At the Reformation this manor and other possessions of the abbey were granted by Henry VIII. to George Cotton, Esq. Subsequently Newton Grange was purchased by the Beresfords, who resided here, and in whose possession it remained till the death of Richard Beresford, when it was sold in severalties, Mr. Evans, of Derby, being the principal purchaser. Lord Hindlip and Lord Denman are the chief owners. The former purchased the manor and estate about ten years ago, and has converted one of the farmhouses into a commodious hotel, called New Inns. It is within a short distance of Dovedale, and visitors at the hotel have the privilege of fishing in the river Dove. Hanson Grange was occupied by the Gould family for several generations. On a corner stone of the house is inscribed N.G., 1776.

OFFCOTE AND UNDERWOOD form a joint township adjoining Ashbourne on the north, and stretching lengthwise about four miles. Its area is 1,736½ acres, ratable value £5,306, and population 248. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, that portion of the township lying within Ashbourne Urban Sanitary District has been added to Ashbourne, and the remaining portion returns one district councillor and guardian. The principal landowners are Mrs. Frank (Ashbourne Hall), Rev. H. Buckston (Hope), T. O. Farmer, Esq., J.P., Sir H. Blackiston, Adam Smedley, Miss Hartshorne, Miss Child, G. H. Errington, Esq., Mrs. Williamson, Exors. of W. R. Smith, Charles Brandon, Exors. of John Rasou, J. Harrison, Esq., Rev. E. H. May, and Charles Gregory.

Ashbourne Green and Sandybrook are hamlets in this township. Ashbourne Green Hall was formerly the seat of the Newtons, afterwards of the Haynes, and now belongs to Mrs. Williamson, in whom the manorial rights are vested. The hall is at present the residence of Mrs. Swetenham. Sandybrook Hall is a modern mansion, surrounded by gardens and pleasure grounds, the property of Sir H. Blackiston, Bart., and residence of Mr. Turnbull.

STURSTON is a township and scattered village situated in the valley of the river Henmore, one mile E. from Ashbourne. Its total area is 937 acres, of which 129 are within the Ashbourne Urban Council district. The ratable value is £3,193, and the population in 1891 was 182. Mrs. W. R. Smith (who is lady of the manor), Clifton House; Miss Hartshorne, T. O. Farmer, Esq., J.P., Frank Wright, Esq., and Lady Grant Duff, are the principal owners.

Sturston, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by one Roger. It was afterwards in the possession of the Grendons, and passed thence by inheritance to the Kniveton. In 1655 Sir Andrew Kniveton sold the manor to Francis Meynell, of London, from whom it descended to Mrs. Stoddart, and it now belongs to Mrs. W. R. Smith. Sturston Hall, an ancient building, was for nearly three centuries occupied by the family of Tomlinson. The Grove, picturesquely seated on a gentle acclivity, 1¼ miles N.E. of Ashbourne, was formerly a seat of the Meynells. It is now the property of Mrs. W. R. Smith, and the residence of Major A. G. Corbet.

The ancient custom of well-dressing was revived in the village in 1894.

Sturston returns one district councillor.

YELDERSLEY is a long, narrow township, extending from two to four miles S.E. from Ashbourne. Its estimated extent is 1,503 acres, ratable value £1,980, and population 188. The land belongs to several owners, of whom the principal are Godfrey Meynell, Esq., Sir P. Walker, Bart. (Osmaston Manor), Lord Scarsdale (Kedleston Hall), Mrs. Henry and Mrs. Philips, Mrs. Sykes, George Moore Dixon, Esq. (Bradley Hall), and Miss Judith Wright (Yeldersley Hall).

The manor of Yeldersley (Geldeslei in Domesday Book) was held under Henry de Ferrers by Cole, whose son Robert conveyed it to Sewal de Monjoy. It remained in this family for several generations, and then passed to the Inlands, who held it in the reign of Henry VII. The next owners of whom there is any record were the Montgomerys, from whom it passed to the Vernons, and then to the Meynells. The Shirleys appear to have held this manor for a while under its early lords. The families of Pegge, Whitehall, and Lee (of Lady Hole), had also considerable estates here.

For purposes of the Parish and District Councils Act, Yeldersley has been united with Osmaston.

ASHFORD-WITH-SHELDON.

Ashford-with-Sheldon, formerly two chapelries in the parish of Bakewell were united in 1872 into one benefice for all ecclesiastical purposes. It is situated in the hundred of High Peak, the poor law union, county court district, parliamentary division, rural district and deanery of Bakewell. In compliance with the Local Government Act, six parish councillors have been assigned to Ashford and it elects one district councillor.

Ashford embraces the township of that name, containing 2,540 acres lying on the west side of Bakewell, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Devonshire, and is lord of the manor; James Green, Esq., Ashford; Samuel Needham, Chapel-le-Grange; Wm. Pullinger, Josiah Wallwin, Esq., Ashford; Frederick Craven, Esq., Ashford; and Wm. Redfern, Esq. The total ratable value is £5,358, and population in 1891 was 661.

The scenery of the district is varied and beautiful—a rare combination of hill and dale and wood and water. Two ridges of lofty hills enclose between them a narrow valley, through which flows the Wye, margined by lovely green meadows. These hills abound with marble of various tints and hues, which will compare favourably in lustre and colouring with the finest productions of foreign countries. The varieties found here include the entrochal or mottled grey, occasionally containing corals and other fossil forms of primeval life; corrolloid; bird-eye, so named from its colour and appearance, containing numerous enerinital fossils; rosewood, resembling that wood in colour, extremely hard, and of close texture; and black marble. The latter is of a deep black colour and fine texture, and admits of a most brilliant polish. There are nine beds of this black marble, which have been quarried a very considerable distance underground. These beds vary from three to nine inches in thickness, but large slabs free from veins of calcareous spar are rare. This marble surpasses in fineness of texture and purity of colour that obtained in any other part of the world, the far-famed nero antico included. It is greatly valued for inlaying, and has been exported to the Continent. It is largely used for vases, pedestals, chimneypieces, monuments, columns, tables, &c. The first marble works in the kingdom were established here in 1748, by Mr. Henry Watson, who invented some of the machinery by which the stone was sawn and polished. The works are now the property of Mr. Joseph Twigg, and are fitted with the most improved machinery. He also employs a large staff of skilled workmen, and is able to execute with taste and finish, surpassed by none, any species of marble work, from the flat slab of a wash-hand stand to the most elaborate reredos or pulpit. Marble mosaic pavements of the most artistic and lovely designs for entrance halls and floors are manufactured here.

The manor of Ashford was part of the ancient demesnes of the Crown, till King John granted it to a Welshman named Wenunwyn, lord of Powisland. Griffin, his son, had a grant of free warren in his manor of Ashford. The manor reverted to the Crown, and Edward II. bestowed it on his brother Edmund, Earl of Kent. Joan, the daughter and heiress of Edmund, married for her second husband Sir Thomas Holland, and on the death of Edmund Holland, Earl of Kent, in 1408, it descended to his sister and co-heiress, Elizabeth, wife of John, Lord Neville. Another Neville sold it about 1550 to Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the present owner.

The village, often distinguished as Ashford-in-the-Water, is situated on the left bank of the Wye, and surrounded by lofty hills, $1\frac{3}{4}$ miles N.W. from Bakewell, and one mile from Longston station on the Midland railway. It is a quiet, old-fashioned place; but the trim kept gardens that front the clean stone cottages impart to it an aspect of rural beauty and happiness. There are two or three repositories for the sale of marble and spar ornaments, and a good inn, the Devonshire Arms. In the bar parlour here is the portrait of Molly Bray, the Ashford dwarf, who stood only three feet high, indulged in the narcotic weed, and died an octogenarian. A horticultural society was established in the village in 1850, and the show is held yearly in August.

The church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is an ancient structure of stone in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and west tower containing three bells. It was very extensively restored in 1870. Above the south door may be seen a semicircular slab, on which is a rudely carved representation of a wild boar and a wolf crouching beneath a tree. This was previously built into the wall near the porch, and is supposed to have been the tympanum of the Norman chapel erected here in the early part of the 12th century. The aisle is separated from the nave by three pointed arches, and from the beams are suspended five funeral garlands—memorials of a beautiful but now obsolete custom. Griffin, the son of Wenunwyn, in 1257, founded a chantry in the chapel of Ashford. The font is ancient, octagonal chalice-shaped; and there is a fine oak pulpit of the Jacobean era. The registers date from 1688. The living is a vicarage, net value £130, in the gift of the vicar of Bakewell, and held by the Rev. J. R. Luxmoore, who resides in the vicarage house, a commodious residence erected in 1854, at a cost of £1,400, exclusive of the site, which was given by the Duke of Devonshire.

The first Nonconformist chapel was established here in 1700 by William Bagshaw, generally known as the Apostle of the Peak. The Wesleyan Chapel was built in 1830. A school was founded here in 1631 by William Harris, who left £50 for the erection of the schoolhouse; a close of land, called Thornley Croft, for the support of the master; and also a rent-charge of £6 13s. 4d. The girls' school is supported by the Duke of Devonshire. The village feast is held on Trinity Sunday.

A little east of the village is Ashford Hall, the residence of R. C. Smith, Esq., J.P. It is seated on a gentle eminence, whence it commands some fine views along the valley of the river Wye. The ground declines towards the river, which here expands into artificial lakes and reedy shallows, filling up nearly the whole of this part of the valley. The park is well wooded, and beautiful lawns and parterres surround the house. The Rookery is an old-fashioned house, almost hidden beneath its mantle of ivy. It is delightfully situated in a sheltered hollow overlooking the river, and is environed by beautiful lawns and pleasure grounds. Its charms are enhanced by an ivy-shrouded bridge which spans the river, and forms a picturesque object when viewed along the stream.

About two miles N.W. from the village is Edge Stone Head, whence is obtained one of the finest views of Monsall Dale.

The township of Ashford is in the electoral division of Bakewell.

SHELDON is a township adjoining Ashford, with which it forms a joint ecclesiastical parish. It contains 1,061 acres, ratable value £1,048, and population 120. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal owner; Wm. Redfern, Esq., Bakewell, and the Exors. of Wm. Finney are also land-owners. The soil is loam on limestone, and is chiefly devoted to grazing. The township elects one district councillor.

Sheldon (Scelhardun in Domesday Book) was a berewick of Ashford, and was for a long period subordinate to that manor. It has now long been in the possession of the Cavendish family.

The village is small, and stands on high ground, about three miles W. from Bakewell, and 2½ from Longstone Station on the Midland Railway. There was a chapel-of-ease here as early as the fifteenth century. This old building stood in the centre of the village, and had the reputation of being the smallest chapel in the county. It was taken down in 1865, and the materials were used in the erection of the present church on a more suitable site. The old chapel was dedicated to All Saints, the new church is named St. Michael and All Angels. The living is a vicarage, net value £100, in the gift of the Vicar of Bakewell, and united with Ashford. The church is a neat Gothic edifice, comprising nave, south porch, and apsidal chancel. The west gable is surmounted by a small campanule. There is accommodation for 80.

The following remarkable marriage is quoted by Dr. Cox, from a M.S. list of Derbyshire events, copied from an old parchment roll by Mr. Reynolds in 1776. The year is not stated:—"Last Saturday, at the Chapel of Sheldon, in the High Peak of Derbyshire, were solemnized the nuptials of a widow gentlewoman of that place, of about 80 years of age, to a young lad (by the consent of his parents), of about 14. As she was rendered incapable of walking, by a complication of disorders, she was carried in her chair from her house to the chapel, about 100 yards distant, attended by a numerous concourse of people; where the ceremony was performed with becoming seriousness and devotion; after which she was re-conducted in the same manner, the music playing, by her orders, the Duke of Rutland's hornpipe before her; to which (as she was disabled from dancing) she beat time with her hands on her petticoats, till she got home, and then called for her crutches, commanded her husband to dance, and shuffled as well as she could. The day was spent with the ringing of the bell and other demonstrations of joy; and the populace (mostly miners) were soundly drenched with showers of excellent liquor, etc., that were plentifully poured upon them."

A school, at present attended by about 20 children, was erected by public subscription in 1878.

In digging out some foundations a few years ago a leaden measure, containing 120 silver coins, chiefly of the reign of Queen Anne, was found.

CHARITIES.—Mary Frost, in 1755, left a sum of money, the interest to be applied in apprenticing poor boys of Sheldon. The money has been invested in land, which produces £6 10s. yearly. The poor receive £5 10s from the Rev. F. Gisborne's Flannel Charity.

Sheldon is in the electoral division of Tideswell.

ATLOW.

This is a parish and township in the Appletree hundred, county council division of Hartington, petty sessional division, county court district, union and deanery of Ashbourne. It is in the Ashbourne rural district, and, in conjunction with Hognaston, elects one member of the district council. The total area is 1,276½ acres, ratable value £1,587, and the population, in 1891, was 125. The principal landowners are H. C. Okeover, Esq., J.P., Okeover Hall, Staffs. (lord of the manor); Mr. George Twigge, Atlow; Mr. John George Twigge, Atlow; Mr. John Melland, Atlow Wynn; Mr. Thomas Tomlinson, Atlow; Mr. William Hinckley, Tamworth; the Exors. of Isaac Grundy; and the Trustees of the Okeover Charity. Two ridges of elevations extend through the parish, and between them flows the Henmoor brook. The land is chiefly in pasture. Limestone was formerly quarried here, from which a good hydraulic lime was made.

The manor of Etelawe (Atlow) was held by Eleuric, under Henry de Ferrers, at the time of the Domesday Survey. Shortly afterwards the Okeovers appear in possession of the manor, and with them it still remains. This family took their name from Okeover, in Staffordshire, their principal residence, and are believed to be the lineal descendants of the above Eleuric.

The village is small and contains neither Dissenting chapel nor public-house. It stands on the bank of the Henmoor brook, five miles N.E. from Ashbourne. The present church was erected in 1874, on a site a little above the old one, which was then removed. It is a neat edifice of stone in the Early English style, and comprises chancel, nave, south porch, and bell turret containing one bell, dated 1593. The entire cost, exclusive of the site, which was given by H. C. Okeover, Esq., was about £1,000, of which £50 was given by the Incorporated Church Building Society, £50 by the Diocesan Church Extension Society, £150 from the Corten Fund, and the remainder was obtained by subscription. Atlow was originally a chapelry under Bradbourn, and with that church was given to the Priory of Dunstable in 1205, but there is reason to believe that the chapel was in existence 100 years previously. The chaplain was appointed by the vicar of Bradbourn, but after the Reformation the patronage was transferred to the lords of the manor, who were also the impropriators of the tithes. In 1716, Rowland Okeover gave the tithes of hay and corn towards the augmentation of the living, which virtually then became a rectory, though it was not officially recognised as such till 1876. It was the first benefice in Derbyshire that benefited by Queen's Anne's Bounty. The living is worth £125 net, with a good rectory house, built in 1864, at a cost of upwards of £2,000. The present rector is the Rev. James Sheldon, who succeeded the Rev. T. J. Jones in 1885. The registers date from 1685.

The old chapel was named All Saints—a favourite dedication with our Saxon forefathers—but the present church having been formally opened and consecrated by Bishop Selwyn on the 1st of May, the festival of SS. Philip and James, it was dedicated to those saints.

The tithes were commuted in 1839 for £110. There are 15½ acres of glebe, 333 acres of land free from tithe, and 667½ acres redeemed from land tax.

The school was built, in 1863, at a cost of £900, and is attended by about 25 children. It receives £10 yearly from the Okeover Charity, and £8 10s. from the Betton Charity and the Hon. the Ironmongers' Company.

The vestiges of an ancient moat are still visible near the residence of Mr. J. G. Twigge, of Moat Farm. Mr. Twigge is a collector of curios, and possesses, amongst other things, a Tyndall Bible, date 1549.

BAKEWELL.

This parish includes the townships of Bakewell, Over Haddon, Nether Haddon, Hassop, and Rowland. The ancient parish was much more extensive, stretching lengthwise upwards of 18 miles, and crosswise about 8 miles; and embraced besides the above townships those of Blackwell, Brushfield, Bubnel, Calver, Curbar, Flagg, Froggatt, Harthill, Little Longstone, and Great Rowsley, and the following chapelries, viz., Ashford, Baslow, Buxton, Chelmorton, Great Longstone, Monyash, Sheldon, and Taddington and Priestcliffe. Within these limits lies some of the most beautiful and romantic scenery in Derbyshire. The parish is situated in the hundred of High Peak; county council and petty sessional division, county court district, union, and deanery of Bakewell. Under the Local Government Act (1894) Bakewell urban district elects three guardians.

The township of Bakewell embraces an area of 2,968 acres; its ratable value is £14,817, and its population in 1891 was 2,748, an increase of 246 since 1881. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor and principal owner; the Duke of Devonshire, J. E. Barker, Esq., Q.C., Smith Taylor-Whitehead, Esq., J.P., D.L., Jph. S. Anthony, Esq., and Wm. Wallwin, Esq., are also extensive owners.

The parish abounds with varied and picturesque scenery—swelling uplands, lofty hills draped to their summit with woods and rich meadows, whilst through the valley below the sparkling Wye pursues its sinuous course, smooth and placid between luxuriant pastures, or splashing and foaming over fragments of moss-grown rock. The soil is chiefly encumbent on limestone, except on the east side of the river, where there is gritstone. There is some clayey land. The farms are small, and are nearly all in grass.

Bakewell is a place of undoubted antiquity. The Romans were probably acquainted with it; it was certainly well known to the Saxons, and is mentioned in the Saxon Chronicle, wherein we are told that Edward the Elder, in 924, marched to Badecanwylla, in Peak-land, and caused a fortress to be erected and garrisoned to overawe the disaffected Mercians. Its name in Saxon speech signified the “bathing well”—a certain proof that its baths had obtained a reputation long before the visit of King Edward. The Norman scribes of Domesday Book wrote the name Badequelle, of which Bakewell is an evident corruption. Not a stone of Edward's fortress now remains, but its site may be traced on the Castle Hill, and the names of adjoining fields—“Warden-field,” “Castle-field,” and “Court-yard”—perpetuate its memory. William the Conqueror gave the manor, with its eight berewicks and lead mine, to his natural son, William de Peverel. The second William Peverel forfeited his estate, and the manor of Bakewell was bestowed by King John on Ralph Gernon. Sir John Gernon died seized of it in 1383, and it subsequently passed by coheirresses successively to the families of Botetourt, Swinburne, Helion, Tyrrell, and Westworth, and was sold in 1502 to Sir Henry Vernon. A Vernon coheirress married Sir John Manners, from whom it has descended to the present owner.

The town is picturesquely situated at the foot of a hill rising from the west bank of the river Wye, which is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of six arches. It is about two miles distant from Haddon Hall, three from Chatsworth, 12 from Buxton, 26 from Derby, and about half-a-mile from the station of its own name, on the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland railway. Bakewell was a place of considerable importance as far back as the Norman Conquest; at least, such is a reasonable inference from the statement in Domesday Book that it had a church and two priests—a distinction only held by one other place in the county, viz., Repton, once the capital of the Mercian kingdom. Another evidence of its early importance is the grant of a charter in 1251, empowering William Gernon to hold a fair of fifteen days' duration annually. It had also then, or very shortly afterwards, a weekly market (Monday), and a fair on the eve, day, and morrow of SS. Philip and James. The town appears to have subsequently declined in prosperity; and in 1662, Edward Browne, a Cambridge undergraduate, and afterwards a celebrated physician, in company with some friends visited Bakewell, but at the inn at which they put up, he says, there was "neither litter nor oates to be gotten" for their horses. They fared somewhat better for themselves, for the landlord "was very civill, and carefull to give them the best accommodation that Barren Country could afford." Could the writer again "revisit the glimpses of the moon," he would find the Barren Country converted into fertile fields and luxuriant pastures, and the town replete with well-appointed hotels, fine shops, and handsome public buildings.

Though small, Bakewell is a progressive town, and the vestiges of its old-world aspect are fast disappearing under modern improvements. The town is under the control of an urban district council, late local board, which has done much to improve its sanitary condition. A perfect system of drainage has been carried out, and works constructed for a copious supply of excellent water from a spring in the gritstone at Fallinge, near Beeley. The streets are clean, and well lighted with gas supplied from works erected in 1850. Sheltered by hills, the climate is mild and salubrious; and its baths still further enhance its value as a desirable health resort.

Bakewell is the centre of commercial life for many miles around, and is not inaptly styled the "Metropolis of the Peak." Its Monday stock market and Friday butter market are attended by a goodly number of farmers and others; and there are two banks for the transaction of financial business. Fairs are held on Easter Monday, Whit-Monday, August 26th, Monday after October 10th, and Monday after November 11th. The local industries are neither numerous nor extensive, and consequently there is generally little stir or excitement to ruffle the serene aspect of the place. A cotton factory was established here by the Arkwrights, and is now carried on by Mr. T. Somerset. It stands near the entrance of the town from Ashford, on the bank of the Wye, whence it chiefly receives its motive power. The saw mills and marble works, originally established by Mr. Lomas, and now the property of Mr. C. F. Groom, give employment to a considerable number of hands. Here the beautiful marble of the district and of foreign importation is sawn and fabricated into the many useful and ornamental articles to which marble is applicable. They are made largely for the wholesale trade, and forwarded to all parts of the kingdom.

The church, dedicated to All Saints, is a handsome cruciform structure, comprising a spacious chancel, nave, with north and south aisles, north and south transepts, Vernon Chapel, and a central tower and spire. It is situated at a considerable elevation on the side of a hill, and is a conspicuous object in the view for many miles. Of the church which stood here in Saxon times, and is mentioned in Domesday Book, not a vestige remains. The present edifice dates from the beginning of the 12th century; but it was very considerably altered when the Early English style prevailed about 1250. Some of the original Norman work remains in the nave. This may be seen in the two semi-circular arches at the west end, and in the round-headed west doorway. Above this doorway there was originally an interlacing Norman arcade, but the introduction of a pointed window has left only a single arch on each side. The upper part of the tower was taken down and rebuilt at this time, as was also the south transept; the latter was considerably lengthened, and became known as the Newark (new work), a name which it still retains. The aisles also belong to this period. The chancel was rebuilt and lengthened in Decorated style about the year 1300; and half a century later the Vernon Chapel was built as an aisle to the south transept. In the early part of the present century, the piers supporting the tower began to show signs of insecurity, and in 1825 it was deemed advisable to take down the spire so as to lessen the strain upon them. A thorough restoration was commenced in 1841, and completed in 1852, at a cost of £8,600. The remainder of the tower was taken down, as were also the transepts and Vernon Chapel, and the whole rebuilt after the original design, all the old features being carefully reproduced. The tower is octagonal, with embattled parapet, from within which rises an elegant spire of the same shape; and all the exterior walls of the church are also surmounted by battlements. The chancel was restored and beautified in 1881 by the late Archdeacon Balston, D.D., then vicar of the parish; and here again all the ancient details have been reverently preserved or copied. A handsome carved oak screen was added, in the front of which are six canopied niches filled in with lime wood, bearing well-carved illustrations of six corporal works of mercy. The reredos, erected at the same time, is an exquisitely beautiful piece of work. The lower part is of finely veined Ashford marble; above this, sculptured in white marble, are the twelve apostles; above this again, carved in white lime wood, is represented the Crucifixion, with the City of Jerusalem in the back ground. Enclosing this is some elaborately carved oak work, surmounted by the figure of an angel standing within a niche and looking down on the scene below. The floor is laid with beautiful mosaics, executed in coloured enamels and Ashford marbles. Carved oak choir stalls were added in 1886. The ancient sedilia, under three pointed canopies, as also the piscina remain in the south wall.

The font, which stands at the west end of the south aisle, is worthy of notice. It has been said by some writers to be of Saxon date; but competent judges assign it to the beginning of the 14th century. It is octagonal in shape, complete without base, and on each face is a rudely carved figure under a canopy. The symbolism of these figures has been variously explained, but we are inclined to think with the late Ven. Archdeacon Balston, that it all has reference to the sacrament of baptism.

Not the least interesting feature of the church is the number and antiquity of its sepulchral monuments. The Vernon Chapel was the burial place of the Vernons and Mannors, former owners of Haddon Hall. It adjoins the south transept, from which it is divided by an old oak screen. Here, lying on a modern altar tomb, is the effigy of Sir Thomas Wendesley, Knight, of Wendesley or Wensley, who was mortally wounded whilst fighting on the side of the House of Lancaster, at the battle of Shrewsbury, in 1403. The next in point of age is the altar tomb of Sir John Vernon, who died in 1477, which was removed from the chancel in 1881. In the centre of the chapel is a table tomb on which are the recumbent effigies of Sir George Vernon, known as the "King of the Peak," and his two wives, one on either side. The knight is clad in plate armour, and his wives in the dress of the Elizabethan period. Around the monument are shields of arms, recently repainted, and the following inscription:—"Here lyeth Sir George Vernon, Knt., deceased, ye . . . daye of . . . Anno 156 . . .; and Dame Margaret his wyffe, daughter of Sir Gilbert Tayleboys, deceased ye . . . daye of . . . 156 . . .; and also Dame Maude, his wyffe, dawght of Sir Ralph Langford, deceased ye . . . daye of . . . 156 . . ., whose solles may God p'don." Sir George died in 1567. The monument was evidently erected during his lifetime, and blanks left for the date of death, which was never inserted. At the south end stands the monument of Dorothy Vernon, the heroine of "Haddon Hall," and her husband, Sir George Mannors. She died in 1584, and her husband survived her 27 years. The two are represented kneeling face to face under an arch in the centre. Against the opposite wall is another monument in the same style, but larger and more costly, to the memory of Sir George Manners, who died in 1623, and his wife Grace, daughter of Sir Henry Pierrepont. In arched niches are the effigies of their four sons and five daughters. The eldest son died in infancy and is represented in swaddling clothes. There are numerous armorial bearings and a long Latin inscription.

At the east end of the south aisle was the chantry of the Holy Cross, founded by Sir Godfrey Foljambe, who died in 1377; and there is an exceedingly well executed alabaster monument to his memory and that of Avena, his second wife. On it are the half length figures of the knight and his lady in alabaster, cut in high relief beneath a double crocketed canopy. Above each are the arms of their respective families. A Guild or Brotherhood was established in connection with Holy Cross. There was another chantry founded by the Vernons and dedicated to the Blessed Virgin.

There are several 17th and 18th century monuments and brasses in the south transept. There are also several very beautiful memorial windows in the church. The two in the east end of the chancel on which are portrayed in glowing colours apostles, prophets, martyrs, and saints, are dedicated to the memory of the late Ven. Archdeacon Balston (deceased 1891), who expended a large fortune in charity and beautifying the church; and two others commemorate his wife. Another window (in the Vernon Chapel) by Hardman, is inscribed to the memory of John Henry, fifth Duke of Rutland. The subject is Christ's resurrection, which is delineated with realistic effect. There are three memorial windows to the Barker family, and others to the memory of Mrs. Nesfield, Louisa Blanche, wife of C. G. S. Foljambe, Francis Gisborne, Edward Wilson, and Dr. Walters.

In the south porch is preserved perhaps the largest and most interesting collection of incised slabs, gravestones, stone coffin-lids, and fragments of ancient sculpture of any church in this country. Most of these were brought to light during the progress of the restoration 50 years ago, built into the walls in various parts of the church. Some of them were found in the foundations of the Norman piers that supported the tower, and most doubtless have belonged to the Saxon church that stood here previous to 1110, when the Norman church was built. The collection contains only a portion of the interesting relics then turned out; a large number was removed by the late Mr. Bateman to his museum at Lomerdale, and a great many were used again by the workmen before their archaeological value became known. These slabs bear no inscriptions, the cross plain or floriated is their chief ornament. Some stone coffins may be seen in the churchyard; here also is a very fine Runic cross, if such a designation be not a misnomer, supposed to be at least a thousand years old. It is ornamented on three sides with elegant scroll work, and down the fourth side are sculptured some of the chief events in the Redeemer's life; conspicuous amongst them is the Crucifixion. There is a goodly array of tombstones, some bearing quaint epitaphs moralizing on the shortness of life and the emptiness of earthly joys; and on one at least the ribald jest is carried to the grave. It is the tombstone of John Dale, a barber-surgeon, and his two wives, and ends thus: "Know posterity, that on the 8th of April, in the year of grace 1757, the rambling remains of the above said John Dale, were, in the 86th year of his pilgrimage, laid upon his two wives.

"This thing in life might cause some jealousy,
Here all three lie together lovingly;
But from embraces here no pleasure flows,
Alike are here all human joys and woes;
Here, Sarah's chidings John no longer hears,
And old John's rambling Sarah no longer fears;
A period's come to all their toilsome lives
The good man's quiet—still are both his wives."

There were formerly six bells in the tower; the present peal of eight was cast by Mears, of London, in 1796, and cost £598. Each bell bears a rhyming inscription:—

- I. "When I begin our merry din
This band I lead from discord free;
And for the fame of human name,
May every leader copy me."
- II. "Mankind like us too oft are found Possess'd of nought but empty sound."
- III. "When of departed hours we toll the knell, Instruction take and spend the future well."
- IV. "When men in Hymen's bands unite,
Our merry peals produce delight;
But when Death goes his dreary rounds
We send forth sad and solemn sounds."
- V. "Thro' grandsires and triples with pleasure men range Till death calls the bob and brings on the last change."
- VI. "When victory crowns the public weal,
With glee we give the merry peal."
- VII. "Would men like us join and agree They'd live in tuneful harmony."
- VIII. "Possess'd of deep sonorous tone
This Belfry King sits on his throne;
And, when the merry bells go round,
Adds to and mellows every sound;
So in a just and well-poss'd state,
Where all degrees possess due weight,
One greater pow'r, one greater tone
Is ceded to improve their own."

the church of Bakewell, with all thereto belonging, was given by King John dean and chapter of Lichfield, and the sum of twenty marks was allotted vicar, wherewith to support himself, two priests, as well as a deacon and acon. There had been, previous to this appropriation, three prebendaries sed to the church, but no provision was made for their continuance. The d of twenty marks appears to have been inadequate, and the deacon and acon were obliged to beg their bread. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in a e dated 1280, ordered that they should eat at the vicar's table; and further d the dean and chapter of Lichfield to pay an additional ten marks yearly e vicar. The living is now worth £450 net, derived chiefly from glebe land, eld by the Rev. Edward Thomas Billings, M.A.

The Wesleyan Methodist Chapel, in Matlock Street, is a neat Gothic ure, built in 1866, to seat 500. Connected with it is a day school, attended out 120 children. The Congregationalists, originally the Independents, have a chapel here since 1795. The present building, with schoolroom under-, was erected in 1849. There are also chapels belonging to the Wesleyan m Union and the Primitive Methodists. The Society of Friends erected a ng house, with burial ground attached, in 1853, but no meetings are now The Catholic Church, dedicated to the English Martyrs, is a temporary ng of corrugated iron in Granby Road. The Salvation Army have a barracks clock Street.

The Cemetery, covering about $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres, was consecrated in 1858. It is ed a little south of the church, and contains two chapels—one for Church- ad the other for Nonconformists. The grounds are tastefully laid out and d with shrubs he baths, though now but little valued, were held in high repute by our forefathers; and there is reason to believe they were not unknown to the ns. They are recommended as a tonic, and are said to be beneficial as a in chronic rheumatism. The water is slightly chalybeate, and has a nature of 59 degrees or 60 degrees Fahrenheit. The baths are situated in utre of the town, and are surrounded by a garden which forms a delightful made. Above the old baths is the Conservative Club, with billiard, reading, other well-furnished rooms for social and political discussions. On the ek road, about a quarter of a mile south from the town, is another mineral spring, called the Peat Well, the water of which is reputed efficacious in several complaints. The land around it was laid out as a recreation ground, which was opened by the late Duke of Rutland in 1885.

The earliest provision for educational purposes within the parish was a rent-charge of £15 issuing out of land at Elton, left by Lady Grace Manners in 1637. For this the master taught, gratuitously, boys belonging to Bakewell and Great Rowsley, reading, writing, and the classics. This charity has been recently remodelled by the Charity Commissioners. Under this scheme it is proposed to establish a school to be called Lady Manners' School, in which the curriculum shall include—in addition to the subjects usually taught in schools—chemistry and other sciences, drawing, the principles and practice of agriculture, woodwork, manual training and the use of tools, domestic economy, cookery, and the laws of health. All children between the ages of 12 and 17 are eligible on passing an entrance examination. The fees are not to exceed £6 per annum.

The National School was built in 1854. It consists of three departments, and has a total average attendance of 270. A new school for the boys is in course of erection.

The Town Hall is a handsome stone structure, in the Gothic style, erected in 1890, by a company of shareholders incorporated under the Limited Liability Act. It comprises a public hall, capable of seating 500, court room, in which petty sessions and county courts are held, and other rooms occupied as offices by various public bodies. The library and reading room of the Bakewell and High Peak Institute, established in 1848, are also here.

Bakewell Farmers' Club was established in 1843, and is very liberally supported by the gentry of the district. Its annual exhibition is one of the best in the county. There is a library attached to the club, where the best and latest works on agriculture may be consulted. There is also a Working Men's Club in the town, where enjoyable evenings may be spent.

The Union Workhouse is a large building of stone, on the outskirts of the town, erected in 1841, and subsequently enlarged, at a total cost of £13,000. There are at present 135 inmates. The Union comprises the following 60 parishes and townships:—Abney and Abney Grange, Aldwarke, Ashford, Bakewell, Baslow and Bubnell, Beeley, Birchover, Blackwell, Bradwell, Brushfield, Calver, Chatsworth, Chelmorton, Cromford, Curbar, Darley Dale, Edensor, Elton, Eyam, Eyam Woodlands, Flagg, Foolow, Froggatt, Grange Mill, Gratton, Grindlow, Haddon Nether, Haddon Over, Harthill, Hartington Middle Quarter, Hassop, Hathersage, Hazlebadge, Highlow, Hucklow Great, Hucklow Little, Litton, Longstone Great, Longstone Little, Matlock, Middleton-by-Youlgrave, Monyash, Nether Padley, Offerton, Outseats, Pilsley, Rowsley and Alport, Rowland, Sheldon, Stanton, Stoke, Stony Middleton, Taddington and Priestcliffe, Tansley, Tideswell, Wardlow and Wardlow Miers, Wensley and Snitterton, Wheston, Winster, and Youlgrave.

The salubrity of the climate and picturesque scenery have attracted many gentry to the neighbourhood, and several handsome residences have been erected. Burton Closes, the seat of Smith Taylor-Whitehead, Esq., J.P., D.L., late High Sheriff of Derbyshire, is a beautiful Gothic mansion, erected in 1847, from designs of the elder Pugin. It stands on a lofty eminence, overlooking the river Wye, about half-a-mile from the town. The extensive gardens and grounds were laid out by Sir Joseph Paxton. In the centre of the town is Bakewell Hall. This picturesque old house, or at any rate the more modern portion of it, was built about the year 1670 by Thomas Bagshawe, of The Ridge, near Chapel-en-le-Frith. The Ridge Bagshawes were a branch of the well-known High Peake family, who had been office bearers in the Royal forest from very early times, and were located at Abney Ford Hall and The Ridge.

This Thomas Bagshawe married Mary Allestore, of Alvaston, by whom he had a large family, most of whom pre-deceased him, and, eventually, his youngest daughter, Rachel, who was baptised at Bakewell, on the 18th of August, 1685, became his heiress. She married William Fitzherbert, of Tissington, Recorder of Derby, and through her the estate of the Ridge Bagshawes passed to the Fitzherberts, who sold Bakewell Hall to the Duke of Rutland. The Barker family became tenants of Bakewell Hall about the year 1721, and continued to occupy it from that date for 150 years. After the Barkers ceased to reside at the hall, the late Rev. Leonard Slater became the tenant, and he was succeeded by Mr. Herbert Brooke Taylor, in whose occupation it now is.

The Barkers of Bakewell were originally located in Darley Dale. On the 16th of June, 1650, the Rev. William Bagshawe, of Ford Hall, celebrated as "the Apostle of the Peak," married Ann, the daughter of Peter Barker, of Darley. The son, grandson, and great-grandson of this Peter Barker were successively stewards of the Leicestershire estates of the Dukes of Rutland, and resided in or near to Belvoir Castle. The great-grandson, John Barker, afterwards became the steward of the Derbyshire estates of the same noble family, and settled at the Hall, Bakewell. Whilst there he built Ashford Hall for his son, Thomas Barker, who lived and died there, and was succeeded by his son, John Henry Barker, then a minor. Ashford Hall was sold some time after the death of Thomas Barker to the then Duke of Devonshire, and the elder branch of the Barker family settled at their house near Bakewell, now called Brooklands, whilst the younger branch continued at the Hall. The elder branch of the Barker family having become extinct in the male line, the family estates passed to John Edward Barker, the representative of the younger branch, and the present possessor of Brooklands. Mr. Barker was educated at Eton and at Oxford, and was called to the Bar by the Honourable Society of the Inner Temple, and is now one of Her Majesty's Counsel and Recorder of Leeds, to which office he was appointed in January, 1880. He is also a magistrate for Derbyshire, and chairman of the Derbyshire Quarter Sessions. On the 14th of February, 1860, Mr. Barker married Susan Marianne, daughter of Rowley Wynyard, lieutenant, R.N., and widow of James Mosley Leigh, of Davenham, Cheshire. By her, who died on the 14th of October, 1889, Mr. Barker has three sons and four daughters.

CHARITIES.—St. John's Hospital, consisting of almshouses for six poor men, was founded and endowed by Roger Manners, Esq., and his brother, Sir John Manners, in 1602. The income is derived from a rent-charge of £40, of which £22 is charged on Nether Haddon and £18 on land at Wensley, and £10 9s. 4d., interest of money in the hands of the Charity Commissioners. Mary Hague, in 1715, gave a house and garden for the free instruction of seven poor children. This property was sold some years ago, and the proceeds invested. The interest, £7 9s., is given towards the support of the National School. St. Andrew's Charity, or Town Stock, purchased in 1718 with sums of money left by various donors, now produces £29 9s. 6d. yearly, which is distributed amongst poor people and in apprenticing poor children. Holme Meal Charity, supposed to have been originated by the Archer family, of Holme House, 200 years ago, yields £3 2s. 7d. yearly, which is distributed in kind amongst the poor of Bakewell and Great Longstone. Catherine Broomhead and Ellen Webster each left a portion of land in 1754, now producing £7 per annum, and in accordance with the wishes of the donors 10s. is paid to the vicar for preaching a sermon, £2 10s. is distributed amongst the poor of Bakewell, and the residue is expended in books for Youlgrave School. There are several small charities, amounting to 27s. yearly.

OVER HADDON township contains 1,362 acres, belonging chiefly to Earl Cowper (who is also lord of the manor), J. B. Mellor, Esq., and Messrs. John Melland, William Finney, Jon. Henry Heathcote, and William Wallwin. Its rateable value is £1,579, and the population 179. It returns one district councillor. The soil is a brown loam of excellent quality, incumbent on limestone, and is chiefly laid down for dairy farming. The river Lathkill has its source here, and flows through a narrow valley hemmed in by rocks and cliffs of every shape and form. These hills were long a profitable lead mining field, but the vein is now much less productive. Ochre is obtained in large quantities from the Greensward and Cobbler veins, and prepared for the market, where it commands a ready sale. The ochre occurs sometimes in narrow fissures and sometimes in huge chambers, and the supply seems to be inexhaustible.

The village of Over, or Upper, Haddon, occupies an elevated position on the rocky ridge overlooking the romantic vale of the Lathkill, two miles S.W. from Bakewell. A small but neat Mission Church was erected here in 1880. The late Ven. Archdeacon Balston defrayed the cost (about £600) of the tower, chancel, and reredos; and £1,400 was obtained by public subscription. The site was given by Earl Cowper. The church is dedicated to St. Anne. Service was previously held in the schoolroom. The members of the Wesleyan Reform Union have also a chapel in the village.

Over Haddon was the birthplace and residence of Martha Taylor, a celebrated fasting damsel, about whose case four different pamphlets were published. She began to abstain from food on the 22nd of December, 1667, being then in her eighteenth year, in consequence of the effects of a blow received some years previously; but her illness did not commence till the latter part of August preceding. The last pamphlet describing this remarkable case of fasting was published in 1669, from which it appears that two watchers were appointed, one by the neighbouring townships and the other by the Earl of Devonshire; and she was attended by from forty to sixty women, who watched strictly night and day. If the entry in the parish register records the death of this woman, she survived the publication of the last pamphlet fifteen years. We have no account of the sequel, whether she was detected as an impostor, or whether she was a real sufferer, and having recovered, returned to her usual habits.

NETHER HADDON township contains 1,434½ acres, of which the Duke of Rutland is sole owner and lord of the manor. Its ratable value is £4,867, and its population in 1891 was 17. Haddon, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was a berewick of Bakewell, and was given with that manor to William de Peverel. Subsequently it was held under the Peverels by William de Avenell, who rendered knight's service for it; and when the Peverel lands were forfeited by rebellion, Avenell became the tenant-in-chief. Little is known of this family. It ended in two daughters, coheiresses, who, in the reign of Richard I., married Richard de Vernon and Simon Bassett, by whom Haddon was held in moieties. The former's share contained the manor house, and he obtained a licence to fortify it with a wall twelve feet high, but without battlements. Sometime later, about the reign of Henry VI., the Bassett moiety became vested in the Vernons; and Haddon continued for several generations after this to be the principal residence of the family. Each successive owner appears to have added to the magnitude or embellishment of the mansion, as shown by the various styles of architecture and ornament, and the armorial bearings emblazoned in different parts of the house.

The last of this line of the Vernons was Sir George, renowned far and wide for his munificence and unbounded hospitality. He was lord of 30 manors, and four score retainers did service in his hall. So great was the influence his vast possessions enabled him to exercise, that he was styled "King of the Peak." It is related of him that on one occasion he exercised summary judgment on a murderer by hanging him near the toll-bar, in Ashford, and was summoned to London by the name "King of the Peak," to answer for his conduct. To this summons twice repeated he returned no answer; but when called upon to surrender by his proper name, Sir George Vernon, he answered "Here I am." He died in 1567, leaving two daughters, joint heiresses, Margaret, wife of Sir Thomas Stanley, and Dorothy, whose clandestine courtship and elopement with John, afterwards Sir John Manners, have been favourite themes with novelist and poet. The story runs that whilst Margaret accepted the alliance chosen for her by her father, Dorothy had secretly given her heart to John Manners, son of the Earl of Rutland, in opposition to the wishes of her father, sister, and stepmother. She chafed under the caresses and blandishments lavished on her elder and more pliant sister, the affianced bride of Sir Thomas Stanley, and like a wild bird she beat her wings against the bars of her closely-watched prison. But love laughs at locksmiths. Disguised as a forester, her lover obtained many a stolen interview. Her sister's wedding day came and a grand ball was given to celebrate the event. When the mirth was at its height, Dorothy stole down the stone staircase and then down the hill to the bridge, where her lover was waiting with a fleet horse.

to receive her. Away they galloped, and next morning they reached Aylston, in Leicestershire, where they were married. This romantic story has no other authority than tradition, and will not bear the test of criticism; yet we cannot but think that there must have been some foundation for it, the details having been subsequently filled in from the imagination of local gossips.

In the partition of Sir George Vernon's estates, Haddon Hall and his other Derbyshire property fell to Dorothy and her husband, from whom they have descended to the present Duke of Rutland. John Manners, the grandson of Sir George and Dorothy, succeeded to the earldom of Rutland, and for some time after this family resided alternately at Haddon and Belvoir Castle. His son John, the tenth earl, was created Duke of Rutland in 1703; and he fully maintained the family prestige for princely munificence and hospitality. He had here a retinue of seven score servants, and so great was the number of his retainers and guests, that the fine old banqueting hall was spread daily as if for a Christmas feast. After this time the glory of Haddon began to wane, and in the time of the third duke, the grand old mansion was abandoned as a residence for the more stately castle of Belvoir. It was partly dismantled in 1740; but the fabric has been reverently preserved as a most perfect example of a baronial mansion in the rough old feudal ages, "when rude abundance crowned the board, and the comforts, luxuries, and the refinements of modern days were unknown."

The hall is picturesquely seated on an eminence overlooking the windings of the river Wye, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S. by E. from Bakewell. Behind and about are wooded knolls, but high above the trees the ivy-clad towers and battlemented parapets rise in silent majesty, impressing the beholder with an exaggerated idea of the massiveness and strength of the venerable piles. An examination of the architecture shows that the hall was the work of several centuries, commencing very shortly after the Conquest; and it is probable that the original Norman structure was grafted on a previous Saxon mansion. Mr. Duesbury, in a paper contributed to the Journal of the British Archæological Association in 1851, thus approximates the erection of the various portions of the hall; the south aisle of the chapel, some of the walls of the north-east tower, and portions of the walls in the south front he assigns to the period between A.D. 1070 and 1250; the great hall and offices, the hall porch, lower west window of the chapel, and rebuilding of north-east tower, between 1300 and 1380; the eastern portion of the chapel, repairs at west end, and the buildings on the east side of the upper court, between 1380 and 1470; fittings and furnishings of the dining-room and western range of buildings, between 1470 and 1550; the range of offices in north front, the long gallery, gardens and terraces, pulpit, desk, and pews in chapel, the barn and bowling green after 1550.

The buildings are ranged around two quadrangular courtyards, and the visitor enters by the gate at the north-west angle. The rooms and objects of interest are very numerous, but space permits us to particularise only a few of the most important ones. Near the gateway is the Chaplain's Room (a misnomer certainly), in which are a pair of fine old fire dogs, an old carbine, a buckskin doublet, two pair of horse boots, and a dinner service of pewter. At the further corner of the courtyard is the Chapel, consisting of chancel, nave, and two aisles. There may be seen some of the original Norman work, and a massive old font of the same period. There are traces of the mural paintings that once adorned the walls, and some of the stained glass still remains in the windows, the greater portion having been mysteriously abstracted about 90 years ago. The nave is seated with benches, and on each side of the chancel is a high-backed pew, once richly gilt. On the opposite side of the courtyard is the Banqueting Hall, 35 feet long by 25 feet wide, and reaching from floor to roof, which is open-timbered. At the upper end is a raised dais, on which is the long oak table where the lord and his principal guests sat. At the other end is an oak screen and the minstrels' gallery. Affixed to the screen is a very suggestive memento of a by-gone convivial custom—an iron ring resembling a handcuff in which, it is said, the wrist of any guest refusing to drink his portion of liquor was confined in an upright position above his head, whilst his companions poured the contents of the goblet down his sleeve. Adjoining the Banqueting Hall is the Dining-room, beautifully wainscoted in oak and lighted by an oriel window of eight lights. The upper panels of the wainscoting are adorned with shields of arms showing the various alliances of the owners of Haddon. Over the curious fireplace are the royal arms, and on a scroll underneath is carved the motto, "DREDE GOD AND HONOR THE KING." The ceiling, which is divided by five moulded beams, was ornamented by frescoes, traces of which remain. In the oriel recess are portraits of Henry VII. and his Queen (whose son, Prince Arthur, was an occasional visitor here) and Will Somers, the famous Court jester. In the upper storey, reached by a stone staircase, is the Drawing-room, which remains as if recently vacated by the family. The walls are hung with tapestry, above which is a beautiful frieze, and traces of the decorations remain on the panels of the window recess. Opposite the entrance of the drawing-room are six steps of massive oak leading to the Ballroom, or Long Gallery. These steps, according to tradition, were formed out of the roots of a single oak tree that grew in the park; and it is further said that the trunk and branches supplied all the timber for the flooring of this very large apartment. The Long Gallery measures 109ft. 9in. in length, and occupies the greater part of the south front. Its width (16ft. 10in.) is not in proportion to its length, but the narrowness is relieved by three deep window recesses on the south side. The walls are covered with oak wainscoting in a series of semicircular arches, alternately large and small, divided by Corinthian pilasters with foliated capitals, and surmounted by an elaborately decorated frieze and cornice. The ornamentation of the former consists of carved boars' heads (the Vernon crest), peacocks (the Manner's crest), roses, and thistles alternately; and on the latter are miniature turrets and battlements. The ceiling is slightly coved and elaborately ornamented with lozenges, quatrefoils, shields of arms, and other heraldic insignia, once rich in gold and colouring, but now covered with whitewash. The arms of the Mannors appear also in the windows, with the date 1589. In a glass case at the further end of the room is preserved a cast of the face of Lady Grace Mannors, taken immediately after death at the age of 90. The Ante-room is entered from the Long Gallery, and contains portraits of Queen Elizabeth, Charles I., and other pictures, but all interest here centres in a strongly barred door opening on a flight of stone steps leading to the terrace and winter garden. Through this door and down these steps, it is said, Dorothy Vernon made her escape on the night of her elopement, and they are now known far and wide by her name. Adjoining is the State Bedroom hung with Gobelin tapestry, on which are represented subjects from Æsop's Fables. There is a large four-post bed draped in green silk velvet and white satin richly embroidered. This is said to have been the work of Eleanor, wife of Sir Robert Mannors, in the reign of Henry VI. This bed was for sometime in Belvoir Castle, and was last occupied by George IV., when Prince Regent. Near the bed is a very primitive cradle, in which, it is said, the first Earl of Rutland was rocked. A little further on is the Peveril, or Eagle, Tower, through which was the principal entrance to the hall. The Kitchen is of immense size and contains two enormous fireplaces, stoves, spits, and all sorts of kitchen appliances as used in old times. On the south side of the hall are gardens and terraced walks; one of the latter, shaded on either side by lofty limes and sycamores is called "Dorothy Vernon's Walk." The foregoing are but a few of the interesting features of this grand old hall, the story of which has engaged the pens of poets and novelists, whilst its picturesque environments have been limned by artists without number, and for ages yet to come it will afford matter for the study of the antiquary, and excite the admiration of the traveller.

Nether Haddon elects one rural district councillor.

HASSOP township lies about three miles N. from Bakewell, and contains 1,331 acres of land under assessment, of which the ratable value is £1,745. In 1891 there were 110 inhabitants, living in 22 houses. Charles Stephen Leslie, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal owner; the Duke of Devonshire has also land here. The township is crossed by a ridge of hills chiefly composed of limestone, in which are several veins of lead, worked at Backdale, White Coe, and White Holes. There are also quarries of calc-spar and limestone.

Hassop (Heteshope in Domesday Book) was, at the time of the Norman Survey, a berewick of Ashford, and part of the Royal demesnes. It came at an early period into the possession of the Foljambes, and belonged to Sir Godfrey Foljambe at the time of his death, in 1377. The heiress of another Sir Godfrey, the third of the name, married Sir Robert Plumpton, steward of Knaresborough, whose grandson sold the manse to Stephen Eyre, eleventh son of Robert Eyre, of Padley. This Stephen married Katherine Dymoke, and died in 1488. Francis Eyre, who succeeded to the Hassop estate on the death of his nephew, in 1792, married Mary, one of the daughters of Charlotte Maria, Countess of Newburgh, by her second husband, Charles Ratcliffe, brother of the unfortunate Earl of Derwentwater, and was himself executed in 1746 for his participation in the attempts made in 1715 and 1745 to restore the Stewarts to the throne of their fathers. Their son, Francis Eyre, Esq., on the death of his half-cousin, Anthony James, 4th Earl of Newburgh, in 1814, without issue, assumed erroneously the title of Earl of Newburgh; and Thomas and Francis, their sons, successively assumed the title, but took no steps to establish their claim. On the death of the latter, in 1852, Dorothy Eyre, his sister, second wife of Colonel Charles Leslie, inherited Hassop and other estates, which on her death, the following year, she left to her husband. The colonel died in 1870, and was succeeded by his son, Charles Stephen Leslie, the present owner.

Hassop Hall, the seat of C. S. Leslie, Esq., is a handsome mansion, situated on the side of an acclivity, and surrounded by extensive pleasure gardens and grounds. The Eyres, throughout the days of persecution, remained steadfast in their fidelity to the old religion and the Crown. Colonel Eyre raised a regiment of foot for Charles I., which he commanded and maintained at his own cost. He garrisoned the Hall for the King in December, 1643, and distinguished himself at the siege of Newark; but he paid dearly for his loyalty, for when Parliament obtained the ascendancy he had to compound for his estates by the payment of £21,000—an enormous sum of money at that time. There is a portrait in the Hall of this gallant cavalier, and there are also others of various members of this old Catholic family.

Near the entrance to the Hall there is a handsome Catholic church, dedicated to All Saints, erected by Francis Eyre, Esq. (Earl of Newburgh), in 1818, and it was restored and redecorated in 1886. The style is somewhat peculiar, the roof projecting, like that of a Swiss chalet, three or four feet beyond the walls, which, as a consequence, present a remarkably clean appearance. The interior furnishings are of a rich and costly character. The altar is an elaborate piece of marble work, adorned by an exquisite painting of the Crucifixion by Lewis Caracci. There are two statues (St. Peter and St. Paul), which are said to have cost £250 each. They are exceptionally fine works of art. There are tablets to the memory of Thomas Eyre, Earl of Newburgh, who died in 1833; Francis Eyre, 8th Earl of Newburgh, who died in 1852; and Dorothy, Countess of Newburgh, second wife of Colonel Leslie, who died in 1853; also to the Rev. Thomas Onion, alias Martin, who died in 1814, having been pastor of Hassop for 46 years; the Rev. John Jones, who died in 1852; and the Rev. Monsignor John Canon Nickolds, who died in 1886. There are some very fine old vestments preserved here, such as are seldom seen outside the walls of a museum.

The village is small, and stands at the foot of a lofty hill, three miles N. from Bakewell, and two miles from Hassop station, on the Midland railway. The feast is held on the Sunday nearest to All Saints' (Nov. 1st).

Birchill is a large farm in this township, belonging to the Duke of Devonshire.

Rowland Eyre, in 1624, left a rent-charge of 10s. yearly to the poor of Hassop, and the same sum to the poor of Rowland.

ROWLAND is a small township and village containing 296½ acres of land, lying 3¼ miles N. from Bakewell. Its ratable value is £910, and there are 57 inhabitants living in 11 houses. The subsoil is limestone, and the land is chiefly laid down in pasture. Chas. S. Leslie, Esq., is lord of the manor, and sole owner.

BARTON BLOUNT.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Appletree, electoral and petty sessional division of Sudbury; union and county court district of Burton-on-Trent; and deanery of Longford. For the election of rural district councillor Barton Blount has been added to Church Broughton.

The estimated extent of the parish is 1,149 acres, ratable value £1,718, and population 76. Miss Caroline Bradshaw is lady of the manor and principal owner; Reginald Chandos-Pole, Esq., has a small estate here.

The manor of Barton was one of the many given by William the Conqueror to Henry de Ferrers; and it was held under him by one Ralph. In the 13th century Barton was held under the Ferrers by the Bakepuze family, and after the forfeiture of the Ferrers lands, it was held by the same family under the Earl of Lancaster. The manor was then known as Barton Bakepuze. The next owners were the Blounts, who purchased the manor in 1381, and four years later Sir Walter Blount obtained a charter of free warren over this and his other manors. Sir Walter was afterwards slain at the battle of Shrewsbury, where he was the king's standard bearer. The family for several generations had their chief residence here, and Blount superseded Bakepuze as the suffix of the place-name. Another Walter, grandson or great-grandson of the above, was an especial favourite of Edward IV., by whom he was appointed Lord High Treasurer in 1464, and in the following year was created Lord Mountjoy, with a pension of twenty marks. James, sixth Lord Mountjoy, becoming involved in pecuniary difficulties, sold the manor and advowson of Barton to John Merry, gentleman, of London. After four descents in this family, the estate came to an heiress, who married a Simpson. The issue of this marriage was Merry Simpson, who, about the year 1700, retired to a French monastery, and Barton was purchased from his trustees in 1751 by Sir Nathaniel Curzon. Subsequently it passed by an exchange to Francis Bradshaw, Esq.

The hall is a handsome mansion of stone, situated in a picturesque park, 12 miles W. from Derby, and 3½ from Tutbury station on the North Staffordshire Railway. The building, before it was modernised by alterations and additions, was a castellated structure, surrounded by a moat. It was garrisoned by Col. Gell for the Roundheads during the Civil Wars, and skirmishes took place here in 1645 and 1646 between the garrison and the royal soldiers from Tutbury.

There is no village. The church, which is dedicated to St. Chad, stands near the hall. It is a small rectangular edifice of stone, with a bell turret without a bell, rebuilt in the reign of Queen Anne, but its mantle of ivy gives it an ancient and venerable appearance. It was thoroughly renovated and re-pewed in 1854. A recessed arch from the old church has been retained in the north wall of the chancel. Under it lies the effigy of a lady, supposed to represent one of the Bakepuze family. There are four memorial windows and three marble tablets to the Bradshaws. The living is a rectory, net value £76, in the gift of Miss Bradshaw, and held in conjunction with Boyleston by the Rev. N. I. Hill-Fyson, M.A.

BASLOW.

Baslow, formerly a chapelry to Bakewell, is now an independent parish, consisting of the joint township of Baslow and Bubnell. Its total area is 5,505 acres, ratable value £4,074, and population 864. It is in the hundred of High Peak, electoral division of Baslow, petty sessional division, poor law union and county court district of Bakewell, and deanery of Eyam. Under the new Local Government Act, the urban sanitary district of Baslow and Bubnell returns one guardian. The Duke of Rutland is lord of the manor, and his Grace and the Duke of Devonshire are the owners of the land.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Basselawe (Baslow) was a berewick of the royal manor of Ashford. A century later it was regarded as a distinct manor, and was then held by William de Avenell, Lord of Haddon. About the close of the 12th century, it was conveyed in moieties, by two Avenell coheirresses, to Sir Simon Bassett and Richarde de Vernon. The descent of the former moiety is difficult to trace, but it was probably that portion that was held by the Earls of Shrewsbury in the reign of Henry VI. The two moieties appear to have been united about the close of the 15th century, and the manor has descended through the Vernons and Manners to the present Duke of Rutland.

The village of Baslow is delightfully situated on the east bank of the Derwent, which is here crossed by an old-fashioned bridge of three arches, four miles N.E. from Bakewell, twelve from Sheffield, and three from Hassop station, on the Midland railway. The scenery around is varied and picturesque. On the north-east and west the land rises into lofty hills and moorlands, wooded in places, in others craggy and bare. Baslow is an excellent centre for visiting Chatsworth, one mile distant; and is consequently much frequented by tourists and others. Visitors will find excellent accommodation at the Royal, Wheat-sheaf, Peacock, and Devonshire Arms Hotel. The last named is a large and handsome hostelry, fitted up with every modern convenience. Visitors to the hotel may obtain tickets for fishing in the Derwent. A hydropathic establishment was erected in 1881. It is a handsome stone structure in the Tudor style, with verandahs to the first and second storeys. The rooms are lofty and well ventilated, and the corridors are warmed and carpeted throughout. The furnishings and decorations are all in excellent modern style. The establishment combines the advantages of a hydro and a high class hotel, where the visitor may regale himself either with Nature's pure beverage or the choicest of wines, &c. The building stands within its own grounds, eleven acres in extent, in which are croquet grounds, bowling green, tennis court, &c. The air of Baslow is salubrious and invigorating, and the sanitary arrangements have been well carried out by the Local Board. A Gas Light and Coke Co., Ltd., was established in 1868, with a capital of £2,345.

The church, dedicated to St. Anne, stands near the river, and is picturesquely shaded by limes, elms, and yews. The edifice is in the later English style, and consists of chancel, nave, side aisles, and a tower surmounted by a low but beautiful octagonal spire, flanking the west end of the north aisle. It contains a peal of six bells. The church underwent a thorough restoration in 1853, at a cost of £1,200, raised by voluntary contributions. The unusual position of the tower at the end of the north aisle seems to show that the present north aisle was the nave of an earlier church. The weather moulding stones of the original high pitch roof are still visible on the east side of the tower. The chancel was rebuilt in 1853, and almost hides the old bell cote on the gable of the nave. There is not much of interest inside the church. The west window is a memorial of the late Duke of Rutland. The south window of the chancel, by Burlisson and Gryll, commemorates Horatio Mason and his wife. There are other three memorial windows. The monuments call for no special mention, except one, the inscription on which we quote as a specimen of the sepulchral literature of the time:—

"Underneath here was interr'd ye body of Thomas Marple, son to John and Elizabeth Marple, of this town, who departed this life Aug. 17th, A.D., 1742.

O youth consider and be wise,
Lest sudden death do you surprise,
Short was my time as it appears
I not exceeding 16 years,
My friends I desired to cease their tears
I shall arise when Christ appears.

And near this place lyeth ye body of Helen Marple, grandmother to Thos. Charles Cook, schulsit."

A monumental slab or coffin lid, of considerable antiquity, discovered during the alterations, is built into the wall of the porch. On it are sculptured a cross and two keys. The signification of the latter is not known with certainty, but they probably indicate someone in authority. The font is ancient, and there are two very old oak chairs in the chancel. The dog whip, with which of old canine intruders were whipped out of church, is still preserved in the vestry, and we believe is the only one now in existence. The parish registers date from 1570. The living is a vicarage, net value £310, held by the Rev. J. Stockdale, M.A., rural dean, who was inducted in 1859. The patronage was formerly vested in the vicar of Bakewell, but was transferred in 1811 to the Duke of Devonshire.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village capable of seating 200 persons.

There is an excellent National School, erected at a cost, including master's house, of £2,000. The site was given by the Duke of Rutland. There is also a high-class boarding school, where boys are prepared for the universities, the public schools, or for professional or commercial careers. The house named "The Beeches" stands within its own grounds, and contains tennis lawns, cricket and football field, and glass-covered play ground. Principal, Frederick Powell, F.R.G.S., &c.

Bubnell is a hamlet on the west side of the Derwent, containing 2,400 acres, and forms a joint township with Baslow. At the time of the Domesday Survey, it was a berewick of the Royal manor of Ashford, but has long been united with Baslow. William Eyre, a grandson of Robert Eyre, of Padley, purchased the manor of Bubnell in the 16th century. It subsequently belonged to the Bassets, of Blore, from whom it passed, by marriage, to the Copwoods. Bubnell Hall, formerly the residence of the Eyres, the Bassets, and Copwoods, is an ancient building near the river and sheltered by trees. The land is chiefly in pasture and meadow. Great attention is given to the breeding of shorthorn cattle, which have carried off prizes at all the principal shows in the district.

Brambley is a hamlet of one farm, situated at the northern extremity of Bubnell.

CHARITIES.—Humphrey Chapman, by will in 1777, left certain land on trust, the rents thereof to be thus appropriated:—20s. yearly to the schoolmaster of Stanton Ford, in this parish; 10s. to the clergyman for preaching a sermon on the 5th November; 19s. to the poor of Baslow and Bubnell; and 10s. to the poor of Calver, Curbar, and Froggatt. The Gunpowder Plot sermon has long been discontinued. Robert Stafford gave £60, which was invested in land, the rent of which is divided equally between the minister, the schoolmaster, and the poor; and White's charity, the rent of 6a. 3r. 22p. of land, is divided in like manner. Gisborne's flannel charity is also distributed yearly.

BEELEY.

This is a parish and township, containing 3,191 acres, of which upwards of 200 acres are woods and plantations. The ratable value is £1,479, and the population in 1891 was 390. Beeley is in the hundred of High Peak; electoral and petty sessional division, county court district, union and deanery of Bakewell. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 Beeley elects five parish councillors and one rural district councillor and guardian. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and owner of nearly all the land. The commons, to the extent of 2,278 acres, were enclosed in 1813-14, when land was awarded to the Duke of Devonshire, in lieu of the corn tithes, and to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield for tithes of lamb and wool.

The surface is varied by a series of bold well-wooded uplands, which form a back ground to Chatsworth. There are two extensive quarries at Bruntwood in this parish, the property of Mr. Henry Deeley. The stone is a very fine quality of gritstone, and has been largely used in many of the principal buildings in Manchester. It has a good appearance, and possesses remarkable weather-resisting properties. The quarries, which contain almost inexhaustible supplies, are conveniently situated for working and transport, and give employment to a large number of men. The stone is also manufactured into grindstones, which are used by gunsmiths and steel toy makers.

The manor of Begeleie (Beeley) at the time of the Domesday Survey was Crown property. In the reign of Richard I. it was held by Warner de Beelegh, who was succeeded by his son Serlo. In 1271 Lord Grey of Codnor died, seized of this and other manors. The next owners were the Chenneys, from whom it passed to Lord Vaux of Harrowden, whose youngest son, Nicholas, held it in right of his mother, and in 1560 sold it to the Greaves, who had been seated at the Greaves in this parish from the time of Henry III. The Saviles purchased the manor about the beginning of the 17th century, and changed the name of their residence here from Greaves to Hill Top. The male line of this family terminated by the deaths of George and John Savile, the former in 1733 and the latter in 1734, when their estates were inherited by John Gilbert, of Locko, their nephew. This gentleman sold the Beeley estate in 1747 to the Duke of Devonshire.

The village stands by the Chatsworth road, on the east bank of the Derwent, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E., from Bakewell, and one mile from Rowsley station on the Midland Railway. The church, dedicated to St. Anne, was originally a chapelry to Bakewell, and was given, together with the Mother Church by King John, in 1192, to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. In the registers, which date from the year 1538, it is stated that the chapel of Beeley was built in 1375, and consecrated in 1378, but Dr. Cox assures us that there are architectural evidences of the existence of a chapel 200 years earlier. A brief was obtained for rebuilding the body of the chapel in 1819, and the fabric was again thoroughly restored in 1883. It consists of chancel, nave with north aisle, south porch, and a low west tower containing three bells. The north aisle, which was lopped off in 1819, was rebuilt at the late restoration. The tower is ancient, and two 13th century windows remain in the chancel; but the oldest piece of work about the building is the round-headed Norman doorway under a new porch. The east window is a memorial of Lord Edward Cavendish, who died in 1891, erected by the parishioners and other sympathising friends; and the other old decorated window on the south side has been filled with stained glass in memory of the late Duke of Devonshire. Under the east window are the altar and stone reredos representing in three panels the "Agony in the Garden," "Christ Bearing His Cross," and "The Crucifixion." A small pictorial window on the north side of the chancel commemorates Harriet Mary and Annie Louise Sculthorpe. There are monuments in the chancel to the Saviles and the Greaves, the oldest bearing the date 1675. The tower opens into the nave by a fine pointed arch, the terminals of which are carved, one side representing Philip in his chariot, and the other the baptism of Philip. The lower stage is the baptistry, and here is a font that undoubtedly belonged to the original Norman chapel. The living is a vicarage, worth £160, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. H. C. Sculthorpe, B.A., since 1864.

The Wesleyan Chapel in the village, built in 1892 at a cost of £900, on a site given by the Duke of Devonshire, is a neat building of stone in the Gothic style, and is in the Bakewell circuit. There is also a good National School, with an average attendance of 50.

BIGGIN.

This is a new ecclesiastical parish, consisting of the township of Hartington Nether Quarter, which contains about 3,800 acres. The ratable value is £3,749, and the population in 1891 was 325. It is in the hundred of Wirksworth, county council electoral division of Hartington, petty sessional division, county court district, and union of Ashbourne, and deanery of Buxton. Hartington Nether Quarter parish council consists of five members, and the parish also sends one councillor to the Ashbourne rural district council.

The Duke of Devonshire is the principal owner and lord of the manor; his Grace the Duke of Rutland, Messrs. Richard, John and Edmund Gould (Biggin Hall), exors. of T. W. Bateman, Esq. (Middleton Hall), John Sleigh, Esq., and Mr. Henry Parker (Middleton), have estates here. The Cromford and High Peak railway runs through the township, but there is no passenger station within its limits. The surface is boldly undulated; the soil is various, with clay and limestone in places, and is chiefly laid down in pasture.

Biggin is a scattered but pleasant village, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Hartington and nine from Bakewell. A church was built here in 1846-7, and dedicated to St. Thomas. It comprises chancel, nave, and western tower containing one bell, and cost £1,305, exclusive of the site, which was given by the Duke of Devonshire, and the leading, which was done gratuitously by Mr. P. P. Fidler, of Biggin Grange. The east window is a memorial of Miss Shaw, erected by her niece, Mrs. Wright. The church will seat 330. The living is a vicarage, worth £163 a year, with residence, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. John Foulger since 1886.

A school was erected at the same time as the church, at a cost of £200. It has accommodation for 90 children, and an average attendance of 55.

Biggin Grange was formerly monastic property. The land was given by the Ferrers family to the monastery of Garendon, in Leicestershire, and the monks erected a grange. It now belongs to the Duke of Rutland, to whom it passed by an exchange of land with the Duke of Devonshire. The farm is of considerable extent, and is in the occupation of Mr. Thomas Finney. Biggin Hall is an ancient mansion with extensive farm, the property of Messrs. Gould. A stone in the wall is inscribed 1672, R. D. The house was restored by the Gould family in 1842.

Friden is a hamlet $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles E. from Biggin. Here is a goods station on the Cromford and High Peak railway. Near the station are the works of the Derbyshire Silica Fire Brick Co. The company has $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres, from which the clay and ganister sand are obtained. The clay contains about 9 per cent. of silica, and is consequently capable of resisting a very high degree of heat. The pit has been worked to a depth of about 40 feet, but there is reason to believe that the clay and ganister sand extend to a depth of nearly 300 feet. The brick machine is capable of turning out 12,000 bricks per day, which are dried in sheds heated by the waste steam from the engine. Hand-made bricks are also made here. The kiln contains twelve chambers, each capable of holding 15,000 bricks. The reservoir which supplies the works with water has a capacity of 200,000 gallons.

Heathcote is a small hamlet in this township. It belonged to the monks of Garendon till the Reformation. Newhaven is a small village situated near the junction of several high roads, seven miles from Bakewell, four miles from the far-famed Dovedale, and two miles from Parsley Hay station, on the High Peak railway. Here is a large hotel called Newhaven House, much frequented by tourists and visitors. The Duke and Duchess of Devonshire paid a visit to the hotel on the 14th of June, 1894; and Lord Chief Justice Denman says, in a book presented by the late Lord Denman to Mr. Mellor, the proprietor, "I mistook the inn at Newhaven for a gentleman's house." Mr. Mellor also farms a considerable quantity of land, and is noted for a particular breed of shire horses.

Two large fairs are held at Newhaven, on the second Tuesday in September and the 30th of October, which are attended by buyers of horses, cattle, and sheep from distant parts of the country. These fairs are also markets for all kinds of merchandise. Pike Hall, on the Winster road, comprises four farms, two of which are in this township. There is a small Wesleyan chapel here, built in 1864.

BONSTALL.

This is a parish and township in the hundred, petty sessional division, county court district, and deanery of Wirksworth, county council division of Winster, and union of Ashbourne. Under the Local Government Act it forms an urban parish, and elects two urban guardians. The total acreage is 2,750; ratable value, £4,621; and population, 1,329. The land is limestone, and belongs to several owners, the principal of whom are H. F. Prince, Esq., and Francis Hemstock, Esq., Slaley Hall.

In Domesday Book, Bonsall (Bunteshale) is entered as a hamlet of the Royal manor of Metesforde, but the latter name has long disappeared from our local nomenclature, nor is the site known. Bonsall was subsequently granted to the Earl of Lancaster, and continued annexed to the Duchy of Lancaster till 1630, when Charles I. granted it to Charles Harbord, Esq., and others, who, two years later, sold it to the Earl of Dover. In 1633 it was purchased by the copyholders, subject to the payment of a fee farm rent to the Crown, and each copyholder's share of the royalties is in proportion to the amount of his copyhold rent.

The surface of the parish is picturesquely diversified by rock, and wood, and rill, presenting scenes which "set the imagination to work to decide whether the beautiful or sublime most predominates." Lead-mining and smelting were formerly carried on to a considerable extent, but that industry has been discontinued. There are extensive works for the manufacture of paint and colours from the yellow ochre, &c., found in the district. About 30 hands are constantly employed. Barytes and calamine are also found here.

The village of Bonsall is delightfully situated in a valley environed by limestone rocks, two miles from Matlock Bath, three miles N.W. from Wirksworth, and 17 miles N.W. from Derby. The Church (St. James) is an ancient embattled edifice, situated on a shelving rock above the dale, overlooking the village. It comprises a lengthy chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower surmounted by an elegant octagonal spire, containing six bells. The fabric was thoroughly restored and enlarged in 1863, at a cost of £1,627 13s. 7d., raised by public subscription; and the chancel was restored at the same time by the Rev. Isaac Bickerstaff, B.D., then rector, at a cost of £341, inclusive of allowance for dilapidations. As much of the old edifice as possible has been preserved, and no ancient feature has been destroyed that was capable of retention. The pillars of the aisles show two periods of erection; those of the south aisle are quatrefoil, and those of the north are octagonal. The arches are pointed. The ancient octagonal font stands under the tower archway, and the piscine remain in the chancel and south aisle. The pulpit was given by Robert Clay, Esq., the reading desk and communion table by the Rev. Samuel Prince, the clock by Mrs. Elizabeth Ashworth, and the lamps were recently presented by F. Hemstock, Esq. There are several beautiful memorial windows. At the east end of the north aisle is a very handsome one, erected by the parishioners to the memory of Samuel Prince, a liberal contributor to the restoration of the church. The chancel window is a fine work of art, erected by William and Francis Hemstock to the memory of Mary Woodiwiss. There are but few monuments within the church. In the north aisle is a marble tablet to the memory of Henry Ferne, who was Receiver General of the Customs in the reigns of William III., Anne, and George I., and died in 1703. A brass against the south wall of the chancel commemorates Henry Hopkinson, who died December 4th, 1634, and contains the following rhyming eulogium:—

"A Barrester a Batchellor of Arte,
A Practiser that chose the better parte;
That pleaded more for just defence than gaine,
That for the poore and common good tooke paine,
That counselled peace for he did plainly see
Too much decrease by suites that trivial bee;
That knewe the lawe, yet so loved neighbourhoode,
Noe man did know him sue or to be sued,
He's burried here, his soule in heaven doth rest
Without all feare; for peacemakers are blest."

Two stone coffins and other memorials of early sepulture were found during the work of restoration. The living is a rectory, valued at the Reformation at £10 8s. 1d., now worth £180 net (derived from tithe rent-charge, and 68 acres of glebe), with residence, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. J. Kitchingman.

The Baptists have a small chapel erected in 1824, and the Methodist Free Church dates from 1852. The Wesleyan Reformers have a handsome chapel, with stained glass windows, at Bonsall Dale, opened in 1893.

There are a National and an Endowed School in the village. The latter was erected by Robert Ferne, and is endowed with lands and premises left by William and Elizabeth Cragge, in 1704, and by Elizabeth Turnor, granddaughter of Robert Ferne, 1737. An ancient cross stands in the village street. It consists of a shaft rising from a base ascended by fifteen steps. It bears the dates 1678, 1769, and 1800, generally believed to refer to three restorations, but nothing is known of its history.

Slaley is a small village half-a-mile S. from Bonsall. Slaley Hall, the residence of Francis Hemstock, Esq., is an antique looking structure with thatched roof, overlooking Via Gellia. The latter is the fanciful Latinised name of a beautiful walk constructed by the late Philip Gell, Esq., through an enchanting ravine extending through Cromford into Bonsall. The steep, rugged sides are thickly wooded, and the luxuriant growth of lilies of the valley and other wild flowers render the scene one of indescribable loveliness. Here are the works of the Via Gellia Paint and Colour Manufacturing Co., noticed above.

Charities.—An unknown donor left £1 10s. per annum, which is distributed in bread on Good Friday. A person named Needham left £2 18s. yearly for the same purpose; and the poor also receive £5 10s. from the R. F. Gisbourne's bequest. (See Bradley.)

BOYLESTON.

This parish embraces an area of 1,314 acres of good land, chiefly in pasture; ratable value, £2,112; and population, 218. The principal owners are Henry Jack Cumming, Esq., Foston Hall; Lord Vernon, Sudbury Hall; N. I. Hill Fyson, M.A., The Rectory; Exors of the late Rev. Tansley Hall; John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; Mr. Edwin Povey; Mrs. Patience Carrington, Doveridge; Mr. Joseph Chadfield; and the Exors. of the late Geo. Salt. The parish is in the hundred of Appletree, the electoral and petty sessional division and rural district of Sudbury, the poor law union and county court district of Uttoxeter, and the rural deanery of Longford. The parish elects one rural district councillor.

The descent of the manor is much involved and difficult to trace. At the time of the Domesday Survey it was held under Henry de Ferrers by one Roger, whose descendant, Thomas de Boyleston, left a daughter and heiress, who was twice married. After her death the manor was divided into moieties, which passed by marriage to the Grendons and the Ridwares. Roger Ridware, in the reign of Edward I., sold his portion of the manor to John de Bassing, whose daughter, Joanna, married Walter de Waldeshel, and their daughter and heiress conveyed it in marriage to Roger de Ridware. The next owners were the Cottons, who possessed it for several generations. Their portion of the manor was known as the "Cottons," and a farm still bears the name of "Coton Wood." Richard Cotton, who died in 1504, left four daughters, one of whom married John Bradbourn, and received Boyleston as her portion. It passed by an heiress of this family to Sir Humphrey Ferrers of Tamworth, and was purchased by the Challoners in 1664. The Rev. Thomas Gilbert obtained this moiety by marriage with the heiress of the Challoners, but sold it in 1751 to Henry Tatham. The latter devised it to the Rev. Thos. Manlove, but it returned again to the Tathams after the death of his widow. The old manor house stood at Younds, but only the outbuildings now remain. The property belongs to Lord Vernon.

The other moiety of the manor passed by marriage from the Grendons to John Senche, whose daughter and heiress, Margaret, died in 1362, leaving her moiety to Roger Sapperton. It remained with this family for two or three generations, and then passed to the Montgomerys. In the reign of Elizabeth it belonged to the Agard family, and it was subsequently purchased by John Gisborne, Esq., of Derby. The Bates family were the next owners, and Brownlow Bate sold it in 1764 to the Broadhursts of Foston Hall, from whom it has passed to Henry Jack Cumming, Esq.

The village of Boyleston is small and scattered, but pleasantly situated, eight miles S. from Ashbourne, three miles N. from Sudbury, and four from Tutbury, the nearest railway station. The church, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is a good stone edifice, chiefly in the Decorated style, and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle (separated from the nave by three pointed arches, which spring from octagonal pillars), and a bell turret at the west end containing one bell. The fabric was repaired and altered in 1843, at a cost of £465. The present tower was then added. An inscription on one of the oak tie-beams states that the chancel was re-roofed in 1595. The late rector spent £200 in the restoration of the chancel in 1888, when two sepulchral slabs, bearing representations of a skull and cross-bones, were unearthed, and now rest under the communion table. The floor is laid with encaustic tiles of a very neat design. The reredos is of carved oak, representing the Last Supper. Above this is an obtusely-pointed three-light window, filled with stained glass in memory of Harriet Hall, wife of the late rector. The glass previously in this window, a memorial of the Rev. Robt. Bickerstaff, has been transferred to other windows in the church. The founder's recess remains in the north wall of the chancel, but there is no monument within it. Walter de Waldeshel, who was probably the rebuilder of the church, founded a chantry here in 1322, and endowed it with lands for the maintenance of two priests. There are tablets to several rectors, and to the Stone and Chawner families. The registers date from 1734. The living is a rectory, net value £260, in the gift of and held by the Rev. Nicholas Isaac Hill Fyson, M.A., Worcester College, Oxford, who succeeded his uncle, the late Rev. Tansley Hall, in 1893.

During the war between Charles I. and the Parliament, Colonel Eyre's regiment of royalists, 200 strong, were surprised and captured whilst passing the night in this church, by a Parliamentary force under Major Saunders.

There are chapels in the village belonging to the Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists; the former was erected in 1809, and the latter in 1846. The National School, with teacher's residence, was built by subscription in 1845. It is attended by 47 children.

CHARITIES.—The poor receive 32s. a year, left by the Rev. Thomas Allsopp, rector of Hathern, and his son, of the same name, rector of Boyleston. Frances Elizabeth and Richard Challinor, who died in 1867 and 1879 respectively, left the sum of £297, the interest of which (£8 3s. 8d.) is distributed amongst the poor by the rector and churchwardens for the time being.

BRADBOURN.

This is an ancient parish dating from Saxon times, and was then of considerable extent, including as chapelries the parishes of Atlow, Brassington, and Tissington. It now consists of the townships of Bradbourn, Aldwark, and Lea Hall, and the chapelry of Ballidon, comprising an area of 4,800 acres, and 297 inhabitants. It is situated in the hundred and county court district of Wirksworth; county council division of Hartington; union, petty sessional division, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, the townships of Bradbourn and Ballidon form a united parish, returning one rural district councillor.

The township of Bradbourn embraces about 1,550 acres, of which 1,440 are under assessment; ratable value, £2,017; and population, 141. The surface is pleasingly diversified. A ridge of limestone hills skirts the township on the south, and numerous elevations of the same formation are dotted over the surface. The principal landowners are the Rev. R. G. Buckston, Sutton-on-the-Hill; T. M. Gisborne, Esq., Walton-on-Trent; Sir William FitzHerbert, Bart., Tissington Hall; Mrs. Lamb, Brailsford; Henry Chandos-Pole-Gell, Esq., J.P., Hopton Hall; Rev. James FitzHerbert, Tissington; and Barrow B. Langdale.

The manor of Bradeburne, at the time of the Norman Survey, formed part of the lands of Henry de Ferrers, and very early documents show that it was held under the Ferrers by the family of Caus or de Cauceis. In the reign of King John the manor was conveyed to Godard de Bradbourn, and it continued in this family till the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when Jane, the coheiress of Sir Humphrey Bradbourn, married Sir Humphrey Ferrers. Subsequently it passed, by marriage, to the Marquis of Townshend, and was purchased from the latter family in 1809 by Philip Gell, Esq., of Hopton Hall.

The village is small, but pleasantly situated, about one mile north of the Ashbourne and Wirksworth road, 5 miles N.E. from the former, 5½ miles S.W. from the latter, and 13 miles from Derby. The nearest railway station is at Ashbourne. Bradbourn is mentioned in Domesday Book, and it had then its church and priest. The present church (All Saints') was rebuilt soon after the Conquest, and consists of chancel, nave, south aisle, with porch, and massive square tower, with slightly indented parapet, and turret staircase in the north-east angle. The tower is a portion of the early Norman church, and is entered on the south side by a circular doorway, adorned with characteristic Norman mouldings. The south porch and doorway are also Norman, but the pointed arches of the aisle are of later date. An extensive restoration took place in the Decorated period, as is shown by the windows of the chancel and south aisle. In the latter are some remains of ancient stained glass. The font also is ancient, and rather uncommon in shape and construction. The basin is lined with lead, and the four sides are ornamented with circles enclosing quatrefoils. The church is seated with open benches of oak, and the pulpit is of the same material. A new organ was put in during 1893, at a cost of £300. There are some monumental inscriptions to members of the ancient family of Buckston, who settled here about the beginning of the 17th century; but the only memorial possessing any interest is an ancient sculptured cross, in three pieces, removed hither for better preservation. It is ornamented on two sides with rudely sculptured figures, and on the other two sides with interlacing foliage and knotwork. In the churchyard is another fragment of an early cross, believed to be Saxon work. It was dug up a few years ago. The tower contains five bells, all of modern date.

The church, with its four chapelries, was given, in 1205, by Sir Geoffrey de Cauceis to the priory of Dunstable, in Bedfordshire, but this grant only conferred the right of presentation. In 1278, the rectorial tithes were appropriated to the same convent, and shortly afterwards a vicarage was endowed. After the dissolution of monasteries the rectory reverted to the Crown, and in 1608 was granted to Rogers and Fetherston, who sold the tithes to the several landowners. The rectory house and glebe lands were purchased by George Buckston. The advowson has long been in the Cavendish family. The living is worth £114 net, and is held by the Rev. Arthur Gamble, M.A. (Cantab), who was presented in 1891.

The village school was erected, in 1844, by the late William Evans, Esq., and is a substantial stone building capable of accommodating 50 children. Bradbourn Hall, the property and formerly the residence of the Buckstons, is now occupied by Albert Hartshorne, Esq., F.S.A. Heaven (or Haven) Hill is a conspicuous elevation on the farm occupied by Mr. W. Wright. Its name bears no reference to the paradise of the blessed, but, like that word, is derived from the Saxon hefan, raised, or lifted up. Nether Bradbourn consists of two farms situated about one mile east of the village. Nethertown Hall, now a farmhouse, was erected in 1684. The village feast is held on the Sunday following November 12th, or, as the local saying has it, on the "First Sunday after the second snow."

CHARITIES.—The poor have a rent-charge of 20s. per annum, left by George Buxton in 1633; and £5 10s. out of the Rev. F. Gisborne's bequest is distributed in woollen cloth and flannel at Christmas.

ALDWARE is a township and small village 5½ miles N.W. from Wirksworth, containing 951 acres of land, belonging solely to the Duke of Rutland, who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £692, and the population 40. It is in the Bakewell union and rural district, and forms a united parish with Ivonbrook Grange, returning one rural district councillor. The manor was given by Sewallis, ancestor of the Shirley family, to the monks of Darley, in the reign of Henry IV. The monks had a grange here, to which there was probably attached a chapel. Afterwards the grange was granted, by Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Heneage and Lord Willoughby, who sold it the following year to Robert Gox, or Goch. It subsequently passed to the Mannors, and was given by Queen Elizabeth to John Hardwick, whose daughter, the famous Bess of Hardwick, married Sir William Cavendish. A late Duke of Devonshire exchanged this estate with the Duke of Rutland.

Lea Hall, formerly extra-parochial, is a small township comprising three farms, belonging chiefly to Sir William FitzHerbert, Bart., who is also lord of the manor. There are 462 acres of land under assessment, ratable value £621, and population 15. For purposes of the new Local Government Act, this township has been added to Tissington.

BALLIDON is a township and chapelry in this parish containing 1,946 acres of good limestone land, belonging chiefly to S. W. Cox, Esq., Breadsall; Mr. Chas. Etches, Ilam, Ashbourne; Mr. E. S. Bradley, Ashbourne; T. M. Gisborne, Esq., Walton-on-Trent; Earl of Mansfield; Thomas Bateman, Esq., and John Sleigh, Esq. The ratable value, according to the last assessment, is £1,849, and the population, in 1891, was 87.

The manor of Belidene, as the name is spelt in Domesday Book, was part of the possessions of Ralph Fitzhubert, and in the 14th century it belonged to the Harthill family. In the following century, Elizabeth, sister and heiress of Sir Giles Harthill, married Edmund Cockayne, of Ashbourne, a younger branch of which family resided at Ballidon for several generations. Sir Edward Cockayne, who died in 1606, sold the manor to Sir Nicholas Ashley, and subsequently it passed in severalties into the families of Trott, Milward, Hurt, and others.

The village is distant about five miles N.W. from Wirksworth, and 6½ N.E. from Ashbourne. The church, which is served from Ballidon, is a small, ancient building in the Norman style, comprising chancel and nave, with bell turret. It is dedicated to All Saints', and stands in a field a little south of the village. In 1888 it was restored at a cost of £550. The living is annexed to Bradbourn, and the patronage is vested in the freeholders, who pay a modus of about £11 per annum in lieu of tithes.

About two miles N. by W. of the village is Minninglow Barrow, wherein have been several ancient burials. The tumuli were opened by Mr. Bateman, and a full account is given in his "Digging in Celtic and Saxon Graves."

For the purpose of carrying out the Local Government Act of 1894, Ballidon has been added to Bradbourn.

BRADLEY.

This is a parish and township in the Appletree hundred; petty sessional and county council division, union, rural district, county court district, and deanery of Ashbourne.

Its area, according to the last Ordnance Survey, is 2,422 acres, ratable value £2,901, and population 217. The soil is a variable mixture of clay and gravel, and is chiefly laid down in pasture. The principal landowners are Geo. Moore Dixon, Esq., J.P.; Lord Scarsdale; Mrs. Henry, 73, Radcliffe Gardens, London; Mrs. Philips, 21, Russell road, Kensington, London; Godfrey Meynell, Esq.; and Thomas Fernyhough, Esq.

The manor of Braidelei (Bradley) at the time of the Domesday Survey belonged to Henry de Ferrers. At an early period it became the property of the Kniveton, who settled here. In the 17th century the manor descended to Sir Gilbert Kniveton, Bart., of Mercaston, a younger branch of the family. His son and successor, Sir Andrew Kniveton, Bart., was governor of Tutbury Castle during the Civil War. He greatly impoverished himself by his firm adhesion to the Royal cause, and sold his estates here in 1655 to Francis Meynell, alderman and goldsmith of the city of London. The old hall, the seat of the Kniveton and early Meynells, was taken down many years ago, and the present red brick mansion built on another site. It is the property and residence of Geo. Moore Dixon, Esq., the present lord of the manor.

The village, if such it can be called as the houses are very scattered, is situated 3½ miles E. of Ashbourne, which is the nearest railway station. The church (All Saints) is an ancient structure in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel and nave of stone, and a square box-like turret of wood containing three bells. A modern red brick porch covers a good pointed doorway. There is a tradition that the church had once a steeple surmounted by a spire, which was destroyed by lightning at the beginning of last century. The fabric underwent repairs in 1836, and again in 1843. Funds are now being collected for the thorough restoration of the building, which it is estimated will cost £2,000. A portion of the interior has been recently restored, and the old thirteenth century font has also been repaired. The only memorial now left of the Kniveton, who were so long connected with the parish, is a wooden tablet bearing the arms and motto of that family. Francis Meynell, the purchaser of the manor, was buried here in 1696, and a marble tablet records the burial of William Byrom, of Byrom hall, Lancashire, gent., in 1675, and of his son Thomas, in 1714. A tablet to the memory of Harriet Squambella, who died in 1821 at the age of nine, bears an eulogistic epitaph. The registers date from 1579. The living is a rectory, net value £230, with residence, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and held by the Rev. Jas. Furley Trevitt, B.A. The tithes were commuted in 1838 for £271; there are 60 acres of glebe.

At the S.E. extremity of the parish are three farms bearing the name of Bradley Old Park. The Pastures is a farm containing 423 acres and a substantial house, in the occupation of Mr. W. H. Tomlinson, whose ancestors farmed Sturston Hall estate for close upon three centuries.

CHARITIES.—The poor receive 20s. yearly from Walker's charity, left in 1691, and £5 10s. from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's bequest, which is distributed in flannel and warm clothing.

Post Office, at William Clarke's. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 7-55 a.m., and are despatched at 4-55 p.m. No delivery or despatch on Sunday.

BRASSINGTON.

This is a parish and township in the wapentake, petty sessional division, county court district and deanery of Wirksworth, county council division of Hartington, union and rural district of Ashbourne. In carrying out the new Local Government Act a parish council of six members has been assigned to it, with one representative on the district council. The total area of the parish is 4,145 acres, ratable value £5,296, and the population 690. The land belongs to several proprietors, of whom the most extensive are H. C. Pole-Gell, Esq., Joseph Wheatcroft, Esq., John Watson, Esq., George Charlton, Esq., Exors. of Sir Joseph Whitworth, Bart., Lord Scarsdale, and George Slater, Esq. A substratum of limestone underlies the parish and characterises the soil, which is chiefly laid down in meadow and pasture. The parish was once famous for its cheese, but very little is now made, the farmers finding it more remunerative to sell the milk, which is forwarded to Manchester and other towns from Longcliff station, on the High Peak railway, which intersects the parish. Lead, barytes, zinc, and manganese are found in the limestone strata; but mining operations are not now pursued to any great extent. There are some good beds of fire-clay, which is largely used in the construction of blast furnaces.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, the manor of Brazinetune (Brassington) belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by Siward. Subsequently the manor was divided into two; one portion remained with the Ferrers (Earls of Derby), and eventually, on the downfall of that family, became part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster. Charles I. granted it to Charles Harbord and others. Later the Buxtons held a moiety of the manor, which afterwards passed to the Newtons; and in 1824 it was purchased by William Charlton and George Gregory, gentlemen. The other manor was given in frank marriage by one of the first Earls of Derby to an ancestor of the Furnivals, from whom it passed by marriage to the Nevilles and Talbots. In 1804 it was purchased by Robert Lowe, Esq., who sold the land in parcels.

The village is situated four miles W. from Wirksworth, $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.E. from Ashbourne, and 14 miles N. from Derby. It is 800 feet above the sea level, and is sheltered on the north and east by hills. On one eminence huge masses of the grey limestone rock protrude, presenting a romantic appearance. They are known as the Harborough Rocks. Here is a cavern of considerable dimensions, and above it is a remarkable rock resembling a chair. The church is a handsome stone edifice, seated on an eminence overlooking the village. Its original dedication was to All Saints, but the Diocesan Calendar and some modern directories ascribe it to St. James*. A thorough restoration was recently carried out at a cost of £2,000, raised by public subscription, when a north aisle was added. At the west end is a plain, embattled tower—the remnant of the original Saxon church, on the demolition of which, some seven centuries ago, a Norman nave and a very narrow south aisle were built, and which still remain. The Norman work of the interior is very fine, and the general effect impressive. The very ancient, if not original, font remains; but there are no memorials of any great antiquity. A stone in the south aisle records the bequest of 20s. yearly to the poor of Brassington by Ann Buxton, "who dyed December 23rd, 1674." In the chancel is a funeral brass, bearing a long Latin inscription bidding the traveller to drop a passing tear for the lamentable death of one Michael Adams, B.D., rector of Treton, in Yorkshire, who, whilst travelling, was here seized with the inextinguishable heat of fever, which carried him without a doubt to the mansions of the Lord in a chariot of fire, like unto Elijah. He died December 27th, 1680. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, is now a vicarage, net value £116, in the gift of Miss M. E. Foster, and held since 1877 by the Rev. Isaac V. Macrae. At the enclosure in 1803, an allotment of 354 acres was granted in lieu of tithes.

There are three Dissenting places of worship, but no resident ministers, belonging respectively to the Congregationalists, the Primitive Methodists, and the members of the Wesleyan Reform Union. There is a good public elementary school, attended by 140 children. Thurstan Dale, in 1742, left four acres of land for the education of twelve poor children.

CHARITIES.—John Buxton, in 1699, left the interest of £100 for apprenticing poor children; and there are three rent-charges, amounting to £8 3s., which are distributed among the poor. The poor also partake in the Rev. F. Gisborne's bequest.

CARSINGTON.

This parish comprises the township of its own name, containing 1,127 acres and 206 inhabitants. Its ratable value is £1,633. It is situated in the hundred, petty sessional and county council division, and county court district of Wirksworth, union and rural district of Ashbourne. In conjunction with Callow, it returns one district councillor. Henry Chandos Pole-Gell, Esq., J.P., Hopton Hall, and the Exors. of the late Mr. John Oldfield, are the principal owners.

Ghersintune (Carsington) is entered in Domesday Book as a berewick of Wirksworth, then a portion of the Royal demesnes. In the 16th century the manor came into the possession of the Gells of Hopton, from whom it has descended to the present representative of that family.

The village adjoins Hopton, the two forming a straggling street about a mile in length, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Wirksworth, and six miles N.E. from Ashbourne. Sheltering it on one side is a precipitous ridge of limestone, whose beetling crags look down on the tops of the houses. The church, dedicated to St. Margaret, is a small oblong structure with a bell turret at the west gable, and surmounted by battlements. On a sun-dial in the south wall is inscribed "Re-edified 1648, W.I." The gallery at the west end was erected by Sir Philip Gell, Bart., in 1704, for the use of his tenants in Hopton. The church was repaired and re-roofed in 1854 at a cost of £300, and in 1874 it was reseated with open benches, and a south porch added. The font is octagonal, and is believed to date from the 14th century. The registers commence in 1592, and contain several interesting entries: e.g.—"1637. In this year was the parsonage house built." "1638. The view tree was sett in the churchyard of Carsington by Wm. Thorpe, rector, Thom. and Ralph Gell, and Edward Valenc, upon the feast day of St. Simon and St. Jude." This probably refers to the venerable yew tree still standing in the churchyard. "1688, September 29th. Sarah Tissington, a poor young woman, born into the world without any hands or arms, yet was very nimble and active in the use of her feet, with which she could not only take up things from the ground, and play at most childish games with her playfellows when she was a child, but also when grown up she could knit, dig in the garden, and do divers other services with her feet; she was aged 24 or 25 years, and departed this life the day and year aforesaid; born and buried at Carsington."

The living is a rectory, formerly in the gift of the Dean of Lincoln, but transferred some years ago to the Bishop of Lichfield, and thence to the Bishop of Southwell on the formation of that see. In 1536 the clear yearly income was returned at £5 1s. 10d.; present net value is £130, derived from tithe rent-charge and 45 acres of glebe. Rector, the Rev. Francis Henry Brett, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge, for whom the Rev. C. Cadogan, M.A., officiates. John Oldfield, an eminent Puritan divine, held the benefice during the Commonwealth, but was ejected in 1662 for his non-conformity. His son, Dr. Joshua Oldfield, a learned Presbyterian divine, was born here in 1656, and published some valuable treatises on the Improvement of Human Reason and on the Trinity.

A Free School was founded in 1727 by Mrs. Temperance Gell, of Hopton, who left £220 to be laid out in the purchase of land for its endowment. The testatrix directed that twenty poor children of Hopton and Carsington should be taught and clothed. By the recent Education Act the school is free to all, and the income from the endowment is expended in necessaries for the children. A large classroom and a playground have been added, and the school is now one of the best equipped and most comfortable in the county. There are 70 children on the books; Mr. Wm. Henry Pedder, master; Miss Susan Patience Allsop, pupil teacher.

The Old Rectory House, erected in 1637, is a substantial building, with stone-mullioned windows, now occupied by Mr. Edward Naylor. In the garden is an ancient sun-dial, dated 1671. A reading-room, formed out of two cottages given by H. C. Pole-Gell, Esq., has been established in the village.

CHARITIES.—The sum of £5 10s., received from the bequest of the Rev. Francis Gisborne, is expended in warm clothing for the poor, and a rent-charge in lieu of two beast gates is paid by Mr. Gell.

CHELMORTON.

This parish comprises the townships of Chelmorton and Flagg, containing 3,734 acres, and 445 inhabitants. It is in High Peak hundred, county council division of Tideswell, petty sessional division, county court district, union, and rural district of Bakewell, and deanery of Buxton.

The country around is treeless, and unpicturesque stone walls take the place of hedgerows.

The township of Chelmorton embraces 1,968 acres of limestone land, which is wholly in grass. The ratable value is £1,847, and the population in 1891 was 269, showing an increase of 37 since 1881. The principal landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, the vicar of Bakewell, Exors. of Thomas Swann, Exors. of Thomas Buxton, the Rev. William Marsden, Exors. of Samuel Percival, Stephen Melland, Monyash; John Bateman Bagshaw Esq., Highlow Hall, Hathersage; Exors. of Rev. S. Cook, John Cookson, and the Exors. of Joseph Hallam.

Chelmorton is not mentioned in the Domesday Book. It is parcel of the Royal manor of the High Peak; and the mineral rights are leased from the Crown by the Duke of Devonshire. Two-thirds of the tithes of the demesne pasture lands were appropriated to the priory of Lenton, and the remaining third to the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield. The Talbots had a subordinate manor here in the reign of Elizabeth, which subsequently passed to the Eyres, of Hassop; and the Foljambes also held land for several centuries at Chelmorton.

The village is situated 5 miles S.W. from Tideswell, 4½ miles S.E. from Buxton, 7 miles from Bakewell, and 4 miles from Millers Dale station, on the Midland railway. The church, which is dedicated to St. John the Baptist, is an ancient and interesting edifice, situated at a considerable elevation above the sea level. Glover gives the year of erection as 1111, and says that date was found on an oak beam of the old roof; but C. S. Greaves, Esq., Q.C., writing in the "Archæological Journal," says that he examined the beam end then preserved in a museum at the entrance to Poole's Cavern, but found no date upon it, only a carving representing "four pillars supporting the floor of a chamber, or some object of that description." Chelmorton was formerly a chapelry of Bakewell, and there was undoubtedly a chapel here in Norman times. In 1256, leave was granted to Henry Foljambe and four other residents of Chelmorton to found a perpetual chantry in the chapel of Chelmorton, with rights of sepulture in the adjoining cemetery; and Dr. Cox is of the opinion that the whole fabric was rebuilt or very considerably restored about that time. It consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south transept, south porch, and west tower, surmounted by a spire, containing four bells. The church was for several years under restoration, which was completed in 1874, at a cost of about £2,000, raised by public subscription. Crossing the chancel arch is an old stone screen, a very unusual feature in parish churches. It stands about 5½ feet high, and is surmounted by an embattled parapet, with quatrefoil openings. The front is divided into panels of tracery. The old stone sedilia remain, but they are not very elaborate. The arches of the south aisle are semicircular, and those on the north are pointed. The transept was probably the chantry founded by Henry Foljambe and others. There were, at least, three altars in the church in Catholic times, as shown by the three piscinæ that remain. The font is of great antiquity, and is curiously carved. Not the least interesting feature of the church is the collection of sepulchral slabs in the porch. There are about a dozen fairly perfect, and fragments of many others. Five of these were discovered, apparently, in their original situations, when the churchyard near the porch was lowered about the year 1840, and the remaining ones were found, built into the walls of the church, during the recent alterations. Some of them bear very handsome crosses, and one has an axe across the shaft of the cross. This, Mr. Bateman supposed, marked the grave of the village carpenter, but Dr. Cox believes the axe to be one of the symbols of a knight or man-at-arms. There are memorials in the church of the Dales of Flagg, the Swanns of Hardlow, and of the families of Hall, Wheldon, and Bullock. The registers date from 1590. The living is a vicarage, worth £160, in the gift of the vicar of Bakewell, and held by the Rev. B. Phillips since 1870.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here. The school was endowed by William Brocklehurst in 1792, with two sums of money amounting to £301 4s.

At the inclosure of Chelmorton and Flagg in 1808, land was awarded in lieu of all tithes to the Duke of Devonshire, the dean and chapter of Lichfield, and the incumbent.

Overlooking the village is Chelmorton Low, an eminence rising to the height of 1,474 feet above the mean level of the sea. On the top are two barrows, or burial mounds, within a short distance of each other. The largest is about 80 yards in circumference, and the smaller about 20. The former, according to Pilkington, was opened by some labouring men who were searching for stones to build a walled fence in a neighbouring field, in 1782, when they discovered several skeletons in a large coffin rudely formed of stone slabs. The smaller barrow was opened by Mr. Bateman, in 1846, but only a few fragments of calcined bones and a lance head of flint were found.

Chelmorton is united with Bakewell for the election of a rural district councillor.

FLAGG township embraces 1,766 acres, and is valued for rating purposes at £1,616. The population in 1891 was 176. The landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, M. Hodgkinson, Exors. of S. Taylor, Alfred Barnes, James Orr, Mrs. Armitage, Miss A. Wilmot, Exors. of Mr. Hodgkinson (Baslow), and James Finney (Flagg.)

The soil is generally good, in some places of considerable depth, and encumbent on limestone; but the aspect is unattractive, there being a general absence of trees and hedgerows, except in the immediate vicinity of the village, where some trees have been planted. Flagg is parcel of the Royal manor of High Peak, of which the Duke of Devonshire is lessee.

The village stands one mile S.E. of Chelmorton, and consists of one long street of scattered houses. The Beresfords had land here in the reign of Henry VIII., and a century later Ralph Buxton is mentioned as residing at Flagg. He gave the old parish chest, now in the church tower, in 1630. Flagg Hall, the property of Mr. Herbert Finney, is an ancient building, containing some very fine oak panelled rooms and old oak staircases. The Plough, situated in the centre of the village, is a comfortable inn, which has been in the family of the present proprietor for nearly 200 years. The spiritual wants of the villagers are amply provided for. Church service is held in the National School by the vicar of Chelmorton; and the Unitarians and Primitive Methodists have commodious chapels. That belonging to the latter sect was rebuilt in 1883 at a cost of £340. The Feast is the first Sunday after the 24th June. Under the new Local Government Act, Flagg elects one district councillor.

CHARITIES.—Mrs. Syth Dale, in 1667, left a rent-charge of £1 18s. 6d. yearly on her estate in Flagg, to the poor of Chelmorton and Flagg. Robert Dale, in 1742, gave the interest of £40 to the poor of this chapelry, and a rent-charge of 40s. is received from a public-house in Chelmorton and lands adjoining. Adam Lowe, by will in 1801, gave 20s. yearly to the poor of Chelmorton and Flagg; and William Hodgkinson, in 1814, left the interest of £40 to the poor of Chelmorton. The poor of Flagg receive the rent of a croft, called Piper's Yard or Dale Croft. The sum of £5 10s., received from Gisborne's charity, is distributed in flannel and coarse cloth amongst the poor of the parish.

CHURCH BROUGHTON.

This is a parish and township in Appletree hundred; county council and petty sessional division of Sudbury, county court district and union of Burton-on-Trent, rural district of Repton, and deanery of Longford. Five parish councillors have been assigned to it under the Local Government Act of 1894, and, united with Barton Blount, it elects one district councillor. The boundaries of the civil and ecclesiastical parish are not coincident at all points. The area of the former is 2,000 acres, ratable value £3,852, and the population in 1891 was 465. The principal landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, who is lord of the manor; Henry Jack Cumming, Esq.; Miss C. Bradshaw; John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; Miss E. Sampson, Bent House; William S. Richardson, Esq., Quarndon; and Mr. Vernon Myatt, Leek. The soil is strong and fertile, and is chiefly in meadow and pasture. A large quantity of fruit is grown. There is a bed of excellent clay, which is manufactured into bricks, &c., that command a ready sale.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, this manor, then called Broctune, belonged to the family of Ferrers; and when, shortly afterwards, the priory of Tutbury was founded, Henry de Ferrers bestowed it upon the monks of that house. There does not appear to have been any church on the estate at the time of the grant, but one was erected very soon afterwards, most probably at the expense of the convent, and the place was thenceforth distinguished as Kirke-broughton, or Church Broughton. The manor remained in the possession of the monks till the dissolution of monasteries by Henry VIII.; and, in 1552, Edward

VI. granted it, together with the inappropriate rectory, to Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the present owner.

The village is pleasantly situated in the level country, 10 miles W. from Derby, two miles N. of the Derby and Uttoxeter road, and three miles from Tutbury station on the North Staffordshire railway. The church, dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, is a spacious edifice of stone, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and tower containing a clock and three bells. The general style of the architecture is the Decorated Gothic, which prevailed about the commencement of the 14th century, at which time the church appears to have been rebuilt. The tower and the adjoining bay of the nave are evidently of later addition. To carry this added bay a pillar was erected contiguous with the western one on each side, and the intervening space filled in so as to form one pillar having a long and a short diameter. The capitals are joined on each side by stones, on which are carved grotesque heads. The church was thoroughly restored in 1886, at a cost of £1,800, raised by subscription. This does not, however, represent the whole value of the work done, as a great deal of voluntary labour was given by the parishioners. The floor was lowered 19 inches to its original level, so as to expose the bases of the pillars, which had long been hidden. These pillars are circular, with square bases, and are believed to be part of the original Norman church. The chancel arch was rebuilt in exact imitation of the previous one, but higher. Many of the old stones were used again. The chancel is very spacious, being only six feet shorter than the nave. The east window of five lights, with quatrefoil tracery, is a good specimen of the Decorative style. The windows in the north and south walls are of a similar design, except a modern one on the south side, which is square headed. The three sedilia have ogee canopies, and the piscina niche is of similar design. Above the communion table is an oak reredos, made out of the old oak screen. The sacarium is paved with enamelled tiles of chaste design. The aisles are four bays in length. There was formerly an altar at the east end of each; the piscina niche remains in the south aisle, but that in the north aisle was probably removed when the church was repaired, in 1845. An old altar stone was found in the north aisle during the late restoration, which probably belonged to the north chapel. It was fractured, but has been repaired and placed at the east end of the south aisle. The roofs of both chancel and nave are flat, and of oak. There is no stained glass in the church. The chancel is fitted with carved oak stalls, and the rest of the church with open seats of the same wood, all placed at the late restoration. The pulpit, also of oak, was the gift of Arthur Woolley, of Saperton, in 1751. The organ at the east end of the north aisle was given by Miss Elizabeth Sampson, in 1886. The font, which stands at the west end of the nave, is the most interesting object in the church. It is circular in shape, tapering slightly downwards, and is ornamented with interlacing circles and triangles, which are supposed to symbolize Eternity and the Trinity. It is Norman work, and probably belonged to the original church. Under the tower is an old oak chest about six feet in length, and fitted with three locks. In the exterior wall of the chancel, near the priest's door, is an arched recess, ogee shaped, and surmounted by a cross-crosslet. Underneath is a table tomb, and within the arch is a small trefoil opening filled with glass. The registers date from 1538.

The living is a vicarage, nett yearly value £228, in the gift of, and held by, the Rev. William Auden, M.A., St. John's College, Cambridge. The Vicarage House, a neat brick building standing within its own grounds a little east of the church, was erected in 1857 at a cost of £1,000. There are 84a. 1r. 7p. of glebe, and 12 acres of church land, the rent of which is to be applied to the repairs of the fabric. The great tithes were restored to the living in 1702.

The parochial school was built by the Duke of Devonshire, in 1831, and since enlarged to accommodate 90 children, and there are about that number in average attendance. At the inclosure, in 1775, 19 acres of land was allotted to the school. This lets for £30 per annum, which is applied to the support of the school. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel in the village, built in 1828. Bent

House, half-a-mile east of the village, is the property and residence of Miss Sampson.

Sapperton is a hamlet, comprising three farms and a few cottages, 1½ miles west from Church Broughton. It is a distinct manor, and is mentioned in Domesday Book as part of the Ferrers' lands, and was held by one Roger. It afterwards belonged to the Blounts, and, in 1385, Sir Walter Blount had a grant of free warren in this and his other manors. A family named Sapperton possessed this estate in the reign of Henry VIII. The manor afterwards passed to the Agards, of Foston, and, in 1675, was sold by John Agard to Adam Wolley, from whose descendants it was purchased by Edmund Evans, Esq. Elizabeth, the daughter and heiress of that gentleman, married John Harrison, Esq., of Snelston Hall, whose son is the present owner. The Manor House is an ancient building in the occupation of Mr. George Edge, farmer. The tithes of Sapperton have been alienated.

CLIFTON.

This parish comprises the township of Clifton and Compton, containing 1,016 acres and 550 inhabitants. The extent of land under assessment is 925 acres; ratable value, £3,240. A portion of the township, containing 156 acres, lies within the Ashbourne Local Board district, and is assessed at £2,261. The principal owners are John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall (lord of the manor); Exors. of W. R. Smith, Hon. E. T. Jervis Parker, Jacob Frost, G. J. Peach, the Misses Hartshorne, G. H. Errington, Esq., Messrs. Bond & Co., W. Bullock, and Mrs. Emma Taylor.

The parish is in the hundred of Morleston and Litchurch, county council electoral and petty sessional division, union, county court district and deanery of Ashbourne. Six parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Clifton and Compton, under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894.

The manors of Great and Little Clifton belonged to the Cockaynes of Ashbourne, in the reigns of Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth, who held them under the Fitz-Herberts of Norbury. They subsequently belonged to the Hayne family of Ashbourne, and now to John Harrison, Esq.

Clifton had its chapel in Catholic times. It was dedicated to St. Mary, but it seems to have fallen into disuse after the Reformation, and in 1750 the old building was pulled down, and part of the materials was used in the repair of the chancel of the mother church of Ashbourne. The present church of the Holy Trinity was erected in 1845, at a cost of over £1,200. A chancel was added in 1869, the cost of which was defrayed by subscription. It is pentagonal in form and is lighted by five windows, three of which are filled with stained glass. The centre one, representing six of the principal scenes in the life of our Lord, is inscribed "The Catholic faith is this, that we worship one God in Trinity, and Trinity in Unity." The other two are memorials to Thomas H. Smith. The floor is laid with encaustic tiles of pretty design, and a dado of ornamental tiles lines the wall. There are tablets in the floor to Dr. Lonsdale and Dr. Selwyn, Bishops of Lichfield. There are two stained glass memorials on each side of the nave. Three of them commemorate members of the Smith family, and one the Rev. Henry Gamble, M.A., the first incumbent, who died in 1867. A brass at the west end is inscribed "The Rev. Samuel Shipley, Philip Cupiss, Esq., William Smith, Esq., and the Rev. Robert Hey, formed the committee for building this church." The living is a vicarage in the gift of the Vicar of Ashbourne, worth £290, with grant from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for curate. The Rev. F. C. R. Jourdain, the present incumbent, succeeded the late Rev. G. A. Festing, Rural Dean, in 1894.

The school was built in 1855, at a cost of £350, exclusive of the site, which was given by William Smith, Esq. It was enlarged in 1864, and has now an average attendance of 60 children.

The Wesleyan Chapel, formerly owned by the Independents, is a small brick building, capable of seating 125. It was enlarged by the present owners in 1890.

The village of Clifton stands near the river Dove, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Ashbourne. There is a station on the Ashbourne and Uttoxeter branch of the North Staffordshire Railway.

Compton is a suburb of Ashbourne, and a portion of it forms a joint township with Clifton. Hanging Bridge is a hamlet on the Ashbourne and Manchester road, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from the former. On a hill adjacent to the bridge, on the Staffordshire side of the river, formerly stood the gallows on which criminals were hung. The large mill of M. Bond & Co. is situated in this hamlet. Here about 100 hands are employed in the manufacture of tape and smallwares. The business was established in 1795. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel in the village, built 1860. Tinker's Inn is another small village on the Ashbourne and Tutbury road.

CHARITIES.—The sum of £9 is received for Clifton, and £11 for Compton, from Corden's bequest. This money, with the sanction of the Charity Commissioners, is now distributed in coals, and not in Bibles and Prayer-books.—(See Ashbourne.) Humphrey Calvert left a rent-charge of 6s. 8d. each to Clifton, Edlaston, and Yeaveley. This is chargeable on a field called Littlewood, in the occupation of Mr. J. Abbot.

Post Office at Miss Eliza Sarah Rose's, the village. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 7-15 a.m. and 5-0 p.m.; despatch, 5-25 p.m. Nearest Money Order Office, Ashbourne ($1\frac{1}{2}$ miles). Nearest Railway Station and Telegraph Office, Clifton Station. Wall Box, Hanging Bridge, cleared at 9-55 a.m. and 5-55 p.m.

CROMFORD.

This is a parish and township, containing 1,324 acres of land, lying on the west bank of the Derwent, which river divides it from Matlock parish. It is in the hundred, electoral division, county court district, and petty sessional division of Wirksworth, and union of Bakewell. Under the Parish and District Councils Act two rural district councillors and guardians have been allotted to it, and seven parish councillors. The ratable value is £5,307, and the population in 1891 was 1,052. F. C. Arkwright, Esq., J.P., is the sole owner, with the exception of about a quarter of an acre.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Crunforde (Cromford) was a berewick of Wirksworth, and at that time belonged to the king. In 1350, Edward III. granted the right of free warren at Cromford to Sir Hugh de Meynell, of Meynell Langley; and the said Hugh died in 1364 seized of the manor, which he held under the Duke of Lancaster. The Leche family were for sometime owners of Cromford; and subsequently the manor passed by sale to the Agards. From this family it was purchased by Sir Wm. Cavendish, the second husband of the famous "Bess of Hardwick." This lady's fourth matrimonial alliance was with George Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury. This estate passed to Henry Talbot, Esq., and thence to his daughter and co-heiress, Lady Armyne, founder of the Cromford Almshouses. Subsequently it changed hands several times, and in 1776 was purchased by Peter Nightingale, Esq., who sold it in 1789 to Sir Richard Arkwright, whose descendants have since possessed it.

The village of Cromford stands on the banks of the Derwent, in a deep valley enclosed by lofty limestone rocks, which peep out from the richly wooded sides of the dale. It is distant one mile from Matlock Bath, two from Wirksworth, and eight from Belper. The ford which formerly crossed the river here, and to which probably the place owes its existence as well as its name, was superseded by a bridge many centuries ago. Near this stood an ancient chapel, but when or by whom founded is not known; it may very possibly have been one of those oratories that were frequently erected on, or near to the entrance of bridges, in which the wayfarer might offer up his orisons and go on his way rejoicing. It is mentioned in the will of Richard Smyth, Vicar of Wirksworth, who died in 1504; and Richard Wigley, of Middleton, by will in 1540 left a legacy of two shillings to the "Chappell at Cromford." The chapel appears to have been but miserably furnished; and when the inventory of church goods was taken in the reign of Edward VI., it had "i vestment & i lytle bell without a clapper." The priest had no fixed income, and depended for his support on the offerings of those who passed over the bridge. After the Reformation the chapel was disused and converted into a dwelling-house. This building was taken down, in 1796, by Mr. Arkwright, who, however, left a little of the wall and an arched doorway to remain as a relic of the past. On the bridge is recorded a fearful leap of horse and rider over the parapet into the stream. A man named Froggatt was riding at a furious rate towards the bridge, but his horse being unable to take the sharp curve leapt over the parapet of the bridge into the river. The rider retained his seat, and both he and the horse escaped unhurt.

Cromford was only an inconsiderable village when Richard Arkwright erected here, in 1771, the first cotton mill in the county. It was fitted with his own patented machinery, and worked by a copious stream which drained the mines on Cromford Moor. In 1873, he erected a second mill at Masson, in which the motive power was the river Derwent. These mills gave employment to a large number of people, and proved most remunerative speculations for the projector, who thereby laid the foundation of the vast wealth which the family now possesses. Cromford increased very considerably in size, and in 1790, Sir Richard obtained a charter for a market on Saturdays, but this is now discontinued.

After Sir Richard's death the mill was successfully carried on by the family till about the middle of the present century, when through mining operations in search of lead on Cromford Moor, the stream by which the machinery was driven, was diverted into another course. With the cessation of the cotton spinning industry, the prosperity of the village began to decline, and a very marked decrease in the population has been the result. The mill premises are now occupied as a brewery by Mr. Matthew Hill.

The Cromford Canal, which joins the Erewash Canal at Langley Bridge, was opened in 1793. Its total length is $14\frac{3}{4}$ miles, and the cost of construction was about £80,000. It forms a waterway between Cromford and the towns of East Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire. This canal is now leased by the Midland Railway Company. In 1820, the Act of Parliament was obtained for the construction of the High Peak Railway. This line, which is 34 miles in length, commences about a mile south of the village, and connects the Cromford Canal with the Peak Forest Canal at Whaley Bridge, on the borders of Cheshire. It then traverses a wild mountain district, attaining at its highest point an elevation of 990 feet above the level of the Cromford Canal. The ascent is accomplished by means of inclined planes, up which the waggons and carriages are drawn by stationary engines. This line has been taken over by the London and North-Western Railway Company.

The Church of St. Mary is a plain edifice of stone, standing within the grounds of Willersley Castle, the seat of the Arkwright family. Its erection was commenced by Sir Richard Arkwright, and completed by his son, Richard Arkwright, Esq., who endowed it with £50 per annum. The edifice underwent a thorough restoration in 1858, when a portico was added. The church was originally intended for the private use of the family and for their burial place; but subsequently the scheme was enlarged, the living permanently endowed, and the church made parochial. Sir Richard Arkwright is buried here. On the south side of the chancel is a beautiful monument of white marble by Chantrey, erected by Richard Arkwright, Esq., junior, in memory of his wife and three infant children. For the greater convenience of the inhabitants a Mission Church, with burial ground attached, dedicated to St. Mark, has been erected in the village. The living is a vicarage, worth £300 per annum, in the gift of F. C. Arkwright, Esq., and held by the Rev. Egbert Hacking, M.A.

Substantial schools were erected in 1832. These have been recently enlarged and improved in accordance with the requirements of the Elementary Education Act. There is a total accommodation for 360, and an average attendance of 269.

The scenery around the village is a picturesque combination of wood, water, and rock. The new road from Cromford to Matlock is cut through the solid rock, and forms a delightful walk margined with trees, shrubs, and creeping plants. A little south of the village, near the High Peak railway, is a huge mass of rock crowned with pine trees, and known as Stonnis, or Black Rock. From the summit there is a magnificent prospect, which has so enraptured the mind of an enthusiastic visitor that he has left his impression chiselled on the rock—"Heavens! what a goodly prospect spreads around us!"

In addition to the cotton manufacture, lead mining was formerly carried on to a considerable extent in Cromford. A few years ago there were about 14 mines in operation, but this industry has been discontinued. Some of the mines are still worked for ochre and other earths, which are manufactured into paints by the Via Gellia Paint and Colour Company. The works are situated a little west of the village, near the entrance of the charming walk fancifully named the Via Gellia, from the Gell family, through whose estates it runs. The road has been constructed through a narrow, rock-bound valley, the sides of which are richly clothed with trees and shrubs, and in early spring time the sides of the road are carpeted with lilies of the valley and other wild flowers in rich profusion. The works cover a considerable extent of ground, and are fitted with the latest and most improved machinery for the manufacture of the finest pigments. An extensive business is here carried on, and the productions of the company find a ready market not only in this country but also in our distant Colonies. A speciality of the company is umber. They possess the best and most productive mine in the county, and the umber produced is unrivalled for strength and richness of colour. Red oxide, red lead, or minium, is also manufactured on an extensive scale, and is in constant demand on account of its uniform purity and brilliant colour. Derbyshire has long been celebrated for this manufacture, and the Via Gellia Company is one of the largest producers in the county. Blacks of various kinds, drop, ivory, blue, and mineral, chromates, blues, vermillionettes, and numerous other colours may be seen here in preparation, both in dry colour and in process of grinding with oil into paints. The works are the property of Mr. Henry Wheateroff.

CHARITIES.—Lady Armyne, by a codicil of her will, dated 1662, left a yearly rent-charge of £16 10s. out of her manor, lands, and tenements in Cromford, for the maintenance of six poor widows or widowers, who reside in six almshouses, but when or by whom these were built is not known. The manor was sold to Sir Richard Arkwright subject to the payment of the above sum, and also to the repairs of the hospital. This rent-charge was a very inadequate endowment for the maintenance of six almspeople, and it has been handsomely supplemented by James Charles Arkwright, Esq., of Oak Hill, Cromford, who by deed executed on the 28th May, 1877, invested the sum of two thousand five hundred pounds (£2,500) in 4 per cent. Midland railway debenture stock, in the name of certain trustees, out of the annual income thereof to pay to each inmate, for the time being, of the six almshouses, such an allowance or sum at the rate of not less than 5s., or more than 6s. per week, as shall be fixed and determined from time to time by the trustees, having regard to the circumstances and necessities of the respective almspeople, and the income of the endowment and the other circumstances thereof. Provided the income of the said sum of £2,500 be more than sufficient to provide and satisfy the objects aforesaid, the trustees shall pay and apply the surplus of the said income to the benefit of deserving and necessitous inhabitants of the parish of Cromford.

CUBLEY.

This is a parish and township containing 2,366 acres, belonging chiefly to Lord Vernon, Sudbury Hall; and S. W. Clowes, Esq., Norbury Hall (who is also lord of the manor.) The ratable value is £3,273, and the population in 1891 was

285. The parish extends about four miles along the Ashbourne and Sudbury road. The surface is undulating, and the soil various—strong in some places, gravelly and sandy in others, and is chiefly in pasture. Cubley is in the hundred of Appletree, the electoral division of Sudbury, county court district and poor law union of Uttoxeter, and petty sessional division and rural deanery of Ashbourne.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Cobelei (Cubley) was held by one Ralph, under Henry de Ferrers, and there were then on the manor a church, a priest, and one mill worth 12d. This Ralph is supposed to have been the ancestor of the Montgomeries, who, according to Glover, are known to have been possessed of this manor as early as A.D. 1160. In 1254 William Montgomery obtained a grant of a market to be held on Mondays, and a fair of three days at the feast of St. Andrew; and his descendant, in 1365, obtained a confirmation of the grant, but both market and fair have long been abandoned. The last male heir of the line, Sir John Montgomery, died in 1513, leaving three daughters, and the one who received this estate as her portion married Sir Thomas Giffard. They had an only daughter and heiress, who became the first wife of Sir John Port, of Etwell; and again the estate fell to a coheiress—the youngest of three sisters—who conveyed it in marriage to Sir Thomas Stanhope, of Shelford. It remained with this family till sold by a late Earl of Chesterfield in recent years.

Cubley was the chief seat of the Montgomeries, and was afterwards one of the seats of the Stanhopes. The hall, which stood a short distance west of the church, was pulled down about the beginning of last century. The moat which surrounded it may still be traced.

The village stands a little off the Ashbourne and Sudbury road, six miles from the former and four miles from the latter, which is also the nearest railway station. The church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is an interesting old edifice, comprising chancel, nave, south aisle, and a lofty tower at the west end, surmounted by an embattled parapet with pinnacles. There are four bells in the tower. The semicircular arches of the aisles are Norman work, as also are the piers that support the later pointed arch of the chancel, and the massive circular font. There are no remains of the church that stood here before the Conquest, and the Norman edifice that succeeded it was largely rebuilt in the Early English style about a century later. The spacious chancel, measuring only one foot less each way than the nave, is of that period; but the east window is an insertion of the 14th century. On the south side of the chancel arch is painted on the plaster, "Mr. John Shirley, Rector, Robt. Whiting, churchwarden, Anno Dom. 1728," from which it is inferred that certain repairs were effected at that time. The chancel was tastefully restored a few years ago by the present rector. The east window, of five lights, is filled with beautiful stained glass, by Messrs. Burlisson and Grylls, in memory of Lebbeus Charles Humfrey, of her Majesty's Council, and Emma, his wife. It was erected by their children in 1874. The other windows of the chancel, two single lancet lights on the south side and two on the north, are filled with ancient glass representing the figures of saints; and a third on the south side, representing St. Andrew, is a memorial of William Yates. The Montgomeries were buried in this church; but only two or three of their monuments, very much mutilated, now remain. Against the north wall of the chancel is an alabaster monument bearing the effigy of a knight in armour, minus the legs and left arm, which have been broken off. The inscription has disappeared, but it is probably the tomb of Sir Nicholas Montgomery, who died in 1435. In the south-east corner is a small effigy of a female, sculptured in high relief. A portion of the inscription, "Here lyeth Catharine * * *," could formerly be read. There are the remains of another ancient monument in the aisle. In the chancel is a tablet to John Lonsdale, D.D., Bishop of Lichfield, who died in 1867; and another to John Davys, late patron of the church, who died in 1872. The tower is in the Perpendicular style, and is ornamented, with sculptured shields of arms, chiefly those of Montgomery. The living is a rectory, net value £380, derived from the tithes, in the gift of the Exors. of the late John Dayys, Esq., and held since 1868 by the Rev. Cave Humfrey. It is held in conjunction with Marston Montgomery. The advowson was attached to the manor until the estate was sold to the late Earl of Chesterfield. The list of rectors is very complete from Robert de Montgomery, who died in 1308, to the present time; and their various names, with dates, are recorded on a board in the church.

The Wesleyans have a chapel here, a substantial brick building, erected in 1874. A new school, with teacher's residence, was built in 1871, for the accommodation of 72 children.

Little Cubley is a hamlet consisting of three farms and two houses, a little west of the church.

The parish is in Sudbury rural district, and elects one district councillor.

CURBAR.

This parish comprises the townships of Curbar, Calver, and Froggatt, containing 2,275 acres, and 790 inhabitants. It is in the hundred of High Peak, electoral division of Baslow, petty sessional division, poor law union and county court and rural district of Bakewell, and deanery of Eyam.

Curbar township, containing 1,119a. 1r. 6p. of land, lies on the east bank of the river Derwent, and belongs solely to the Duke of Rutland, who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £890, and the population in 1891 was 336. The surface is picturesquely diversified by ridges of hills whose tops, in some places, are crested with overhanging rocks. The soil is hazel, lying on gritstone, and is chiefly in meadow and pasture. There is a considerable portion of moorland which abounds with game.

The village is small and of very little importance, but romantically situated on the slope of a lofty hill, and possesses an excellent water supply. A church was erected in 1868, chiefly through the exertions of the Rev. J. Stockdale, vicar of Baslow, and two years later the above townships were assigned to it for a parish. The edifice, which is in the Gothic style, consists of nave, side aisle, south porch, and small bell turret, and cost about £2,000, raised by public subscription, and a grant of £100 from the Incorporated Society for Building Churches, on condition that all the sittings be free. There is accommodation for 349. The Vicarage House stands a little east of the church, and cost £1,500. The living, worth £240 a year, is in the gift of the vicar of Baslow, and held by the Rev. T. F. Salt, B.A. A commodious school, with master's house, was built in 1871, at a further expense of £1,000. There is accommodation for 140 children, and an average attendance of 117.

There is a chapel of the Wesleyan Reform Union here, built in 1861.

On the Baslow Road, a little distance from the village, is Hume Cliff College, where young men are received and trained for foreign missionary work. It was erected at the sole expense of Mr. Hume, and is under the auspices of the Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, of East London Mission.

Under the new Local Government Act five parish councillors have been assigned to Curbar, and it also elects one rural district councillor.

CALVER township lies on the west bank of the Derwent, which is here spanned by a stone bridge of three arches at the junction of two roads. The total extent of land under assessment is 732 acres, ratable value £1,379, and population 371, a decrease of 60 during the previous ten years.

Calver, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was a berewick of Ashford and belonged to the King. The manor was subsequently held by Roger de Boland, whose daughter and heiress married John de Stafford. Humphrey Stafford, who died about the year 1560, left four daughters, coheiresses, one of whom, Gertrude, wife of Rowland Eyre, of Hassop, received as her portion the hamlets of Calver and Rowland. Dorothy Eyre, Countess of Newburgh, sole heiress of her brother Francis, became the second wife of Colonel Leslie, to whom she left all her estates. C. S. Leslie, Esq., of Hassop, is the present lord of the manor and principal landowner.

The village is $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from Baslow, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Bakewell, and about 3 miles from Hassop station, on the Midland Railway. It is picturesquely seated amidst lofty hills, whence some charming views may be obtained. These hills are chiefly composed of limestone, which is extensively quarried for road making and agricultural purposes. Calc-spar is plentiful amongst the limestone, and a considerable quantity of chert (an extremely hard flinty substance) is obtained. Lead mines were formerly worked at Norcliff and Norcliff Sough, but this industry has been abandoned. Near Calver Bridge is an extensive cotton doubling mill, where many of the villagers are employed.

Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, Calver has a parish council of five members, and elects one rural district councillor.

FROGGATT is a small township on the east bank of the Derwent, containing 422½ acres of land, belonging to the Duke of Rutland, Barlborough Hospital, and R. A. Jefferson Maynard, Esq., Rolliston, Burton-on-Trent. The ratable value is £336, and the population in 1891 was 83, a decrease of 53 during the decade. The village is small but pleasantly situated on the bank of the river, three miles north from Baslow, and six miles from Bakewell. Above the village, on the eastern side, rises Froggatt Edge, a dark rugged mountain ridge stretching from Fox House to Curbar. The Derwent is here wide and deep, and is crossed by an ancient stone bridge of two arches. The Wesleyan Reformers have a small chapel, built in 1834. On the Sheffield Road is The Chequers, an hotel where visitors and tourists will find good accommodation. The village feast is held on the first Sunday in August.

For purposes of the Parish and District Councils Act, Nether Padley is united with Froggatt for the election of a rural district councillor.

NORTH DARLEY.

This parish consists of the township of Darley Dale, and formerly included also that of Wensley-with-Snitterton. Its area is 5,095 acres, ratable value £15,958, and the population in 1891 was 2,179, an increase of 331 since the last census. The parish is in the High Peak hundred, county council electoral division of Winster, county court district and petty sessional division of Wirksworth, poor law union and deanery of Bakewell. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, North Darley urban district returns three guardians and 12 urban district councillors.

The parish lies on the east bank of the Derwent, and is intersected by the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland railway, on which there is a station about half-a-mile from the village. The principal landowners are Lady Whitworth, the trustees of James Dakeyne, Esq., Bridgeman Langdale Barrow, Esq., the Rev. Frederick Atkinson, T. W. Potter, Esq., Gilbert Winter, Esq., and A. S. M. Smedley, Esq.

The dale abounds with scenes of picturesque beauty. The Derwent winds its way in many a sinuous bend, fringed here and there with bands of woodland; and beyond, are gently rising hills, clothed in places with a rich growth of timber, cultivated in others, and occasionally exposing to view the gritstone and limestone of which they are formed. The former is extensively quarried by Mr. C. Drabble, proprietor of the Old Bentley Brook and Farley quarries. Mr. Deeley has also a quarry in the parish; and there was formerly an extensive one at Stancliffe, whence was obtained the stone used in the erection of St. George's Hall, Liverpool.

The manor of Darley, at the time of the Domesday Survey, formed part of the demesnes of the Crown; and in the reign of Edward I. it was held in moieties by the families of Kendall and Darley; the former held their portion by an annual payment of 13s. 4d. towards the maintenance of Peak Castle, and their moiety became known as the Old Hall manor. From the Kendalls it passed by marriage to the Cotterels; and was subsequently for some time in the possession of the Foljambes. The heiress of Sir Godfrey Foljambe married Sir Robert Plompton, steward of Knaresborough Castle. It subsequently changed hands several times, and in 1631 was purchased by an ancestor of the Duke of Rutland, the present lord of the manor.

The other moiety of Darley manor, known as Nether Hall manor or Whitwell Hall manor, passed through several generations of the Darley family to Thomas Columbello, of Sandiacre, husband of Agnes, sister and heir to Sir Ralph Darley, who died in 1370. Nether Hall became the chief residence of the Columbells till the extinction of the male line in 1673. Katherine Columbello, sister and heiress of the last owner, married William Marbury, of Marbury, Cheshire, but having no issue, she bequeathed the estate to Gilbert Thacker, who had married her late husband's sister. Shortly afterwards, it was purchased by the Greensmiths, of Wirksworth, and it passed from them to the Beards, by whom it was sold in parcels. In 1790, Nether Hall with the adjoining land was purchased by Mr. Richard Arkwright, who pulled down the ancient manor house, and used the materials in the erection of a house now called Darley Hall, a little lower down the hill.

The village of Darley, or Church Town as it is usually called, stands near the Derwent, three miles N.W. from Matlock, and 19 miles by rail from Derby. The fertile pastures and the beautiful scenery around give the place the aspect of rural felicity. The most interesting object in the village is the fine old church, with its numerous monuments—memorials of men and women who passed away centuries ago. It is dedicated to St. Helen, and consists of chancel with north vestry, nave with side aisles, south porch, north and south transepts, and a west tower containing five bells. There was a church here in Saxon times, but the present edifice dates from the Norman period, though subsequent restorations in the style of architecture that prevailed at the time have nearly obliterated all the original Norman work. The church appears to have been largely rebuilt in the Early English style about the end of the 12th century, as shown by the lancet windows that remain in various parts of the edifice. It was again restored in the Decorated Gothic of the 14th century, and this is now the most prominent style throughout the whole structure. The aisles belong to this period, but the difference in the shape of the pillars supporting the arches on the north and south sides shows that they were not erected at the same time. The chancel is mostly in the same style, but a subsequent restoration is visible in the tracery of the east window. The tower, which shows the Perpendicular style of the 15th century, is embattled, and has a crocketed pinnacle at each angle. The archway into it from the nave, long blocked up, has been opened out, affording a good view of the large west window. The south transept, formerly known as "Columbell's Quire," was the mortuary chapel of the lords of the manor of Netherhall. Here, in a recess in the south wall, lies the effigy of a knight, said by tradition to be Sir John de Darley. He is represented clad in a surcoat over his suit of mail, sword by his side, and holding a heart between his hands. His head is uncovered, and his feet rest on a cushion. The legs are crossed below the knee. The monument of Thomas Columbell, and Agnes his wife, who died in 1540, now in the south aisle, was formerly in this transept. The slab bears the indistinct effigies of a man and woman and a portion of a marginal inscription. The east end of the south aisle is partitioned off by a stone screen of 15th-century work. The enclosed portion, says Dr. Cox, was appropriated to the owners of the Old Hall manor. Here are monuments of the Greensmiths and the Beards. The north transept was the burial place of the Rollesleys or Rowsleys, lords of Little Rowsley, and two memorials of the family still remain. They are the upper slabs of two altar tombs, each bearing the incised figures of man and wife with ten children at their feet, the lines being filled in with pitch. The writer of the marginal inscription on one slab appears to have exhausted his stock of Latin before he had completed his task, and finished it in English. It is as follows:—"Hic jacet corpus Johis Rollislei armigi, Elsabeith uxor ejus, the therde dei of Juns, the yere of owre Lorde a thousand v c and thrithen" (1513). The other is inscribed to John Rousley (son of the above), and Agnes his wife, who died in 1535. Against the north wall of the chancel is a large alabaster monument having kneeling figures of man and wife in the centre, with an escutcheon between them. Below in bas relief are the figures of eight daughters and three sons. At the bottom of the monument are two tablets—one blank, the other inscribed to the pious memory of Anne Millward, wife of John Millward, of Snitterton, Esq., who died 1658.

The church was thoroughly restored in 1854, at a cost of £1,600, and during the progress of the work several very ancient sepulchral slabs were found, some of which were placed in the Bateman Museum, and are consequently lost to the parish. In the porch are preserved upwards of a dozen slabs or portions of slabs bearing incised crosses and other emblems, but there are neither inscriptions nor heraldic devices to tell the names of those whose remains they once covered. One of the most perfect of these slabs bears a cross with a floriated head; on the sinister side of the stem is a sword, and at the base a bugle horn. This tombstone is supposed to be 13th-century work, and to commemorate some ranger of the Forest of the Peak. Drawings of some of these crosses are given in Dr. Cox's very valuable work, "The Churches of Derbyshire," to which we acknowledge our indebtedness on this and many other occasions. The church was restored and refitted, and the churchyard enlarged, about 15 years ago, at an expense of £3,000, the whole of which was munificently borne by Mr. William Roberts. The living is a rectory, formerly held in mediety, both rectors having a residence in the parish. In the valuation of ecclesiastical livings drawn up in the reign of Henry VIII., one mediety was estimated at £10 3s. 4d. per annum, the other at £9 13s. These mediety were united in 1690, and formally amalgamated into a single rectory in 1744, which is now worth £420. It is in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Canon F. Atkinson, M.A. There are 126 acres of glebe. The tithes were commuted in 1838 for £253.

In the churchyard is a magnificent yew tree, said to be the largest and finest specimen in the kingdom. It measures 32 feet in girth, and is supposed to be about 2,000 years old.

There is a good National School in the village, which was rebuilt about 40 years ago; and the Wesleyans have a chapel, erected in 1827. The Whitworth Institute is a handsome building, surrounded by beautiful grounds three or four acres in extent. There are recreation and reading rooms, and a library of 1,000 volumes. A Cottage Hospital was erected by the trustees of the late Sir Joseph Whitworth, Bart., in 1889.

A little south-east is the village of Two Dales, locally corrupted into Toadhole. Here was a flax manufactory, established and long carried on by the Dakeynes, a family famous for their inventions in machinery. The industry has been discontinued for some years. About a mile-and-a-half north is Stancliffe Hall, the seat and property of Lady Whitworth, widow of the late Sir Joseph Whitworth, the celebrated inventor of rifled cannon. The grounds include the once well-known Stancliffe quarry, now converted into a beautiful and picturesque rockery. A little to the east, at the extremity of a little dell, is Sydnope, formerly the residence of the late Sir Francis Darwin.

Darley Flash, Upper Hackney, and Farley are hamlets in the parish. Here are the nurseries of Messrs. James Smith & Sons, occupying about 300 acres of ground, where may be seen growing in native luxuriance the trees, shrubs, heaths, and flowers of every clime "from Indus to the Pole." The varieties are innumerable, and the individual specimens of each species are counted by the thousand. The Charlestown nursery, appropriated to rhododendrons, contains at least a million specimens of that flowering shrub, and forest and ornamental trees and shrubs are quite as numerous. The Siberian nursery is devoted to plants, trees, and shrubs whose habitat is the cold regions of the North; the Canada nursery exemplifies the vegetation of North America. Here are beautiful specimens of the several varieties of the fir and pine, daphnes and mezereon, bearing remarkably fine fragrant bloom in early spring before the leaves have made their appearance. In another nursery are uncountable numbers of beautiful ornamental trees and shrubs for gentlemen's pleasure grounds, whilst another portion of ground is allotted to the cultivation of rose trees, hardy heaths, narcissus, and other flowering plants, which in the summer season are a perfect blaze of colour. Visitors are always welcome, and are conducted through the various nurseries with the greatest courtesy. The nurseries are on a gigantic scale, and every order, however large and varied it might be, placed with Messrs. Smith, can be completed from their Darley Dale nurseries.

The Darley Dale Hydropathic Establishment is a large and handsome stone structure, erected on the most improved plan for the mild water treatment of disease. The sanitary arrangements are perfect, and an equable temperature is maintained throughout the building by its admirable system of hot-water pipes. The rooms are tastefully decorated, and sumptuously furnished. The house stands at a height of 350 feet above the sea-level, but is sheltered from the north and east winds. The park which surrounds it covers about 50 acres, and is entered from the main road by a handsome stone lodge, from which a spacious carriage drive leads to the principal entrance. The scenery around is of a most lovely description.

WENSLEY and SNITTERTON form a joint township in the hundred of Wirksworth and parish of Darley; there are about 2,008 acres of land under assessment; ratable value, £3,622; population, 754. The principal owners are the Exors. of Rev. Mr. Holmes, John Sleigh, Esq., Wm. Garratt, Alport; John Heathcote, Winster; Lady Whitworth, Robert Parker, Mrs. Laura M. Killick, Wm. Wain, Wensley Hall; Peter Bailey, Rowsley; Henry Chas. Heathcote, Winster; Miss Annie Garton, Oker Hill; Trustees of St. John's Hospital, Bake-well; Thomas Allen Rains, Winster; Thomas Coates, Winster; F. C. Arkwright, Esq., Willersley. This district abounds in lead, the famous Mill Close Mine, with its almost inexhaustible supply, being situated here.

At the time of the Domesday Survey Wendesley, or Wensley, was a hamlet of the royal manor of Matlock, but shortly afterwards was included in the parish of Darley. In the reign of Edward I. it formed part of the estates of Edmund Plantagenet. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth it came into the possession of Ralph Blackwall, of Blackwall, by his marriage with the heiress, Anne Wendesley. Subsequently this manor was divided into four portions, and became the property of different families, one of them being the Columbells.

Wensley is a large but irregularly built village, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.S.W. from Darley, occupying a delightful position on an eminence above the Derwent, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. There is a Wesleyan chapel here, with accommodation for 150, built in 1830, also one belonging to the Wesleyan Reformers. The Reading Room and Library, erected at a cost of £1,000, the gift of Joseph Taylor, Esq., of Manchester, is supported by voluntary contributions.

At Snitterton are many good residences, ancient and picturesque. The Hall is a handsome stone mansion with pointed gables, still retaining relics of the past in its old oak panelling and underground passage. Near it is a good farmhouse, erected in 1843 by Mr. John Garton.

The church, dedicated to St. Mary the Virgin, was erected at Cross Green in 1840; and a parochial district, under the name of South Darley or Wensley, comprising the whole township, assigned to it. The edifice is in the Norman style, and consists of nave, chancel, porch, and tower. A fine arch separates the chancel from the nave. The east window is filled with stained glass representing the Crucifixion, and is inscribed: "To the glory of God, and to perpetuate the memory of Joseph and Sarah Taylor, 1891." The living, a perpetual curacy valued at £126, is at present held by the Rev. E. A. Hadfield. The school has been recently enlarged, and affords accommodation for about 170; number on registers, 150; average attendance, 118.

A short distance westward from Darley station is Oker Hill, a solitary eminence rising abruptly from the plain. Its surface is picturesquely uneven, but with the exception of two sycamores that crown its summit, there is a total absence of foliage. Tradition says these trees were planted by two brothers, who, by mutual consent, separated here to meet no more. Wordsworth has made this story the subject of one of his sonnets:—

" 'Tis said that to the brow of yon fair hill
Two brothers clomb; and turning face from face
Nor one look more exchanging, grief to still,
Or feed, each planted on that lofty place
A chosen tree. Then eager to fulfil Their courses, like two new-born rivers, they
In opposite directions urged their way Down from the far-seen mount. No blast might kill
Or blight that fond memorial. The trees grew,
And now entwine their arms; but ne'er again
Embraced those brothers upon earth's wide plain,
Nor aught of mutual joy or sorrow knew,
Until their spirits mingled in the sea
That to itself takes all—Eternity!"

The Romans had a fortress or a camp here, to overawe the conquered Britons and protect the lead mines. They called it in their own language Occursus (the place of attack or hill of conflict), of which the present name Oker is a corruption. Many Roman coins and instruments of war have been found here, and indications of the entrenchments may still be traced.

DETHICK AND LEA.

Dethick and Lea form a chapelry and township, the latter including also the hamlet of Holloway for all civil purposes. The total area is 1,820 acres; rateable value, £4,829; and the population 1,058. It is in the hundred of Scarsdale, county council division of Matlock, petty sessional division and county court district of Wirksworth, union of Belper, and deanery of Alfreton. Under the new Local Government Act Dethick, Lea, and Holloway have a parish council of seven members, and elect one guardian and one rural district councillor.

Dethick is a hamlet and manor comprising three farms, belonging to Major Hallows, who is also lord of the manor. The earliest recorded owners were a family who took their name from the place, and resided here as early as the reign of Henry III. Thomas Dethick, the last male heir of the elder line, was slain in battle, together with his father, in the reign of Henry VI., and his eldest sister and co-heiress married Thomas Babington. The fourth in descent from this gentleman was the unfortunate Anthony Babington, a young man of ample fortune, ardent and chivalrous, and a devoted admirer of the captive Queen of Scots. Through the perfidious wiles of one Pooley, a spy in the pay of Queen Elizabeth's secretary, Walsingham, he and several other gentlemen were induced to join in a conspiracy which had for its object the assassination of Elizabeth and the liberation of Mary Queen of Scots. Walsingham, if not the originator, was cognisant of the plot from its beginning, and the conspirators—fourteen in number—finding they had been betrayed, sought safety in concealment, but were shortly afterwards taken, tried, and condemned in September, 1586. By the desire of Queen Elizabeth their execution was carried out in a most barbarous manner, so as to "protract the extremitie of payne." Aware of the penalty which failure in such a treasonable enterprise would subject him to, Babington made over the Dethick estate to his younger brother, George, before engaging in the conspiracy, but the rest of his lands were confiscated, and given to Sir Walter Raleigh. George Babington was a man of extravagant habits, and becoming involved in pecuniary difficulties the estate was sold to Wendesley Blackwall, Esq., and about 1680 it became the property of Samuel Hallowes, Esq., from whom it has descended to the present owners.

The church, or rather chapel, of Dethick, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, was founded in 1279 by Geoffrey Dethick and Thomas, prior of Felley Monastery, in Nottinghamshire. In 1312 a chantry was founded in this chapel by Roger de Wyngerworth, who endowed it with lands of the value of 20s. yearly. The edifice was restored and the tower rebuilt by one of the Babingtons in 1535, but a considerable portion of the original work remains in the nave and chancel. The clerestory windows on each side, an unusual feature where there are no side aisles, were probably added at that time. The tower, light and elegant, is surmounted by battlements, which were renewed in 1866. Below the bell chamber windows is a broad frieze or belt, on which are sculptured numerous shields of arms, now much defaced from the effects of the elements. The living, net value £110, is in the gift of the lord of the manor, and held by the Rev. C. H. Leacroft, who is also vicar of Brackenfield.

LEA is a hamlet and populous village closely adjoining Dethick, and 2½ miles from Cromford station on the Midland railway. This manor belonged to Robert de Alveley in the reign of King John. He left two daughters coheireses, the elder of whom married a Ferrers, whose son sold his moiety of the manor to Sir Geoffrey Dethick, from whom it descended to the Babingtons. The younger daughter married one of the De la Leas, and this moiety was sold by her descendant to the Frechevilles, from whom it was purchased, in the 14th century, by a younger son of Sir Ralph Rolleston, remaining with this family till the latter part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when this branch of the Rollestons became extinct. It then passed to the Pershalls of Horsley, Stafford, by one of whom it was sold to Hodgkinson and Cowley. In 1707, it was purchased by Peter Nightingale, Esq., and Lea Hurst became the residence of that family. The mansion, seated high up amongst rocks and woods, is chiefly interesting from its association with Florence Nightingale, the heroine of the Crimea. This lady, the younger daughter of W. E. Nightingale, Esq., owner of the estate, was born to wealth and luxury, but she preferred to emulate the noble band of Sisters of Mercy in their endeavours to alleviate suffering. She underwent training for the work at the Protestant Deaconesses' Institution at Kaiserworth, and after three years' preparation she entered on her life's work. The Crimean War had commenced and the hospitals were crowded. Her proffered services were accepted, and, accompanied by a picked band of helpers, she left England for Scutari, where, with an utter disregard of self, she tended the sick and wounded and snatched many a brave fellow from the grip of Death. Lea Hurst is now the residence of Sir Joseph Cocksey Lee, who received the honour of knighthood in 1882, in reward for his services in the commercial negotiations with France.

The village of Lea stands 2½ miles east from Cromford station. Lea Hall, a quaint old house, was the residence of the early lords of the manor, and here was formerly a chapel, dedicated to St. Mary, founded by Robert Alveley in the reign of King John. Roger de Wingerworth, founder of the Dethick chantry, also founded one in this chapel, endowing it with lands of the value of 20s. yearly for the maintenance of a priest. This chantry was suppressed in the reign of Edward VI., and the building was subsequently converted into a barn, which was standing in the early years of the present century. By the side of a Gothic window was inscribed "Anno Domini, 1478. Thys chapel was made."

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, erected by the late Joseph Wass, Esq., at a cost of £1,000. In 1856, a further sum of £500 was expended on it by Mrs. Wass, who maintained it for several years. The United Methodist Free Church was erected in 1852, and enlarged in 1879. It is a neat stone building with a turret containing one bell, and is licensed for marriages. The Rev. Samuel Tomlin is the resident minister. There is a good school in the village under the management of a school board of seven members. In addition to the subjects usually taught in elementary schools there are classes in geology, which is taught in a practical and interesting manner.

The staple industries of the township are the manufacture of hosiery, and lead smelting. The former is carried on at the Lea Mills, where, in the various departments, upwards of 1,000 hands are employed. The goods turned out at these works have a wide reputation, and a large home and export trade is done. Lead smelting has been carried on here for more than one hundred years, and for upwards of half that period the works have been in the hands of the Wass family. The late Edward Miller Wass, who undertook the management after the death of his father, introduced numerous improvements, and the old system of dressing the ore by hand was superseded by machinery, by which two per cent. more lead was obtained from the ore. He invested largely in mining properties, and is said to have spent not less than £75,000 in unremunerative "adventures and trials."

Holloway is a scattered village and hamlet adjoining Lea, and is included in this township for civil purposes, but in ecclesiastical matters it is under Crich. W. E. Nightingale is lord of the manor and principal owner. The Primitive Methodists have a neat chapel here, built near the site of the old one at a cost of £1,300. There is a good hotel called the Yew Tree, conveniently situated and well equipped for the reception of visitors.

DOVERIDGE.

This is a parish and township containing 4,375½ acres of land, on the bank of the river Dove. This river is the natural boundary between Derbyshire and Staffordshire; but having deviated from its original course in several places, there are about 57½ acres of land belonging to this parish lying on the Staffordshire side of the river. The total ratable value is £9,200, and the population in 1891 was 735. Doveridge is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral and petty sessional division and rural district of Sudbury, poor law union and county court district of Uttoxeter, and deanery of Longford. The parish council consists of six councillors, and the parish also elects two guardians, or rural district councillors. The principal landowners are Lord Waterpark (who is lord of the manor), East Lodge; Lord Vernon, Sudbury Hall; the Marquis of Ormonde; C. W. Jervis Smith, Esq., Broxford Hall; and Captain Holland.

The manor of Doveridge (Dubrige in Domesday Book), which had belonged to Edwin, the last Earl of Mercia, was held at the time of the Norman Survey by the monks of Tutbury under Henry de Ferrers. It had formed part of the dowry of Bertha, his wife, and by her was given to the priory of Tutbury. There was then a church on the manor, the advowson of which was included in the gift, and in the following century the monks became possessed of two-thirds of the tithes, the remaining third being allotted to the vicar for his support. The monks also obtained Holt Park, or Holt Wood, to which Sir William de Eyton and Henry Deneston quitted claim. After the dissolution of monasteries, the manor of Doveridge and Doveridge Holt was granted by Edward VI. to Sir William Cavendish, who received a considerable share of church plunder. In 1792 Sarah, wife of Sir Henry Cavendish, Bart., was advanced to the peerage of Ireland by the title of Baroness Waterpark, of Waterpark, co. Cork. The peerage and baronetcy, with Doveridge estate, descended to her eldest son Richard. The present Baron is his grandson.

Doveridge Hall, the seat of Lord Waterpark, and at present occupied by Frank Addison Brace, Esq., J.P., is a large brick mansion, with stone dressings and pillars, seated on an eminence by the river Dove, whence there are some beautiful views of the adjacent country. The house was built in 1763, and stands within its own enclosed grounds, some 25 acres in extent. The kitchen garden covers three acres, and the pleasure grounds about two acres. There are six vineries, five peach houses, two fig houses, two orchid houses, and many other glass structures appropriated to various horticultural purposes.

The village, formerly called Dovebridge and Doubridge, stands on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, 16 miles W. from the former and two miles E. from the latter, where also is the nearest railway station. The church, which is dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is a venerable looking edifice of stone, partially covered with ivy. It consists of chancel, nave, with side aisles, and an embattled tower, with octagonal spire, containing a clock and five bells. There are no remains of the old Norman church, but of the Early English one that succeeded it there are several interesting fragments, namely, the lancet windows (single and double) in the chancel and tower. The aisles were rebuilt in the Decorated period, but evidently not at one time. The arches of the north aisles are three in number, whilst the south aisle has four, and not so lofty. The clerestory was added in the 15th century, and at the same time the original high-pitched roof gave place to the present flat one. In 1840 the church was re-pewed and repaired at a cost of £300. In 1720, according to the churchwardens' accounts, Charles Richardson, of Auston, Staffordshire, contracted to point the steeple, both on the inside and the outside, and to fasten the weathercock with lead, for the sum of six pounds. The interior of the church underwent restoration in 1869, and the spire and roof have been recently put in good repair. The east window of five lights is an insertion of the Perpendicular period, and is now filled with plain glass. The five single lancet lights on the north side of the chancel are of earlier date. Four of them are filled with stained glass, in memory of recent members of the Cavendish family; and a double light on the south side is a memorial of the Hon. and Rev. Thomas Cavendish, for 20 years vicar of this parish, erected by the congregation. There are several monuments of this family in the church, dating from the 17th century, and an alabaster slab, which once bore the incised figures of a knight and his lady. The inscription, now illegible, recorded the burial of Ralph Okeover, Esq., who died in 1495, and Agnes, his wife. There is another ancient slab at the west end of the north aisle, bearing the incised figure of a priest, in vestments. The inscription is illegible. On the south wall of the chancel is a large monument, bearing two life-sized figures in the attitude of prayer, and below are the effigies of three girls kneeling, and an infant in its cradle. It is to the memory of William Davenport, of Henbury, in Cheshire, who died in 1640, and Mary, his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Milward, of Eaton Dovedale, "who consum'd to death on Epiphany, 1639." There is a monument to Sir Thomas Milward in the south aisle. He was chief justice of Chester, and died in 1658. The earliest Cavendish memorial is that of Francis, who died in 1650, and Dorothy, his wife, who died in 1658. The Hon. George John Cavendish, Vice-Admiral R.N., third son of the second Lord Waterpark, who died at Lyne Grove, Surrey, in 1865, is commemorated by a stained glass window, and also by a monument. The latter was erected by his labourers and the poor of Lyne as a mark of grateful love and esteem.

A chantry was founded at the altar of the Blessed Virgin in this church by Robert Kniveton, vicar of the parish, in 1393. He endowed it with lands and premises for the maintenance of a priest and five poor people.

In the churchyard, standing on a stone base, ascended by four steps, is the shaft of the old churchyard cross, believed to be coeval with the chancel and tower. Near the cross is an exceptionally fine old yew tree, the trunk of which measures 22 feet in girth.

The registers date from 1574.

The living is a vicarage, endowed with the rectorial tithes of West Broughton and 82 acres of glebe. Its present net value is £475. Patron, the Duke of Devonshire; incumbent, the Rev. Chas. Jas. Hamilton, M.A., Trin. Coll., Camb., canon of Southwell, who was inducted in 1870.

The Wesleyans have a chapel in the village. It is a neat building of brick, erected in 1805, with a small burial ground attached.

The school, built in 1841, has a small endowment, left by Isaac Dance in 1786, and is chiefly supported by Government grant and the vicar. There is accommodation for 112, and the average attendance amounts to that number.

Broxford Hall, recently erected by Chas. Wm. Jervis Smith, Esq., J.P., is a handsome mansion of red brick, with stone dressings, in the Modern Elizabethan style, situated about one mile east of the village. It is named after the brook that flows hard by.

West Broughton is a hamlet and manor in the south-eastern corner of the parish, belonging chiefly to Lord Vernon. There was formerly an ancient chapel here, but not a trace of it remains, nor is anything known of its history.

Eaton and Sedsall form a hamlet situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles N.W. of Doveridge. The manor of Eaton Dovedale belonged in the reign of Edward I. to the family of St. Pierre, whose heiress brought it to Walter Cokesey in 1356. From this family it passed by marriage to the Russels. Sir John Russel died seized of it in 1556, and shortly afterwards it was purchased by the Milwards. Elizabeth, daughter, and eventually heiress, of Sir Thomas Milward, brought it to the Clarkes, of Somersall, the Wandesfords, of Castlecomer, Ireland, from whom it has descended to the Marquis of Ormonde. At his mansion here Sir Thomas Milward is said to have entertained Charles I. A farmhouse now occupies the site of the Old Hall, but the original cellars remain.

Holt Wood is an extra-parochial and tithe-free liberty, formerly belonging to the monks of Tutbury. It comprises one farm.

Several small charities have been left at various times for the benefit of the poor of Doveridge, and the income is distributed by the churchwardens.

EARL STERNDALE.

This is a modern parish, comprising the township of Hartington Middle Quarter. The ratable area is 4,938½ acres, but the total extent of the parish, according to the Diocesan Calendar, is 33,000 acres. The assessed value of the township is £3,761, and the population 341. Hartington Middle Quarter is in the hundred of Wirksworth; electoral division of Tideswell; petty sessional division, poor law union, and county court district of Bakewell; and rural deanery of Buxton. Under the provisions of the Parish Councils Act five councillors have been assigned to the parish of Hartington Middle Quarter, and one rural district councillor.

The principal landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, lord of the manor; Exors. of Robert Finney; Exors. of Mr. Gardom; Sir T. F. F. Boughey, Bart.; Richard Gould, Esq., Biggin Hall; Exors. of F. Briggs; Mr. Lucas; T. H. Lockett, Leek; Mrs. Faulkner, Alport; Exors. of Wm. Finney; Richard Weaver, Macclesfield; Mrs. Grindey; James Bagshaw, Earl Sterndale; Thos. Bradley, Hyde; Joseph Hand; Exors. of T. W. Bateman, Esq., Middleton Hall; and S. Melland, Esq., Monyash.

The township stretches along the east bank of the upper reach of the river Dove. The scenery is picturesque and pleasingly diversified, though less bold and romantic than in the lower portion of Dovedale. The land rises to lofty cliffs, each of which bears a distinctive name, Croom, Parker's Hill, Glutton, Tor Rock, &c. The High Peak and Cromford Railway passes through the township, and is here joined by a branch of the London and North-Western, which was opened for passenger traffic in June, 1894.

Earl Sterndale, from which the ecclesiastical parish takes its name, is a small but pleasant village, 6½ miles N. by W. from Hartington, 5 S.E. from Buxton, and 1½ from Hindlow Station. A chapel-of-ease to Hartington was erected here at an early date. It is mentioned in an inventory of church goods taken in the reign of Edward VI. This chapel was repaired in 1793; but it soon afterwards became so utterly ruinous that a Brief was obtained to raise funds for rebuilding it. The chapel was taken down in 1828, and the present edifice built on a larger scale, giving 100 additional sittings. It is dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, and consists of chancel, nave, and a small embattled western tower, in which three bells were hung in 1866. The lighting of the edifice has been greatly improved by the introduction of cathedral lamps, obtained chiefly through the effort and contribution of Mrs. Eliz. Finney, of Abbot Grove. The registers begin with the year 1768. The living is a vicarage, worth £180, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. Gordon Robertson, M.A.; the Rev. Montague Scott, B.A., is curate-in-charge.

The Church School is endowed with the interest of £1,000, left by Thomas Lomas, of Glutton, in 1853. There are 47 children in average attendance.

Crowdycote is a hamlet and small village, situate on the Longnor road, close to the river Dove, two miles S. by E. from Earl Sterndale. High Needham is a small village on the Bakewell and Longnor road, one mile E. from Crowdycote. Hurdlow is another small village near the High Peak Railway, two miles E. from Earl Sterndale. The farms are mentioned by name in the directory.

CHARITIES.—James Hill, in 1712, left £2 yearly for the education of four poor children of this place. He also left a sum of money, now invested in land, for the endowment of the living, and a small library of 24 books "for all who come to read them." Rowland Heathcote, by will in 1819, left £40 for the benefit of the poor; and Thomas Lomas, by will in 1853, left £100 to the needy and poor.

EDENSOR.

This parish comprises the townships of Edensor, Chatsworth, and Pilsley, containing about 4,000 acres of land and 523 inhabitants. It is in the High Peak hundred, county council electoral division of Baslow, petty sessional division, county court district, union, and deanery of Bakewell. Edensor forms, with Chatsworth, a united parish, returning one rural district councillor.

Edensor township occupies a beautiful stretch of country lying between Bakewell and Chatsworth, and embraces 2,286 acres; ratable value £2,553, and population 246. The Duke of Devonshire is the sole owner.

The manor of Ednesoure, as the name is written in Domesday Book, was part of the vast estates given by the Conqueror to Henry de Ferrers. The mesne seigniorship was subsequently vested for several generations in the ancestors of the Shirley family, by one of whom (Fulcher) the church of Edensor was given to the monastery of Rocester, in Staffordshire. The manor afterwards belonged to the Foljambes, whose heiress brought it to Sir Robert Plumptre. Sir Wm. Plumptre, the son of Sir Robert, died seized of the manor in 1480, and his two grand-daughters, his co-heiresses, married Sothill and Rocliff. One moiety passed by marriage to the Cliffords, and was purchased by the Countess of Shrewsbury; Sir Ralph Langford died seized of the other moiety in 1513, but the whole manor has long been in the possession of the Cavendish family.

The village of Edensor, described in the guide books as a model village—a kind of sanitary Eden—stands just without the entrance to Chatsworth Park, 2½ miles N.E. from Bakewell and 2 miles from Bakewell station, on the Midland railway. The whole village has been rebuilt, and, though it has lost the picturesqueness of antiquity, there is an indescribable charm in its primness and neatness, which is heightened by the beauty of its sylvan surroundings. The houses are built in pairs, in the villa fashion, and in various styles of architecture—Anglo-Italian, Swiss, Gothic, Castellated, Elizabethan, &c. Each house has its flower garden in front, which is laid out with mathematical precision. The utmost order and neatness everywhere prevail, and the grass by the roadside is trimmed with as much care as if it were a garden lawn or pleasure ground. The inhabitants are, almost without exception, employed in some way or other on the Chatsworth estate.

The church, dedicated to St. Peter, is a strikingly beautiful edifice, rebuilt in the Decorated style under the direction of the late Sir Gilbert Scott, R.A., and completed in 1870. It consists of chancel with Cavendish chapel on the south side, nave, side aisles, porch, and west tower surmounted by a graceful spire. The old church dated from Norman times, and as much of the venerable fabric as could possibly be utilised has been preserved in the present building. The nave is separated from the aisles by four pointed arches on each side, four of which belonged to the old church. The porch also, with some restoration, is a remnant of that edifice; and some of the old tracery may be seen in one or two of the windows. The sedilia is modern and of beautiful design, and the pulpit and font, constructed of alabaster and various-coloured marbles from the Duke's estates, are exquisite pieces of sculpture. The east window of the chancel consists of three main lights and tracery, and is filled with stained glass by Burlinson & Gryll, in memory of Lord Edward Cavendish. Against the north wall is an interesting mural brass to the memory of John Beton, a confidential servant of Mary Queen of Scots, who accompanied the captive queen to Chatsworth in 1570, and died there of dysentery the same year. It bears a long Latin inscription, surrounded by a neatly executed border. Above are the arms of Beton between two cherubim, and below is engraved the small effigy of a knight in plate armour, lying on an altar tomb.

The Cavendish or Monumental Chapel is as spacious and imposing as the chancel. The east window, by Hardman & Co., of Birmingham, is an exceptionally fine one, given by the Derbyshire tenants in sorrowful memory of Lord Frederick Cavendish, who was murdered in Phoenix Park, Dublin, May 6th, 1882. In this chapel is an elaborate and costly monument, in alabaster, to the memory of William, first Earl of Devonshire, who died in 1625, and his brother Henry. It is adorned with several life-size figures, sculptured in relief. In the centre Fame is represented blowing a trumpet and holding two tablets, on which are inscribed two long eulogistic epitaphs in Latin. Under an open altar tomb lie two figures, one a skeleton, the other in a winding sheet with head exposed; on either side are sculptured the armour, helmets and robes of the deceased, and above are the Cavendish arms. The monument is flanked on one side by a statue of Minerva, and on the other by Mars, typifying the wisdom and martial qualities of the deceased. In striking contrast with this richly sculptured monument, and its windy epitaphs, is the tomb of the sixth Duke, in the churchyard, uninscribed and bearing no adornment except the emblem of redemption. The west window is a memorial of John Gregory Cottingham, for many years steward of the Chatsworth and other estates of William, seventh Duke of Devonshire. There is a fine organ in the church, by Bishop & Sons, and the tower contains a peal of six sweet-toned bells, from the foundry of J. Taylor, Loughborough. The living is a perpetual curacy worth £300 per annum, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. Joseph Hall.

There is an excellent school for boys over eight years of age, supported by His Grace the Duke of Devonshire. Girls attend the school at Pilsley. A school was founded here in 1734 by John Phillips, who left £50 for the purpose and £100 for the poor. There is accommodation for 50 boys, and an average attendance of 41.

Near the Swiss Lodge is Chatsworth Hotel, a commodious establishment, under excellent management, where visitors and tourists may obtain every accommodation.

CHATSWORTH township, formerly an extra-parochial liberty, contains 1,291 acres, belonging solely to the Duke of Devonshire; ratable value, £1,819; and population, 51. It is two miles S. from Baslow, two miles N.E. from Rowsley, and about three miles from Bakewell station. The manor of Chatsworth, at the time of the Domesday Survey, was a Crown possession, in the custody of William Peverel. For several generations it was the property of a family named Leche or Leech, one of whom was leech or surgeon to King Edward III. This family became extinct about the middle of the 16th century by the death of Francis Leche, but he had previously sold the manor to the Agards, of whom it was afterwards purchased by Sir William Cavendish, husband of the famous "Bess of Hardwick," and it still remains in the possession of his descendants. The Cavendish family is one of the oldest and most illustrious in the county of Derby. They trace their descent from one of the branches of the Gernons, whose ancestor, Robert de Gernon, came over with William the Conqueror, and held an important command at the battle of Hastings, and received considerable grants of land in Hertfordshire, Gloucestershire, and other counties. Godfrey de Gernon, one of his descendants, lived at Moor Hall, near Bakewell, in the reign of Edward I. Roger, his son, married the daughter and heiress of John Pottin or Potkins, lord of the manor of Cavendish, in Suffolk, and in accordance with the custom of the age the children took the name of Cavendish, in compliment to their mother. John, the eldest son, became Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench. He lived in times of political unrest, when the people, maddened by tyranny and oppression, broke out in open rebellion. Sir John distinguished himself by suppressing an insurrection in the city of York, but was taken on his return by the insurgents in Suffolk, and beheaded at Bury St. Edmunds. Sir John Cavendish, his son, is said to have been the person who actually killed Wat Tyler, the rebel leader, for which he received the honour of knighthood and a pension of £40 per annum. He was one of the esquires of the body to Richard II. and Henry V., and to the latter he was also embroiderer of the wardrobe. From his brother Roger was descended Captain Thomas Cavendish, the second Englishman who sailed round the world. The fourth in direct descent from Sir John Cavendish was Sir William, who attained to great distinction in the reign of Henry VIII., through the influence of Cardinal Wolsey. He was appointed one of the commissioners for visiting religious houses; and received extensive grants of monastic lands, which was the foundation of their future wealth and greatness. He also received the honour of knighthood, and was appointed treasurer of the chamber to the King, which office he continued to hold in the reigns of Edward VI. and Queen Mary, when he was appointed a privy councillor. He married for his third wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John Hardwicke, of Hardwicke, and widow of Robert Barley, whose large estates she inherited under settlement. She had a large family by Sir William Cavendish, and after his death she married Sir William Saint Loe, Captain of the Guard to the Queen, and the owner of broad estates in Gloucestershire. In each matrimonial engagement she had an eye to business, and in the present case succeeded, by her bewitching charms, in obtaining a settlement of Saint Loe's lands upon herself and her heirs, to the exclusion of his own daughters by a former wife, and his brothers. He did not survive the marriage very long, and Bess being still comparatively young and handsome, was again sought in marriage, her suitor being no less a person than George Talbot, sixth Earl of Shrewsbury. The earl was a widower and had a family of sons and daughters. She saw that an attempt to obtain a settlement of his immense wealth on her, to the exclusion of his own children, would be futile, but she was clever enough to perceive how she could obtain her object in another way. Before she would accept the earl, she insisted that he should give two of his children in marriage to two of hers. She had a mania for building, and erected three of the finest mansions ever raised by one person in the same county, Chatsworth, Hardwick Hall, and Oldcotes. Lodge, in his "Illustrations of British History," thus sums up her character: "She was a woman of masculine understanding and conduct—proud, furious, selfish, and unfeeling. She was a builder, a buyer and seller of estates, a money lender, a farmer, a merchant of lead, coals, and timber. When disengaged from these employments she intrigued alternately with Elizabeth and Mary, always to the prejudice and terror of her husband. She lived to a great old age, continually flattered but seldom deceived, and died immensely rich and without a friend in 1607."

Henry Cavendish, her eldest son, married the Earl of Shrewsbury's daughter, but dying without issue the vast estates descended to the second son, Sir William Cavendish, who was elevated to the peerage in 1605, as Baron Cavendish of Hardwicke, and in 1618, as a reward for his distinguished services, he was advanced to an earldom, as Earl of Devonshire. He died in 1625, and lies buried in Edensor Church, where the costly monument before mentioned records his memory. He was twice married, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

William, second earl, a nobleman distinguished for his classical knowledge and mental attainments. He was educated under the care of the celebrated Thomas Hobbes, the philosopher and author, with whom he travelled on the continent. He was a man of lavish expenditure, and considerably encumbered his estates. He died in 1628, and was succeeded by his son, William, the third earl, then in his twelfth year. His mother, by careful and economical management during his minority, cleared off the debts which his father left behind. In the Civil Wars he espoused the cause of Charles I., and suffered severely for his loyalty. His mansion at Chatsworth was by turns occupied as a fortress by the Royalists and Roundheads. The fourth earl, also named William, eldest son of the above, was a distinguished statesman, and had considerable reputation as a poet and a man of letters. He was one of the principal actors in the Revolution of 1688, which placed William the Dutchman on the throne of the last Stuart King. For this service he was handsomely rewarded by William III. with a marquissate; and subsequently with a dukedom. He rebuilt the whole of Chatsworth House, with the exception of the north wing. The work was commenced in 1687 under the direction of William Talman, an architect and comptroller of the King's works. The succeeding dukes also held important offices of the State. The first wife of the fifth duke was Lady Georgiana Spencer, "the beautiful duchess," whose portrait so mysteriously disappeared a few years ago. William Spencer Cavendish, the sixth duke, was a nobleman of highly cultured and refined tastes, and added the magnificent north wing to Chatsworth House. He did not take any active part in political affairs, and dying unmarried in 1858 was succeeded by his cousin, William, Earl of Burlington. The latter died in 1891, at the ripe age of 83, and was succeeded by his only surviving son, Spencer Compton, the present illustrious holder of the title.

Chatsworth House, justly styled the "Palace of the Peak," is palatial, both in its magnitude and its magnificence, whilst the beauty of its surroundings almost baffles description. It stands on gently rising ground, within a park, about eleven miles in circuit, dotted with swelling hills, luxuriant woods, and velvety lawns, and stocked with cattle and brown and fallow deer. The silvery Derwent, winding in sinuous course amidst gentle undulations, adds its riparian charms to the beauty of the scene. It approaches within 200 or 300 yards of the mansion, and is here crossed by an elegant bridge of three arches, said to have been designed by Michael Angelo, and adorned with marble statues carved by Cibber.

The principal front of the house faces the west, and presents a most imposing appearance. The older portion of the building, consisting of an immense quadrangle, was commenced in 1687, and occupied about 20 years in construction. The style is Ionic; the west front is in three divisions, the centre one, projecting a little forward, is relieved by four fluted columns which support an ornamental frieze and pediment, in the tympanum of which is a shield surrounded by military trophies carved in stone, charged with the arms of the Cavendish family. The compartments on each side are relieved by pilasters of the same order. The south and east sides present similar characteristics, but with less elaboration of detail. Around the top are carried light and elegant balustrades, surmounted by vases and allegorical figures. The more modern portion, forming the northern wing, was erected by the fifth Duke. The work was begun in 1820, and the designs were furnished by Sir Jeffrey Wyatville. It differs somewhat from the older part. The outline is more broken and varied, and the plan more elaborate; yet there is no abruptness, no incongruity, the happy blending of the classical styles producing a most pleasing and harmonious effect. This wing is 385 feet long, giving a total length of the whole, from north to south, of 557 feet. The stone, which was obtained from quarries in the vicinity, is of a delicate cream colour, which is happily relieved by the dark foliage of the woods which form the background. At the northern extremity of the wing is an Italian tower, or open temple, surmounted by a balustrade, from which beautiful views of the varied scenery of the park are obtained.

As this is not a handbook we can only glance cursorily at the principal apartments and their chief treasures. Everything about the place, both without and within, bears evidence of the classic taste of the family by whom it was erected. The Porter's Lodge at the entrance is a handsome Doric structure forming three archways with richly gilded gates of wrought iron. Beyond, in a square plot in front of the entrance to the house, stands a fine weeping ash, which was removed hither in 1830 from the nursery grounds of Messrs. Wilson, of Derby, where it had been growing 40 years. A colonnade leads to the Sub Hall, or Entrance Hall, with its beautiful tessellated pavement and painted ceiling. The latter was executed by a gifted lady artist, Miss Curzon, and its principal feature is a representation of "Aurora," a copy of Guido's. A Corridor, paved with marble mosaics and adorned with statues and busts of classical personages, leads to the Great Hall, a magnificent apartment 60 feet in length and nearly half as wide, with a beautiful mosaic floor in black and white marble, laid in 1779 by Henry Watson, son of the celebrated sculptor. The walls and ceiling glow with beautiful paintings, by Verrio and Laguerre, illustrating the life and death of Julius Cæsar. Columns of polished marble adorn the sides of the apartment, and in the centre, on a boldly carved and gilt stand, is a remarkably large slab of fossil marble (Derbyshire), and near it is the ornamental canoe presented by the Sultan of Turkey. The ends of this magnificent room are divided into triple archways. The Grand Staircase has a double flight of steps of rock amethyst and variegated alabaster, guarded by a richly gilt balustrade. The Chapel is a perfect gem. The floor is laid with black and white marble in mosaic work, and the walls are wainscoted with cedar wood, which emits a delicate fragrance. The altar is a beautiful piece of work in Derbyshire spars and marbles, and is adorned with figures of Faith and Hope by Caius Gabriel Cibber. The walls and ceiling are embellished with scenes from the life of Christ, by Verrio and Laguerre, and there is also some beautiful wood carving, said to be by Gibbons. The South Gallery contains upwards of a thousand original drawings, outlines, and sketches, representing the work of the great masters of the Flemish, Florentine, Venetian, Spanish, and French schools—Raffaello, Titian, Rubens, Corregio, Salvator Rosa, Claude Lorraine, Poussin, Rembrandt, Da Vinci, and others. The State Rooms occupy the upper story of the south front, and extend nearly 200 feet in length. The embellishments and furnishings are of the richest and choicest description. The ceilings have been exquisitely painted by Verrio and Sir James Thornhill, the subjects being chiefly of a mythological character; the walls are lined with choice woods and hung with Gobelin tapestries of the cartoons of Raffaello; the door-cases are of the finest Derbyshire marble, and the floors are of oak parqueterie. Costly cabinets, statuary, pictures, curiosities, &c., adorn the various rooms. The wood carvings in the State Dining Room are the finest pieces of sculpture ever produced. A group over the mantelpiece, representing dead game, fish, fruit, flowers, &c., is a marvellous piece of work, so true to nature in every detail that were it not for the absence of colour the counterfeit might be mistaken for a reality. This work is usually attributed to Gibbons but some ascribe it to Watson. In this room is a magnificent table of polished malachite, and an elegant timepiece of the same material, the one presented by Alexander I., Emperor of Russia, and the other by the late Czar Nicholas. The Libraries form a suite of rooms, and when the doors are all open the effect is a magnificent vista, extending 560 feet in length. The Great Library contains a rich collection of ancient manuscripts and about 25,000 volumes of ancient and modern works. The ceiling is gemmed with circular paintings, surrounded by ornamental work in basso relievo on a pure white ground, and the doors and bookcases are all of Spanish mahogany and highly polished. The Sculpture Gallery, upwards of 100 feet in length, is artistically lighted from above. Here is to be seen the finest private collection of sculpture in the country. The statues, about forty in number, rest on costly pedestals and pillars of marble, porphyry, granite, breccia, &c. The collection includes the works of the most celebrated native and foreign sculptors, Canova, Bartolini, Trantanova, Tenerani, Thorwaldsen, Schadow, Ressels, Gibson, Westmacott, Campbell, Powis, Wyatt, &c. To describe in detail, or even enumerate these "chiselled forms of classic beauty," would occupy more space than is at our disposal. We can only particularize a few of the most interesting. The "Sleeping Endymion" with his dog watching at his feet, an exquisite piece of work by Canova; a life-like bust of Napoleon Buonaparte, and a statue of his mother by the same artist. Schadow's "Venus Filatrice, or Spinning Girl," will attract attention. It stands on a pedestal made out of the fragment of a column of Trajan's Forum, at Rome. The "Venus Musidora," of Wyatt, is worthy of notice; and Thorwaldsen's "Night," and "Morning," two beautiful poetical conceptions, will bear the closest study. Near the entrance are two colossal lions in Carrara marble, one by Rinaldi, the other by Benaglia, and each about four tons weight. Gibson's work is represented by a colossal group, "Mars and Cupid," and Westmacott by the "Cymbal Player." In the centre of the room stands a gigantic Meklenberg vase, by Canteen. It is twenty feet in circumference, and sculptured out of one block of granite. Near this are two beautiful tables on richly gilt stands—the smaller one is composed of Labrador feldspar bordered with Elfdalen porphyry; the larger of four columns of Plasma Verde enriched with ornamental Mosaic work in variously coloured marbles. This table was the work of Mr. Mills, of Ashford, and on it is a vase of Blue John, the largest ever made.

The gardens and pleasure grounds are not the least of the attractions of Chatsworth. The Orangery, 108 feet long by 27 wide and 21 high, is at once a gallery of art and a conservatory. Standing about amongst the orange trees, rhododendrons, camellias, and other choice exotics are some fine pieces of sculpture and bas-relievs in marble. The gardens are admirably planned; the wildest and most romantic aspects of nature are here imitated by art; rocky dells, shady ravines, towering rocks, luxuriant woods, sparkling cascades are here seen in all the mimic beauty of wild nature. The Waterworks which produce the celebrated cascade are similar to those at Versailles. The structure, resembling a temple, surmounted by a dome and adorned with columns, pilasters, dolphins' heads, sea-nymphs with urns, &c., stands near the summit of a hill, down the slope of which is a succession of broad steps between lines of lofty trees. This building is a cunningly devised fountain. At a given signal the water gushes forth from the cupola, the floor, the dolphins, nymphs, &c., in innumerable fountains, and sinks into a basin, from which it rushes down the broad steps like a picturesque cascade. At the bottom it disappears amongst artificial rockwork, and flows under the gardens to the river. In a miniature Dovedale, in another part of the garden, is a hydraulic curiosity presenting the appearance of a Weeping Willow. By touching a secret spring the water spurts from every sprig and leaf, and the unsuspecting person who may be standing within range receives a copious and unexpected shower bath. There are several fountains in the gardens which throw up streams of water to considerable elevations, beautifying the fairy scenes. The most marvellous of these is the Emperor Fountain, so named in honour of the visit the Czar Nicholas of Russia paid to Chatsworth in 1844, which throws up a column of water to the height of 260 feet.

The Conservatory, covering nearly an acre of ground, was erected from the designs of the duke's celebrated gardener, Mr. Joseph Paxton, and was the prototype of the Crystal Palace at Hyde Park in 1851, for the designs of which he subsequently received the honour of knighthood. This conservatory is a veritable tropical garden, where the choicest and rarest plants of the equatorial regions grow as luxuriantly as in their native soil. A broad carriage drive runs through the centre, and a gallery, supported by light iron brackets, is carried round the dome, from which one may look down upon the beauty of the gorgeous vegetation of the tropics concentrated below. There are also vinerias, pine houses, orchid house, palm houses, and numerous glass structures.

Conspicuous amongst the many interesting objects in the park is the Hunting Tower, which crowns the summit of a wooded hill. In another part of the park, between the river and the mansion, is Mary Queen of Scots' Bower. It is a low square tower moated round and approached by a flight of steps. The Unfortunate Queen spent 14 years of her weary prison life at Chatsworth under the Earl of Shrewsbury, and in this secluded spot, accompanied by her maids, she wiled away many of the long dreary hours of her captivity. Nothing remains of the old house of Chatsworth built by Bess of Hardwicke, and this is the only memorial left of Queen Mary's sojourn here.

Many notable personages have visited Chatsworth. The King of Denmark honoured it with his presence in 1768; Archduke Nicholas, afterwards Emperor of Russia, was magnificently entertained by the Duke of Devonshire in 1816, and two years later the Grand Duke Michael of Russia also paid a visit. Her Majesty the Queen has been twice here, once in 1832, when Princess Victoria, and again, in 1843, in company with the Prince Consort. The visit of the Emperor Nicholas of Russia in 1844 has been already mentioned. Marshal Tallard, who was taken prisoner by the Duke of Marlborough after the battle of Blenheim, in 1704, and detained in this country during seven years, was nobly entertained at Chatsworth for several days by the Duke of Devonshire, and paid his Grace this compliment when taking his departure—"My Lord Duke, when I compute the days of my captivity in England, I shall leave out those I have passed at Chatsworth."

For purposes of the Local Government Act, Chatsworth has been added to Edensor.

PILSLEY is a small township containing 450 acres, belonging solely to the Duke of Devonshire. Its ratable value is £659, and the number of inhabitants 226. The village occupies an elevated situation $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.E. from Bakewell and one mile N.W. from Edensor. A school was erected here, in 1870, by the Duke of Devonshire. It is a handsome building in the Gothic style, capable of accommodating 122 children. Church service is occasionally held in it by the vicar of Edensor. The Wesleyans have a chapel here, the property of his Grace, for which they pay the nominal rent of one shilling per annum.

Pilsley is in Bakewell rural district, and sends one member to that council.

EDLASTON.

This parish consists of the township of Edlaston-with-Wyaston, containing 1,358 acres of land, belonging chiefly to John Harrison, Esq., who is lord of the manor; Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., Osmaston Manor; Rev. W. Sandford, and Mrs. Selina Harris Copestake. The soil is gravelly, with a little strong land. About one-fourth of it is arable, the rest is mostly in pasture. Turnips, wurzels, and cabbages are the chief crops. The ratable value is £2,077, and the population in 1891 was 183. The parish is in Appletree hundred, county council and petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne.

The manor of Edlaston was given by Robert de Ferrers in exchange to the Priory of Tutbury, and it remained in the possession of the monks till the Reformation, when Henry VIII. granted it to William Lord Paget, who conveyed it to Sir Edward Aston, Knight. It afterwards belonged to the Eyres, of Hassop, by one of whom it was sold to Mr. Daniel Morley, of Ashbourne. It again passed by purchase to the ancestors of the Rev. Thomas Gisborne, of Yoxall, in Staffordshire, who conveyed it to Edmund Evans, Esq., whose only surviving daughter married John Harrison, Esq.

The village of Edlaston is pleasantly situated, 3 miles S. from Ashbourne, and $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Clifton, the nearest railway station. Wyaston is a hamlet adjoining and forming part of the village of Edlaston, with which it is united for all purposes except highway rates. The church, dedicated to St. James, is a small ancient structure of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and a square wooden turret containing two bells. On the outer wall of the chancel is a stone on which is carved "An. S. 1682," probably indicating the date when some alterations were made in that part of the edifice. One of the two bells bears the same date, the other is inscribed Ave Maria, from which we may infer that it belongs to a period preceding the Reformation. The church underwent considerable repairs about 50 years ago, and the interior was restored by subscription in 1870. There are no ancient monuments. The registers date from the 16th century. Edlaston was originally a chapelry under Ashbourne, but it obtained its independence and was made a rectory about the beginning of the 14th century. The patronage belonged to the Dean of Lincoln, until transferred to the Bishop of Lichfield in recent years. It is now vested in the Bishop of Southwell. At the Reformation the living was valued at £3 18s. 4d., and in 1650 Hedlestone was returned as worth £35 per annum, present gross value £238, with residence, derived from tithe and 41 acres of glebe. The Rev. William Sandford, B.A., Clare Hall College, Cambridge, succeeded the Rev. John Teague, the late rector, in 1873. In the churchyard is a venerable yew with wide spreading branches.

The village school is a small brick building, the property of John Harrison, Esq., and attended by about 40 children.

There is a small Wesleyan Chapel in Wyaston. Wyaston Grove is a neat residence, the property of Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., and occupied by Herbert, Greenfield Esq.

CHARITIES.—George Frost, by will in 1674, left a rent charge of 10s. yearly to the poor of this parish. Humphrey Calvert left 6s. 8d. yearly out of a field called Littlewood, in Clifton, and Florence North gave £7, the interest thereof to be distributed in bread. Paul Kirkland's charity consists of a farmhouse and 33 acres of land, out of which 20s. yearly is to be paid to the rector for preaching a sermon on June 29th and January 25th, and 5s. to the parish clerk for ringing the bells and attending service on those days. Of the residue of the profits, one moiety is to be distributed amongst the poor of Edlaston and Wyaston, half-yearly for ever, and the other moiety amongst the poor of Yeldersley and Painter's Lane, in the parish of Ashbourne. The farm is situated in Wyaston, and is let for £55 a year. The trustees of the charity are the rector of Edlaston and the vicar of Ashbourne, for the time being, John Harrison, Esq., and the overseers, for the time being, of the above two parishes.

Mrs. Harriet Alderson, who died in 1881, at the age of 93, left £400, the interest thereof, £12, to be distributed in coals amongst the poor every December, in quantities of from 10 cwt. to 15 cwt. The venerable lady also defrayed the cost of sinking a well and erecting a pump and pump-house to supply the villagers with water. In the interior is inscribed "This well is given to the inhabitants of Edlaston and Wyaston by their friend Mrs. Alderson, of Wyaston Grove, 1869." The presentation took place on the 16th of June, amidst much rejoicing, and on each anniversary is observed the ancient custom of Well Dressing.

Post Office at Mr. John Gadsby's, Wyaston. Letters via Ashbourne, arrive at 8-30 a.m., and are despatched at 4-30 p.m.; no delivery on Sundays. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office, Osmaston ($1\frac{1}{2}$ miles). Nearest Railway Station, Clifton ($2\frac{1}{2}$ miles).

ELTON.

This parish, formerly a chapelry under Youlgrave, consists of the township of Elton, containing 1,432 acres of land, belonging to the following owners:—Major McCreagh Thornhill (lord of the manor); Robert Alsop, Thomas Coates, Winster; F. T. Webster, Henry Gregory, Elton; Mrs. Ellen Elliott, Rowsley; Thomas Roberts, William Wallwin, Esq., the rector in right of his church, Mrs. Jane Joule; Mr. William Wain, Wensley Hall; Mr. Joseph Wain, Bakewell; and Robert Skelton. The soil is encumbent on limestone, and is chiefly in pasture. There are several lead mines in the parish, but they are not so productive now as formerly. Manganese is also obtained from some of the mines. Ratable value, £1,680; and population, 476. Elton is in the hundred of Wirksworth, Winster county council division, Wirksworth petty sessional division and county court district, and the union, rural district, and deanery of Bakewell. It has its parish council, consisting of five members, and in conjunction with Gratton elects one rural district councillor.

The manor, at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to Henry de Ferrers. Its next owners were the Bardolfs, from whom it passed to the Tibetots, and was held by the Foljambes under the latter, as lords paramount, by the service of a pair of gilt spurs. It subsequently belonged to the Stevensons, and was divided between two coheiresses, from one of whom a moiety passed to Hylton Jolliffe, Esq., and the other moiety was purchased by Bache Thornhill, Esq. Major Thornhill is the present lord of the manor.

The village of Elton occupies a bleak situation on the summit of an eminence $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles W. from Winster and four miles from Darley Dale station, on the Midland railway. The church is a plain stone building with a western tower, rebuilt on the site of the old one, in 1812, at a cost of £1,227. The original dedication, according to Dr. Cox, was St. Margaret, but it has now long been assigned to All Saints, and is so named in the Diocesan Calendar. In 1869 the style of the architecture was Gothicised by the substitution of pointed windows for the execrable round-headed ones inserted when the church was rebuilt, and the flat ceiling was at the same time removed. The unique old font now in Youlgrave church belonged to Elton, but was, with questionable taste, discarded for the present modern one when the church was rebuilt. It was relegated to the churchyard, where it remained for about twenty years, and was then removed to Youlgrave. The parishioners afterwards made strenuous efforts to regain possession of their old font, but very properly failed, and the late Mr. Thornhill caused an exact facsimile of it to be sculptured, which now stands in the church. There are three bells in the tower, all of 17th-century date. The registers commence in 1690. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, has in recent years been constituted a rectory. In 1725 the landowners contributed £200 towards the endowment of the living, and the patronage, which had previously been exercised by the vicar of Youlgrave, was transferred to the resident freeholders. A further sum of £200 was received from Queen Anne's Bounty, and the same amount from a Parliamentary grant, and at the inclosure of the common lands in Elton, in 1809, 49 acres were allotted to the incumbent in lieu of tithes. The living is now worth £123 net, with residence, and has been held by the Rev. Timothy Johnson, M.A., since 1882.

There was a chantry in this church founded by Sir Godfrey Foljambe, and endowed with lands in Elton and Gratton for the maintenance of a priest to say Mass daily in the chapel.

The Wesleyans, Primitive Methodists, and Wesleyan Reform Union have each a chapel in the village. The National School, with master's house attached, was built at a cost of £600, raised by public subscription, in 1862, and enlarged in 1890. There are about 80 children in average attendance. The village feast is held on the festival of All Saints (November 1).

In June, 1844, a barrow or ancient grave mound was opened on Elton Moor, in which were found a skeleton, a flint arrow-head, fragments of an urn, and a drinking cup, a flint celt, and other relics of the primitive Britons.

EYAM.

Eyam, one of the most interesting parishes in the Peak, stretches about four miles each way, and embraces the townships of Eyam, Foolow, and Eyam Woodlands, containing a total area of 4,541 acres. The scenery is richly varied and picturesque;—wooded hills, luxuriant dales, towering rocks, and rugged dells here commingle, producing some of the most beautiful and romantic landscape views to be found in the county. The parish is in the hundred of High Peak, county council division of Baslow, petty sessional division, county court district, union, and rural district of Bakewell, and is the head of a deanery. Under the new Local Government Act, a parish council of six members has been assigned to it, and the parish also elects one rural district councillor.

The township of Eyam contains 2,352½ acres of land under assessment; the total ratable value is £3,162, and the population in 1891 was 996. The Duke of Devonshire, Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Hothfield are lords of the manor and patrons of the church; and the principal landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, Lord Denman, Colonel R. Athorpe, the rector in right of his church, Thomas Gregory, Esq., Eyam; William Gunstone, Esq., Eyam; Mr. Thomas Heatheote, Eyam; Mr. Samuel Needham, Eyam; William Nixon, Esq., Eyam; Rev. Charles Sisum Wright, Stokesley; the Misses Wright and John Wright, Junr., Eyam; and the Exors. of R. J. B. Chapman.

Mountain limestone underlies the greater part of the township and characterises the soil; towards the north the substratum is millstone grit and the soil loam, and in some places peat. The land is chiefly in pasture; oats and barley are grown to a limited extent. The limestone quarries give employment to a number of hands.

The earliest recorded owner of Eyam was Caschin, who possessed the manor in the reign of Edward the Confessor. At the time of the Domesday Survey Aiume (Eyam) was crown property, but Henry I. granted this and other manors in the Peak to William Peveril. The Morteynes of Risley, in this county, held the manor under Peveril, and subsequently direct from the Crown. It remained with this family till about the year 1307, when Roger Morteyne sold it to Thomas, the first Lord de Furnival. The fourth and last baron of this house died in 1383, leaving an only daughter, Joan, who brought this and other manors, together with the advowson of the church of Eyam, to her husband, Sir Thomas Nevill, who was summoned to Parliament as Lord Furnival in right of his wife. The manor passed again by the marriage of an heiress to John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, whom Shakespeare styled "the Scourge of France." On the death of Gilbert, 7th Earl, in 1616, without male issue, the manor passed to his sister, the Countess of Pembroke, and thence to her great nephew, Sir George Saville, afterwards Marquis of Halifax. His son William, 2nd Marquis, died in 1700, leaving three daughters co-heiresses, and on the partition of his estates the manor of Eyam fell to the lot of the Countess of Burlington; but the mineral rights, with the presentation to the rectory, were to be held in common between the three, and these rights are now held in tripartite division by the descendants of the three daughters, the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Buckingham, and Lord Hothfield. The manor proper has descended from the Countess of Burlington to the present Duke of Devonshire.

The mineral rights here referred to were a source of considerable wealth, derived chiefly from the lead-mining operations which were extensively carried on. These mines are of considerable antiquity, dating at least as far back—if credence may be placed upon a popular tradition—as the reign of King John, who is said to have granted the Eyam Mineral Charter. It is, however, doubtful whether any such charter ever existed, though certain freehold tenures formerly claimed exemption from the general law of the "King's Field," as the mining district of North Derbyshire was termed. A Barmote is held by the lords of the mineral field of Eyam and Stoney Middleton, alternately at Eyam and Stoney Middleton, at which all disputes arising out of the working of the mines are decided by twenty-four jurymen, under the presidency of the steward of the manors. Mr. Thomas Shimwell, of Monsall Dale, is the barmaster. The lords of the mineral field, though they possess little or no land in the parish, derived considerable wealth from these mines. Every thirteenth dish of ore obtained was theirs, and they also received a small duty on hillock-stuff. The rector also claimed his tithe, which is one penny for every dish of ore. Various veins of lead have been worked; the richest was that known as the Edge-side Vein, which was discovered more than two centuries ago, but was discontinued on account of the influx of water upwards of a century ago. The quantity of metal obtained from this vein was so great that the rector's annual income was increased from £150 to about £1,000. Other productive mines have been laid in, not from exhaustion of the metal, but from inability to cope with the water. Many years ago a sough or adit, for the purpose of effectually drawing off the water, was commenced, but it was ultimately abandoned on account of the great expense. The mines are now closed. Those lately in operation were the Black Engine, Eyam Mines, Lady Wash, Glebe Shaft, Broadlow, Little Pastures, and Watergrove.

The village of Eyam is pleasantly situated on the declivity of a mountain ridge that shelters it from the north winds, 12 miles S.S.W. from Sheffield, 11 miles N.N.E. from Buxton, and five from Hassop station on the Manchester branch of the Midland railway. The houses are built of the grey limestone of the locality, and present a clean and comfortable appearance. The village possesses many attractions; the scenery around is of a most beautiful and romantic character; historical associations crowd around its name; but its chief interest centres in the scene of desolation witnessed here in 1666, when it was almost depopulated by the plague, and the Christian heroism and self-sacrificing devotion of the Rev. William Mompesson, the worthy rector of the parish. This was the last visit of the plague to this country. The pestilence made its appearance in London towards the end of 1664, and in the month of September, 1665, it broke out in the secluded village of Eyam. The contagion, it is said, was conveyed in a box containing clothes and tailors' patterns sent from London. It was unpacked by a man named Vicars, who very shortly afterwards was seized with violent sickness; and the character of the disease soon revealed itself by the fatal token—a purple spot appearing on his breast. The whole of the household, with the exception of the wife, shared the same fate. The contagion spread, and there was soon scarcely a house in the parish that had not its victim or victims; so cruelly devastating were its ravages, that out of a population of 350, 260 fell beneath its sway. When once the symptoms of the disease had manifested themselves, all hope of recovery was abandoned, and the dissolution of the patient was awaited with anxious solicitude. "In the churchyard, on the neighbouring hills, and in the fields bordering the village," says Rhodes, "graves were dug to receive the expiring sufferers, and the earth, with unhallowed haste, was closed upon them even whilst the limbs were yet warm, and almost palpitating with life."

In the midst of this scene of desolation and death there stands forth in the boldest relief the form of one ministering angel, the pious and self-sacrificing rector of the parish, who remained with his plague-stricken flock nobly performing the duties of his office, and his wife heroically shared in the peril, ultimately falling a victim to the fell disease. Having sent his own two children to a place of safety in Yorkshire, he urged his flock to remain at their own homes, and not to seek immunity in flight, which would only tend to scatter the seeds of death over a wide field. The salutary measures which he adopted limited the affected area, and were eventually, under Providence, the means of stamping out the disease. He arranged for supplies of provisions to be deposited at certain spots, where troughs of water were placed to purify the money left in exchange; and the parishioners undertook not to pass beyond this boundary. The efforts of the worthy rector during this trying period were ably seconded by the Rev. Thomas Stanley, a former rector of Eyam, who had been ejected for his non-conformity.

The church is an ancient structure, consisting of chancel and nave, north and south aisles, and western tower containing four bells. There was no church at Eyam at the time of the Domesday Survey, but one appears to have been erected soon afterwards. This was rebuilt in the Early English period. The only remains of the former edifice are a distinctly Norman pillar and a Norman font, and subsequent restorations have almost obliterated every trace of Early English work. In the west wall of the tower is a stone bearing several initials, probably those of churchwardens, and the date 1615, headed by the letters C. W. This stone probably records the date of some repairs effected in this part of the church. There is a local tradition that the tower was rebuilt about that date by a maiden lady named Stafford, who also presented the four bells. The family of Stafford was possessed of an estate here, which is said to have been granted by Eustace de Morteyne in the reign of Henry III. The condition attached to the tenure of this land was that a lamp should be kept perpetually burning before the altar of St. Helen, in the church of Eyam. This tradition is the foundation of one of the "Tales and Traditions of the High Peak," written by the late Mr. William Wood, the historian of Eyam. The last male representative of the Staffords, Humphrey Stafford, died in the latter part of the reign of Henry VIII., leaving four daughters. The eldest, Anne, married Francis Bradshaw, who received the Eyam estate; the others married into the Morewood, Eyre, and Savage families. The church was restored and partially rebuilt in 1868-9, from the designs of G. E. Street, Esq., the eminent architect; and the whole church, except the south aisle, re-roofed with lead, the internal walls stripped of their many coats of plaster and whitewash, the unsightly galleries removed, and the interior re-seated with open benches. The scheme of restoration thus far carried out entailed an expenditure of £2,223, proving a more expensive undertaking than was anticipated. The completion of the entire restoration was effected at a further outlay of £660, in 1883, when the south aisle was rebuilt and extended, and a handsome memorial window erected in the tower by Thomas Gregory, Esq.

The dedication of the church has been for some time a matter of dispute. It is usually ascribed to St. Helen, but recent researches show that it was dedicated to Lawrence. In the Diocesan Calendar it is styled St. Lawrence (with the chapel of St. Helen). There was formerly an altar at the east end of the north aisle, which was probably the one referred to in the tradition of the lamp of St. Helen. This aisle was rebuilt and enlarged by voluntary subscriptions obtained in 1866, to "commemorate the Christian and heroic virtues of the Rev. William Mompesson, Catherine his wife, and the Rev. W. Stanley, who, during the plague in 1665-6, steadfastly continued to succour the afflicted, and to minister amongst them the truths and consolations of the Gospel." The rebuilding of this aisle led to the restoration of the entire church. There are several modern tablets, but none possessing any special interest. Over the chancel is a very elaborate sun-dial, which was, previous to the late restoration, above the south entrance. It shows the parallel of the sun's declination for every month in the year, the scale of the sun's meridian altitude, the azimuthal scale, the points of the compass, and a number of meridians.

The graveyard (1½ acres in extent) is rich in monumental literature of a more elevated tone than is generally found on tombstones, but its most interesting object is a very fine Saxon cross, supposed to be at least 1,000 years old. It stands about 9 feet above the ground, but about 2 feet of the upper portion of the shaft has been broken off and destroyed. It is profusely ornamented with interlacing knot-work, and bears in addition on the west side of the shaft above the interlaced knot-work, a seated figure holding a bugle-horn, and above it the Virgin and Child. On the arms are figures of angels holding crosses and blowing long trumpets. Tradition says that this cross was found on one of the neighbouring moors, at a crossing of the Manchester and Sheffield Old Road, and was removed to the churchyard by the Rev. Thomas Seward, the rector, who died in 1790. This interesting relic of antiquity has been photographed and engraved times out of number, and good drawings of it may be seen in various Guides to the district, Cox's "Churches of Derbyshire," and Wood's "History of Eyam." Near this cross is the tomb of Catherine Mompesson, who died of the plague, as before stated, in 1666. In a corner of the churchyard is the monument of Richard Furness, the poet, and his wife. On the same side of the churchyard is a monument covering the remains of the late William Wood, author of the "History and Antiquities of Eyam," "Tales and Traditions of the Peak," &c., who died in 1865. It was erected by his neighbours and friends, at a cost of £30,

"to record their high opinion of his upright and faithful character, and their admiration of his genius and literary attainments."

The parish registers date from 1630. The living is a rectory in the gift of the lords of the mineral field in succession. Since the closing of the lead mines the annual value of this rectory has very considerably decreased, and is now only worth £210 net, with residence. The Rev. H. J. Freeman is the present rector.

The members of the Wesleyan Reform Union have a chapel here. It is a neat stone structure, capable of seating 250. In order to meet the requirements of the Education Act, and prevent the appointment of a School Board, new schools were built in 1877, at a cost of £1,050, raised by public subscriptions, and a class-room was afterwards added at a further expense of £450. There are two departments, mixed and infants, having a total average attendance of 135. Thomas Middleton, in 1745, and the Honourable and Rev. Dr. Finch a little earlier, left bequests for education which now produce £13 10s.; the late Miss Rawson, of Sheffield, bequeathed £500 to the school, and the endowment was further increased by the sale of the old school premises. The Mechanics' Institute originated in a subscription library established in 1821. The present handsome premises were erected in 1858.

Lead mining was formerly the staple trade of the parish, but that industry has been entirely abandoned during the past few years. The limestone quarries give employment to a number of hands, and the manufacture of boots, shoes, and slippers is carried on to a considerable extent. Eyam once had its market, but it has long been obsolete. In the Market Place are still preserved the stocks wherein the brawling and besotted villagers of old did penance for their misdeeds; and opposite the Forester's Arms is the bear-ring, another relic of barbaric times. For the convenience of tradesmen and others having monetary transactions there is a branch of Crompton & Evans', Union Bank, Limited, here, which is open every Friday, from 11 a.m. to 2-30 p.m. The Bull's Head is a convenient and well-appointed inn, where visitors and tourists will find good accommodation. Here is held the Loyal Peak Miners' Lodge of Oddfellows, M.U. There are 230 members, and the funds amount to £3,266 9s. 1½d.; Edwin Maltby, secretary. Beech Hurst, the property and residence of William Nixon, Esq., is a fine building in the Elizabethan style, occupying an elevated situation on the north side of the village. The Feast is held on the last Sunday in August.

The scenery in the neighbourhood of the village is varied and beautiful. On the north rises Eyam Edge, a mountain ridge 600 feet high, and crowned with plantations of larch and fir, and beyond this is Sir William, a mountain of considerable altitude, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. On the south side of the village is a narrow rocky dell, called the Delf or Cucklet Dell, which has become a hallowed spot from its association with the fearful Woe of Eyam. On the acclivities is a rich profusion of ferns, mosses, and creeping plants, whilst the oak, the elm, the ash, and birch shadow it with their spreading branches. In this secluded dell, during the prevalence of the plague, Mr. Mompesson gathered the scattered remnants of his flock twice during the week, and twice each Sabbath day for prayers and divine service. Here, from beneath a natural arch of rock, he preached to them the consolations of the Gospel, and the spot has become known far and wide as Pulpit Rock and Cucklet Church. At the extremity of this lonely dell is a chasm or cleft in the limestone rock, called the Salt Pan, whence issues a small stream that winds its way amongst beds of moss, fern, and flowers, along the bottom of the valley. Running parallel with the Delf is Eyam Dale, which is bounded on one side by towering rocks. Here is a cavern which has been explored to a considerable distance.

About a quarter of a mile east of the village, on the slope of a hill, is a walled enclosure containing seven tombstones, marking the graves of seven members of the Hancock family, who were carried off by the plague in the short space of nine days. They are known as the Riley Graves or Riley Stones. The Hancocks lived close by, and farmed the land. There were eight of the family at home, of whom only the mother escaped, and on her fell the sorrowful task of digging the graves and burying the bodies of her husband and six children. These tombstones were for a long time neglected, and lay prostrate and scattered, but the late Thomas Birds, Esq., caused them to be collected and placed as they now stand. The inscriptions having become nearly obliterated, were re-cut by Mr. Frank Unwin, the cost being defrayed by Sir Henry Burford Hancock, Governor-General of Gibraltar. Behind Riley House, a short distance from these graves, are two tabular monuments to the Talbots, another family, seven of whom fell victims to the plague. They were blacksmiths and farmers, and their homestead stood on the site of the present Riley House. There were formerly many other sad memorials of the ravages of this fearful plague in the fields and on the hill-sides in the vicinity of the village, but most of them have now disappeared—some probably lie under the turf, and others have been destroyed.

Many Roman coins have, at various times, been found in the vicinity of the village, but no remains indicating a permanent settlement have been met with. Of the ancient Britons numerous traces still remain on Eyam Moor, but many were swept away after the inclosure of the moorland in 1801. At Wetwithin is a Druidical circle, about 30 yards in diameter, formed of stones about three feet in height, standing in an upright position. Only 10 stones now remain, but formerly there were 16 or more. Near this is a cairn of stones, which is supposed to mark the burial place of some British chieftain. When opened many years ago a large urn was found therein, containing burnt bones, ashes, a flint arrowhead, and other articles. Many cairns or barrows have been levelled since the land was brought into cultivation, and numerous urns have at various times been turned up by the plough and spade. Spears, arrowheads, hatchets, stone celts, and other weapons of primitive warfare are not unfrequently found.

Local Worthies.—Eyam, often styled the "Athens of the Peak," has long maintained a pre-eminence amongst the surrounding villages for the number of its celebrities. The Rev. Thos. Seward, who held the rectory from 1739 to his death in 1790, was the author of several poems and other works. His talented daughter, Miss Anna Seward, was born here in 1742. She early evinced a strong poetical tendency, but did not commence her literary career till the age of forty, when she published a poetical novel, entitled "Louisa," which was so favourably received as to run through four editions. A collection of sonnets and the "Life of Dr. Darwin" were her next publications. She bequeathed her unpublished works and literary correspondence to Sir Walter Scott, who published them in three volumes, with a biographical notice, after her death; and her letters she bequeathed to Mr. Constable, the publisher, who issued them in six closely-printed octavo volumes. She died in 1809. The Rev. Peter Cunningham, for many years curate of Eyam under Mr. Seward, was a man of very refined poetic taste. Here he wrote "Chatsworth," "Russian Prophecy," and "The Naval Triumph," poems of considerable literary merit. Richard Furness, a native of Eyam, and a self-educated man, exhibited considerable literary genius and poetic power. He served an apprenticeship to a currier at Chesterfield, and was afterwards for many years schoolmaster and parish clerk at Dore. His first production of any length, and that on which his fame chiefly rests, was the "Rag Bag," a satire in three cantos. His next effort was "The Astrologer." He was also a frequent contributor to the "Poet's Corner" in the Sheffield Iris. After his death, in 1857, his poetical works were published in one volume, under the editorship of Dr. G. Calvert Holland, with a biographical sketch of the author. William Wood, another of Eyam's worthies, was born of humble parentage, and by his own unaided efforts worked his way to literary fame and distinction. His first work, published in 1837, was "The Genius of the Peak and other Poems." His next effort was the "History of Eyam," in which he tells the story of the Plague with much graphic power. In 1862 he published "Tales and Traditions of the High Peak." He was also a frequent contributor to the pages of the Reliquary. Mr. Wood died in 1865.

Foolow township contains 953½ acres of land, which is valued for rating purposes at £990. In consequence of the closing of the lead mines the population has decreased from 223 in 1881 to 152 in 1891. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and the following are the principal landowners:—Chas. H. Bowles, Abney; Exors. of Samuel Bagshaw, Rev. C. S. Wright, Stokesley; Mrs. Elliott, Thomas Gregory, Esq., Eyam; Lord Denman, Exors. of John Moorhouse, John Thornhill, Great Longstone; Exors. of Jas. Furness, and the trustees of Norton School.

The village is small, and stands 1½ miles W. from Eyam, and 2½ miles E. by N. from Tideswell. A mission church was erected a few years ago, at a cost of £400, to seat 70 persons. The Wesleyan Reform Union also has a chapel here, erected in 1866. It will accommodate 350. An ancient stone cross stands on the village green. A portion of the Old Hall, the residence of the early owners, still remains, and is now a farmhouse. The Bull's Head is a good inn in the village. Under the new Local Government Act Foolow elects one rural district councillor.

EYAM WOODLANDS is a township containing 1,042½ acres of land, lying on the west bank of the Derwent, which is here crossed by Grindleford Bridge. The following are the principal landowners:—The Duke of Devonshire, Colonel R. Athorpe, Wm. Gunstone, Esq., Sheffield; Mr. Jon. Ward, Jersey; Exors. of J. Dixon, Bath; and Mrs. E. Wright, Pontefract. The total ratable value of the township is £1,069, and the population in 1891 was 266. Grindleford Bridge, the largest hamlet in the township, is situated in the midst of a well-wooded country, which is pleasantly diversified by hill and dale. National Schools were erected here in 1879, at a cost of £600, in which Church service is held every Sunday morning. The Wesleyan Reform Union has a chapel capable of accommodating 80. It was built in 1831. The Commercial Hotel, seated on the slope of the hill, is a convenient resting place for tourists. Hazleford is a small hamlet, three miles N. from Eyam. Eyam Woodlands and Stoke form a united parish for the election of a rural district councillor.

FENNY BENTLEY.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Wirksworth; electoral division of Hartington; petty sessional division, county court district, poor law union, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne. It elects one rural district councillor. Its total area is 1,038 acres, ratable value £1,812, and population 238. The principal owners are Sir William FitzHerbert, Bart., Tissington Hall; Mrs. Studdy, Wadderton Court, Brixham, Devon; Thomas William Hunt, Bole Hill, Wirksworth; and John Bailey, Esq. Timothy, William, and Margaret Challinor are joint owners of the manor. The parish lies on the threshold of the far-famed Dove Dale, and is watered by a small brook that falls into the Dove about 2½ miles further down.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, the manor of Beneleie (Bentley) was part of the Crown lands. Edward I. granted it to his brother Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. In the reign of Henry VI. a younger son of John Beresford, of Beresford, settled here, and his descendants were for several generations lords of the manor. He is said to have raised at his own expense a troop of horse, consisting of his sons and their retainers, for the king's service, and to have distinguished himself at the battle of Agincourt. His second son, Thomas, who married the heiress of Hassall, also took a prominent part, as related in the Latin epitaph on his tomb. The manor eventually passed from the Beresfords, and has since been in various hands.

The village stands in a picturesque valley, through which flows a rapid brook, 2½ miles N. from Ashbourne, and 7 miles S.W. from Wirksworth. There are two good inns, and another, the Blue Bell, about one mile N. on the Buxton road. The church, dedicated to St. Edmund, king and martyr, was founded sometime before A.D. 1240, when it is mentioned as one of the chapels of Ashbourne, but was rebuilt in the Gothic style in the 14th century. A thorough restoration, now completed, was commenced in 1850, during which time the edifice has been entirely rebuilt, and now presents a finished and beautiful appearance. It consists of a large chancel, nave, north aisle, spacious chapel in the north-east corner, south porch, and western tower surmounted by a graceful octagonal spire containing three bells. A beautifully carved old oak screen separates the nave and chancel. It is in the late Perpendicular style of about the year 1490, and was probably presented as a thank-offering after the Wars of the Roses. Another fine old screen of the same design divides the Beresford chapel from the north aisle. It is darker in colour and older than the other. A chantry was founded in this church by James Beresford, prebend of Prees and canon of Lichfield, in 1512, and endowed with lands of the yearly value of £9 5s. 4d, whereof £4 13s. 4d. was for the maintenance of a priest, 30s. for a beadsman, and the remainder in charity. The chantry was dedicated to St. Catherine and St. Anthony, and the above screen or parclose probably belonged to it. The font is ancient, but the circular bowl is of earlier date than the shaft which supports it. Another piece of antiquity is an oak chest at the west end of the nave, which is supposed to date from the 13th century.

The stained-glass windows form one of the chief attractions of this beautiful church. The east window of five lights is a good specimen of Decorated Gothic. Christ is represented in the centre light, and the four Marys in the others. The window is a memorial of Miss Van Tuyl, who died in 1877. The colours are most delicate and subdued. The south chancel window commemorates Mrs. Jeremiah Barnes, and represents in its three lights Abraham about to sacrifice his son Isaac, Joseph and his brethren, and Noah and his family. This window was executed by Messrs. Heaton, Butler, and Baines from the designs of Norman Shaw. The Beresford Chapel has been recently restored by that family, and two windows filled with stained glass, one in memory of Captain Hans Busk, originator of the volunteer movement, and son-in-law of the Rev. E. A. Beresford, represents in its two lights the Martyrdom of King Edmund in the year 871. The other, a memorial of the late Henry Browne Beresford, exhibits the figures of Thomas Beresford, Agnes Hassall, his wife, James Beresford, founder of the chantry, and several shields of arms.

The chancel floor is laid with enamelled tiles of a very neat design. Formerly there were in the pavement numerous remains of alabaster slabs, but all these were removed in 1850. One very curious, if not unique, altar tomb remains in the Beresford Chapel. It is the monument of Thomas Beresford, who died in 1473, and Agnes Hassall, his wife. On the top lie their effigies completely enveloped in shrouds, and on the side and end are the shrouded representations of their sixteen sons and five daughters. There is an inscription in English and a Latin epitaph, from which it appears that the said Thomas took a prominent part in the battle of Agincourt (A.D. 1415). From Humphrey, the sixth son of Thomas, all the Beresfords now extant have descended. Tristram Beresford, Esq., settled in Ireland in the reign of James I., and his descendant was created Viscount Tyrone and Marquis of Waterford. There are several tablets to later members of the Beresford family. A brass on the south wall of the chancel commemorates the benevolent deeds of the Rev. Jeremiah Barnes, M.A., of Bentley Cottage, and there is also a granite cross to his memory in the churchyard. Here also is an ancient stone tomb. It belongs to the 15th century, and is believed to be the oldest outside tomb of the kind in the kingdom. At the entrance to the south porch and on the stone seats therein are deep ruts in the stonework, which have been made by the sharpening of arrows. A royal ordinance commanded young men to practise archery on the south side of the churchyard on Sunday afternoons, and though we have observed these arrow marks on and about the porches of various old churches we do not remember ever meeting with them on the north side.

The living is a rectory, formerly in the gift of the Dean of Lincoln, from whom it was transferred by a legislative enactment in the present reign to the Bishop of Lichfield, and it passed to the Bishop of Southwell on the creation of that see. It is valued in the King's Book at £6 12s. 0d, and is now worth £240, having been very considerably augmented by the late Rev. Jeremiah Barnes, who also left £19 yearly towards the church expenses. The present rector, the Rev. R. K. Bolton, M.A., Trin. Coll., Dublin, was inducted in 1889. A new rectory house was built in 1866 by the late Rev. Garton Howard. There are 30 acres of glebe.

The School is a good stone building, capable of accommodating 105 children. The teacher's residence was the gift of the late Miss Van Tuyl, and is left for the use of the schoolmaster as long as the Scripture and Church of England catechism are taught in the school; failing this, it has to be converted into an almshouse. An endowment of nearly £80 a year was left to the school by the late Rev. J. Barnes, who died in 1883, but the endowment lapses and goes to the rector if Scripture and Church catechism cease to be taught.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, built in 1832.

The old hall, now a farmhouse called Cherry Orchard, was built by the Beresfords about the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. It was for some time the residence of Sir Simon Degge, whose name appears on the leaden roof, with the date 1680. It was formerly castellated, but the battlements were taken down about two years ago, and have not been replaced. The house is the property of Sir William Fitz Herbert, and it was for nearly two centuries in the occupation of the Waterfall family. Another old house is The Ashes Farm, occupied by Mr. Joseph Potter, in which is a stone inscribed "I.W., 1673."

Post Office at Mr. William Harrison's. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 7 a.m. and are despatched at 5-25 p.m.; no Sunday business. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office and Railway Station, Ashbourne (2½ miles).

HARTINGTON.

This parish comprises the township of Hartington Town Quarter, containing 3,433 acres, of which 3,328½ acres are under assessment; ratable value, £3,900; population, 401. The old parish was of very considerable extent, stretching 16 miles lengthwise, and in some parts five miles crosswise, and included the townships of Town Quarter, Middle Quarter with Earl Sterndale chapelry, Nether Quarter, and Upper Quarter. The parish is in the hundred of Wirksworth; county council division of Hartington; petty sessional division, union, and county court district of Ashbourne; and deanery of Buxton. It has a parish council of five members, and it elects one rural district councillor. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and principal owner. The other landowners are the Exors. of Frank Kirkham; William Redfern, Esq., Bakewell; Philip Beresford Hope, Esq.; John Sleigh, Esq.; Wm. Orford, Geo. Briggs, Liverpool; Exors. of T. W. Bateman, Esq., Middleton Hall; G. Kirkham, Esq., Heathcote; John Kirkham, Hartington; William Wright, Bradbourn; Exors. of Isaac Percival, and Charles Broadhurst.

The manor of Hartington was one of the many held by the family of Ferrers, one of whom, in the reign of King John, obtained a licence for a market in his town of Hartington, and a three days' fair at the festival of St. Giles. On the attainder of Robert de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, this manor was granted to Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. It remained annexed to the Duchy of Lancaster till 1603, when it was granted by King James to Sir George Hume, one of the Scotchmen who accompanied James to England, and was honoured with the Chancellorship of the Exchequer. Having reverted to the Crown, it was granted by the same monarch in 1617 to Sir George Villiers, and it was purchased from his descendant, the Duke of Buckingham, in 1663, by William Cavendish, Earl of Devonshire.

The parish lies on the east bank of the river Dove, which separates it from the county of Stafford. Here is a narrow rock-bound glen of remarkable beauty, named Beresford Dale, from the ancient residence of the Beresfords on the Staffordshire side of the river. The rocks rise in perpendicular cliffs, diversified by wood and crag; the bold front of limestone is relieved with trailing creepers, and on every ledge and in every crevice the groups of trees and shrubs have a most picturesque effect. The walks by the river are well kept, and the gay bloom of the rhododendrons and other flowering shrubs which grow here in profusion, mingling with the ever-varying tints of the foliage, add their charms to an enchanting scene, and present a striking contrast with the treeless district that lies between Hartington and Bakewell. The river affords excellent fishing, and to votaries of the rod and line it has been rendered sacred by its association with Isaak Walton and his friend Charles Cotton, the angler poet, who delighted in singing the praises of his "beloved nymph, fair Dove." Here stands the little fishing house which he erected in 1674, and dedicated to fishermen. The Charles Cotton Hotel is a large and well-appointed establishment, where visitors and tourists will find every accommodation. Fishing tickets can be obtained here by visitors.

The soil is generally limestone of good quality. On Mr. Wager's farm, Hartington Moor, there are about two acres of sand resembling gannister, and white clay. Ironstone was formerly worked in Hand Dale, two miles from Hartington, and lead is said to exist near the village.

Hartington, which gives the title of marquis to the Duke of Devonshire, is a pretty country village, near the river Dove, 10 miles from Ashbourn, Bakewell, and Buxton, and three from Parsley Hay Station, at the junction of the London and North-Western with the High Peak Railway. The market, granted to the town in 1203, indicates the former importance of the place; but both market and fairs may now be said to be things of the past. On the adjacent moor a sanguinary conflict took place between the Romans under Agricola and the ancient Britons. Another battle occurred on the same spot in times much less remote. In 1651, several local Royalist gentlemen gathered here their tenants and others favourable to the king's cause. They were mostly recruits with little or no training, but were led by an enthusiastic young cavalier, William de Rossington, whose ancestors had long been associated with the Peak. The place of rendezvous was made known to the Cromwellians, and some troops of Roundheads were despatched to Hartington. An encounter took place, the Roundheads fighting with all the vigour and ferocity that fanaticism usually inspires, decimated the ranks of the undisciplined Royalists, and put the scattered remnants to flight. Amongst those who fell in the fight was young Rossington. His lady-love resolved to rescue his gory remains, that they might not be subjected to indignities; she, therefore, accompanied by four friends, hurried to the battlefield, found the body, and carried it under cover of darkness to Hedburn Wood, near Cressbrook, ten miles distant. Here at a solitary hut she procured a light and spade, and buried her gallant young lover. Cromwell offered a reward for the body, but the secret of the burial was religiously preserved. Some years ago a farmer at the Hoff, near Hedburn Wood, in putting down a gatepost found the remains with the warrior's helmet, sword, armour, and buttons of his garments, which eventually came into the possession of an antiquary at Eyam.

The church, dedicated to St. Giles, occupies an elevated situation at the north end of the village. It is a large cruciform structure, apparently of 13th century date with later additions, and consists of chancel, nave, with side aisles, north and south transept, and western tower, containing a clock and three bells. The fabric was thoroughly restored in 1858, but fortunately the work was carried out very judiciously, and all the old characteristics have been reverently preserved. The nave is separated from the aisle on each side by three pointed arches, springing from clustered columns. The transepts differ in character. The south transept has an aisle on the west side, divided from the rest of the transept by two arches, supported on an octagonal pillar. The piscina niches, and other indications that still remain, show that there were two altars in each transept, in addition to the high altar in the chancel. The east window of five lights is filled with stained glass, depicting the principal scenes in the life of our Saviour, and is inscribed to the memory of John Sleigh, who died in 1858. A handsome marble tablet commemorates Sir Hugh Bateman, Bart., of Hartington Hall, who died in 1824, and was buried in the family vault, All Saints', Derby. A mural tablet in the north transept records that Charles Flint, of Leek, F.R.C.S., by will dated October, 1861, bequeathed £500 to the vicar and churchwardens, to receive the annual income therefrom, and to pay £10 yearly to the teacher of the school, the remainder, after keeping the family tomb in repair, to be applied to the church or other ecclesiastical purposes. There are also tablets to the Bradley, Fidler, Goodwin, Wardle, and other families. There are very few monuments of antiquity, which is not a little surprising when we consider the magnitude and importance of the church. Under a canopied recess, in the south transept, is a coffin-shaped stone slab, discovered during the alterations of 1858, beneath the floor of the nave. It belongs to that semi-effigial class of monuments, in which the upper and lower extremities of the figure are exposed, as it were, through openings in the coffin. The effigy, which is that of a female, is very much defaced. There are some incised slabs in the porch, also found during the restoration. Here, in the wall, may be seen traces of the stairs that led to the parvise or chamber over the porch. The object of these chambers is not known with certainty. In front is the niche, which once contained the statue of the patron saint. In the exterior masonry of a built-up doorway in the north, are the heads of two incised crosses of a rather unusual geometrical design; and in the wall of the north transept is the fragment of a cross, ornamented with an interlaced knot-work pattern, supposed to be Saxon work. Against the south wall of the chancel lies a large stone coffin, with lid. An elegant stone cross, designed by Norman Shaw, Esq., architect, has been erected in the churchyard.

This church was given by Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, to a convent of nuns of the order of St. Clare, generally called Minoresses, in Tower Hill, London, founded by his wife, Blanche, Queen of Navarre. The nuns were patrons and impropiators till the Reformation. The Cavendishes have had the patronage since they acquired the manor in the 17th century. The late Earl of Beauchamp, then William Lygon, Esq., who was the impropiator, received an allotment of land on the enclosure of the common in 1798, in lieu of the great tithes. The rectorial estate was subsequently purchased by the late Sir Hugh Bateman. The owners had the appointment of the dean of Hartington—an office of post-Reformation origin, but now abolished. The living is a vicarage, net value £230, held by the Rev. W. Fyldes, M.A., since 1891.

The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here, erected in 1809, at a cost of £400, chiefly through the exertions of the Nadin family. The National School, with master's house, was built in 1865, at a cost £750, exclusive of the site, which was given by T. O. Bateman, Esq. A new class-room has since been added at a further outlay of £100. There is an average attendance of 54.

Biggin Grange and Heathcote, now owned by the Duke of Devonshire, formerly belonged to the monks of Garendon, in Leicestershire, to whom they were given by the Ferrers' family. A branch of the Dakin, or Dakeyne, family was long settled at the former place. John Dakin, of Biggin Grange, married Alicia, daughter of John de la Pole, Esq., of Hartington, and was ancestor of the Dakins, of Snitterton and Stubbin Edge, and also of the Dakins of the East Riding of Yorkshire. Pilsbury Grange and Wolvescote Grange were also monastic property. The former belonged to the Abbey of Mervale, in Warwickshire, and was granted after the dissolution of monasteries to the Earl of Shrewsbury.

Hartington Hall, the property and originally the residence of the Bateman family, who were seated here in the early part of the 16th century, stands on an elevation overlooking the village. Hugh Bateman, born here in 1554, was steward to Sir William Cavendish, and built the older part of the present hall in 1611. It was restored by his descendant, the late Thomas Osborn Bateman, in 1861, and is now occupied as a farm house. Pool Hall, an ancient stone building standing within its own grounds, was restored by the late owner, Mr. John Kirkham, who used much of the old material in the rebuilding. Moat Hall, now a farmhouse, has been in the occupation of the Allen family for upwards of 150 years. A portion of the ancient moat remains in the rear of the house, and on the farm is a tumulus which has, we believe, never been opened.

CHARITIES.—The poor receive the rents of 11a. 3r. 8p. of land, situated at Heathcote, supposed to have been left by the Bateman family. Miss Flint by will, dated 1887, bequeathed to the vicar and churchwardens £300, out of the income thereof, £4 is to be applied in providing fuel for the stove in the parish church, and the remainder to be distributed amongst the poor attending the services of the said parish church. Charles Flint, of Leek, a native of the village, by deed of gift in 1853, conveyed in trust to the vicar five acres of land at Sheldon, the rents to be applied yearly, for ever, in educating six poor children at Hartington school, the said children to be selected by the vicar. The sum of £2 12s. yearly, left by an unknown donor, is distributed in bread; and the poor also receive their share of Gisborne's flannel charity.

HATHERSAGE.

Hathersage, formerly a parish of considerable extent, now consists of the townships of Hathersage and Outseats, containing 7,570 acres of land in the High Peak hundred, county council division of Baslow, petty sessional division, county court district, union, and rural district of Bakewell and deanery of Eyam. In carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, seven parish councillors and one district councillor have been assigned to Hathersage.

The township embraces 3,120 acres, its ratable value is £3,298, and its population in 1891 was 1,210, showing an increase of 382 in ten years. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and the principal landowners are G. H. Cammell, Esq., J.P., C.C.; J. S. A. Shuttleworth, Esq., J.P., D.L., Hathersage; Mrs. E. Broomhead; G. Cooper, Padley; Mrs. H. Riggall; His Grace the Duke of Rutland; Richard Jennison, Esq., Longsight; and B. Firth, Esq. The surface is covered with steep gritstone hills, enclosing between them deep narrow valleys, presenting an aspect of romantic beauty. The river Derwent flows through a deep valley, forming the western boundary of the parish.

The manor of Hathersage was held by Ralph Fitzhubert at the time of the Domesday Survey. It is probable that the next owners were the Bassets, as Richard de Basset, in conjunction with his wife Maud, about the year 1130, gave the church of Hathersage to the Priory of Launde, in Leicestershire. In the reign of Henry III. the lord of the manor was named De Hathersage, and the co-heiresses of this family married Goushill and Longford, who held the manor in moieties. The moiety of the Longfords remained in the same family for more than two centuries, but there is some doubt as to the descent of the other portion. Lysons thinks it belonged to the family of Thorp in the reign of Henry VI., with remainder to Robert Eyre and his heirs. The manor subsequently belonged to the Pegge family, from whom it was purchased by an ancestor of the present owner in 1705.

The village of Hathersage occupies a commanding position on the front of a rocky eminence overlooking the valley of the Derwent, and surrounded by lofty hills. It is on the Sheffield and Chapel-en-le-Frith road, 11 miles from the former and 12 from the latter. The nearest railway station hitherto has been Hassop, seven miles distant; but this inconvenience has been removed by the construction of the Dore and Chinley branch of the Midland system, which was formally opened for passenger traffic in July, 1894. The line passes close to the village, where there is a station, and will doubtless increase the prosperity of the place by developing and extending local trade. Hathersage has long been a little hive of industry. The manufacture of needles was introduced here by Messrs. Robert and David Cook in 1811, and later several works of the same kind were opened by other firms; but as the grinding was detrimental to the health of those employed in that part of the work, the matter was taken up by Government and very stringent regulations were enforced. The only firm now engaged in the industry is Messrs. Robert Cook & Co., who, by the introduction of the most improved machinery and appliances, have reduced the unhealthiness of the occupation to a minimum. The firm manufacture hackle pins of extreme fineness for combing wool and raising the nap on cloth, there being only three firms in the world producing this kind of work. Gritstone is also extensively quarried, and manufactured into millstones.

The church, which is dedicated to St. Michael, is justly considered one of the handsomest ecclesiastical edifices in the county. The general style is that of the Decorated Gothic which prevailed in the early part of the 14th century, but some of the windows show a later restoration in the Perpendicular style. The plan comprises chancel with north aisle or chapel, nave with side aisles, south porch, and an embattled tower surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire. In 1851-2 the church underwent a thorough restoration, at a cost of upwards of £1,700, exclusive of the cost of the stained-glass windows, which were special gifts. A good deal of the exterior masonry was carefully restored, the chancel and nave re-roofed and seated with open benches. The nave is separated from the aisles on each side by four pointed arches, which rest on octagonal columns with deeply moulded capitals; and exteriorly both nave and aisles are surmounted by battlements, as also is the porch. On the latter are four shields of arms carved in stone. The chancel window, illustrating in its three lights the Nativity and the Crucifixion, was contributed by public subscription, and the handsome west window was given by George Eyre, Esq., and his three sisters. On the south wall of the chancel are three elegant sedilia with carved canopies, and a piscina. On the opposite wall, under a crocketed ogee canopy, is the altar tomb of Robert Eyre, who died in 1459, and Johanna his wife, daughter and sole heiress of Robert Padley, who died in 1463. On the tomb, incised in brass, are the effigies of a knight in plate armour and a long sword by his side, and a lady habited in the dress of the period. At the head is a shield charged with the arms of Padley, and beneath the Latin inscription are the effigies of their fourteen children. There are several other memorials of this ancient and once powerful family. There are also some monuments to the Ashton family, whose lands here have descended to the Shuttleworths. There are six bells in the tower, chiefly of 17th century date. The old sanctus bell is still preserved. On it is inscribed a prayer for the souls of Robert Eyre and Johanna, his wife. The registers date from 1627. The living was a rectory till the beginning of the 15th century, when the tithes were appropriated to the Priory of Launde, and a vicarage ordained. The patronage has been invested in the Cavendish family since the reign of Edward VI. The present net value is £320; the Rev. C. S. Cutler, B.A., vicar. At the inclosure of the common, in 1808, land was awarded in lieu of all the tithes.

In the churchyard is the grave of "Little John," Robin Hood's giant henchman. It is marked by four upright blocks of gritstone, 10 feet from head to foot, but it is doubtful whether these occupy their original positions. The green cap and bow of Little John were formerly suspended in the church by a chain. They were removed long ago, and the bow of spliced yew, six feet in length, now hangs in Cannon Hall, near Barnsley, whither it was brought by Mr. John Spencer, who inherited the Hathersage estate from his mother, nee Miss Ashton. The grave was opened by Captain James Shuttleworth about the year 1780, when a thigh-bone was found which measured 28½ inches. An old thatched cottage taken down a few years ago is said to have been the place of his birth, and also his abode in the latter years of his life. Little John fought at the battle of Evesham in 1265; it does not, therefore, appear probable that the old cottage recently removed could have been the one in which he was born upwards of 600 years ago, but this does not weaken the claim of Hathersage to be the depository of his ashes. Other places have also claimed this honour, but the weight of evidence favours Hathersage, whose claim has come down through many successive generations of inhabitants. Elias Ashmole, the antiquarian, writing in 1652, states that Little John's bow was then hanging in the church.

The soil of the graveyard, in common with that of some other places in the north of Derbyshire, seems to possess the property of preserving, for some time at least, dead bodies from corruption. On the 31st of May, 1781, the grave of Mr. Benjamin Ashton, who had been buried fifty-six years before, was opened for the interment of a female, when the corpse, instead of returning to dust, had become "congealed as hard as flint."

At the end of the village, in a retired spot, is the Catholic Church of St. Michael. It is a neat structure, in the Italian style, built in 1806. The presbytery stands within the grounds. In connection with the church is a substantially built school, attended by about 40 children.

The Wesleyan Chapel, built in 1807, was restored and enlarged at an expense of about £1,000, defrayed by R. Smith, Esq., Bacup; and S. Cocker, Esq., Sheffield. A new and elegant front was added, in the pediment of which is a handsome clock. The interior arrangements are all that can be desired for comfort and utility.

There is a good national school in the village, built in 1858 at a cost of £750; accommodation, 181; average attendance, 142.

A Fair is held on the first Friday after Old Michaelmas day, and if the latter fall on a Friday, the fair is held on the Friday following, and the Feast is held on the Sunday before the fair. The Hall, the seat of Col. John Ashton Shuttleworth, was rebuilt in 1844; and Brookfield Manor, another handsome residence standing in park-like grounds, is the seat of G. H. Cammell, Esq., J.P., C.C.

Longshaw, near the Yorkshire border, is a shooting box of the Earl of Rutland, and near here, on the Sheffield Road, is Fox House Inn, a noted hostelry, still, and yet more famous in the old coaching days. The surrounding scenery is extremely beautiful, and one view called The Surprise is surpassed by few in the county. The house contains a very fine oak cabinet, 8½ ft. high by 9 ft. wide, with elaborately carved front. The subjects represented are the principal scenes in the life of Christ. There are also an old oak table, from Haddon Hall, and other relics and curiosities.

Hathersage has a claim to the notice of visitors from the numerous antiquities existing in the immediate neighbourhood. A little east of the church is Camp Green, an earthwork believed to be of Danish origin, and on the moors are rocking stones, rock basins, and other works attributed to our Celtic forefathers.

One of these is Higgarr Rocks, a huge mass of gritstone blocks piled confusedly together, where it is said the ancient Druids performed their sacrificial rights. At a little distance is Carl's Work, an ancient British fort, still fairly perfect. One of the rocking stones, as measured by Mr. Hayman Rooke, is 29 feet in circumference, another 13ft. 6ins. in length, and near this is a hollow in the rock, called in the traditions of the country Cair's Chair.

Booths is a small village half-a-mile east of Hathersage.

OUTSEATS is a township containing 4,450 acres of land, and 186 inhabitants who reside in scattered farmhouses. The ratable value is £1,977. The soil is light, lying on gritstone, and is chiefly in pasture. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor and one of the landowners; the other proprietors are G. H. Cammell, Esq., J.P., C.C.; Col. John Ashton Shuttleworth, Hathersage; Exors. of C. F. Broomhead, the Duke of Norfolk; the Duke of Rutland, B. A. Firth, Esq., A. Whiteman, F. W. Wilson, H. C. Shaw, and the Exors. of G. W. Wilson. The township was enclosed about 70 years ago, but a considerable portion is moorland. On the eastern border, separating it from the adjoining moors of Yorkshire, is Stanage (Stone Edge), a ridge of high rocks, one of which bears the name of Stanage Pole. The old pack horse road from Manchester to Sheffield passes over the moors.

A branch of the Eyre family was settled at North Lees in this township, and their quaint old hall, now a farmhouse, remains in a fair state of preservation. In a small plantation near it is the picturesque ruin of a Catholic chapel which the Eyres obtained permission to build in the first year of James II., but three years later when the last Stuart King was driven from the throne on account of his religion, a mob of neighbouring Protestants assembled and wrecked the building.

For the election of a district councillor, as provided by the Parish and District Councils Act, Outseats is united with Offerton.

HOGNASTON.

This is a parish and township containing 1,384 acres of land, the greater portion of which is laid down in pasture. The ratable value is £2,226, and the population in 1891 was 249. The principal landowners are Henry Chandos-Pole-Gell, Esq., J.P., Hopton Hall (who is also lord of the manor); Rev. Hamilton Gell; Mrs. Hannah Bunting; J. H. D. Harvey; John Millington, Wirksworth; Mrs. Hannah Coxon; John Ralph Melland Thompson, Esq., Ilkeston; Robert Whittaker's Executors; W. D. Heathcote; J. B. Blackwall, Esq., Blackwall, Kirk Ireton; Richard Wall, Esq., Wirksworth; Joseph A. Webster; Ralph Frost; William Sims; and John Archer, Etwall.

Hognaston (Ochenavestun in Domesday Book) was, at the time of the Norman Survey, a berewick or hamlet subject to Ashbourn, and formed part of the Crown lands. It was included in the royal grants to the Ferrers family, and passed, with other forfeited estates, to Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. The manor subsequently passed through several hands, and became intermixed with the manor of Wirksworth, which extends into this township.

The village is pleasantly situated on the south-east side of a ridge of highlands, five miles S.W. from Wirksworth, which is the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew, is a venerable edifice, exhibiting in its architecture Early Norman and later styles. The original plan comprised chancel, nave with south porch, and a low western tower. A north aisle was added in 1879, when the church was restored at a cost of £2,600. The chancel was also rebuilt at the same time. Within the south porch is the original Norman doorway, its mouldings, enriched with zig-zag ornament, being still in good preservation. Filling up the semi-circular head is a stone tympanum, bearing some rudely incised figures, which were doubtless full of meaning, though their interpretation is now a matter of dispute. The centre figure is a man in a tunic, with right hand extended, holding a pastoral staff. On his right is a lamb, carrying in its paw a cross with circular head; and on his left are three wild animals—a boar, a fox, and a wolf. The tower, apparently of 12th century date, is surmounted by battlements with a crocketed pinnacle at each corner, and beneath each is a grotesque head forming a gargoyle. There are two bells in the tower; one, without inscription, is probably of pre-Reformation date; the other is inscribed "H. Bucston, N. Bradley, 1670." The circular head of the font is also very ancient, but the clustered shaft and base on which it rests are modern. The pulpit is a handsome piece of work, ornamented with the valuable "Blue-John" stone from Castleton.

Hognaston was anciently a parochial chapelry under Ashbourn, and was included in the grant of the Mother Church to the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln. After the Reformation the rectorial tithes passed into lay hands, and now belong to G. H. Errington, Esq. The patronage was transferred to the Bishop of Southwell on the formation of that see. The Rev. Geo. Wilkes Russell is the present vicar. In 1891 the Ecclesiastical Commissioners sold land in the parish and augmented the living with £70 per annum—present net yearly value, £126, with residence.

The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here, built in 1827; and the Congregationalists erected a new church in 1882, at a cost of £460.

The Old Hall, the property and residence of Mr. Ralph Frost, dates from about the year 1500; but its history is devoid of interest. The house now occupied by W. W. Stafford was in the 18th century an inn, called the Pack Horse, and the old swing sign-board, bearing on each side a good painting of a pack horse with saddle and bells, is in the possession of Mr. J. A. Webster, post-master. The Websters have been located in the parish for two or three centuries; and as far back as 1692 it is recorded, in a letter in "Husbandry and Trade Improved, &c.," by John Houghton, F.R.S., that "one John Webster, of Hogneston, in Darbyshire, and six horses, between Pike Hall and Hurdlow, were starved to death" in a very severe snow storm. The village feast, or "Wakes" as generally called, is held on the first Sunday after September 4th.

Hognaston is in Ashbourne rural district, and with Atlow added returns one member to the district council.

CHARITIES.—The poor receive a rent-charge of 10s., left by Thomas Allsop, in 1679; and they have also £5 from the Rev. Fr. Gisborne's charity.

The school was built in 1871 by Mrs. Bunting, in memory of her husband, at a cost of £400, and is the property of that lady.

HULLAND.

This parish embraces the townships of Hulland, Hulland Ward, Hulland Ward Intakes, and Biggin. It is situated in Appletree hundred, county council and petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne. In carrying out the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, Biggin has been added to Hulland township for the election of a district councillor; Hulland Ward has been united with Hulland Ward Intakes, and a parish council of five members has been assigned to the united parish. The township of Hulland comprises 918½ acres, rateable value £1,574, and population 222. The principal landowners are John Charles Burton Borough, Esq., Dr. John Cockayne Copestake, Mr. Robert Walker, Thomas Allcock, Herbert Lamb, William Tomlinson, Eors. of Robert Whittaker, Esq., William Harlow, William Lemon, John Woodhouse, and Arthur Taylor.

The manor of Hoilant, as the name is written in Domesday Book, was held at the time of the Norman Survey by Geoffrey Alselin. In the reign of Henry III., Sir Robert de Ashbourn held the manor and obtained episcopal permission to establish a chantry here. A few years later, in 1296, Edmund, Earl of Lancaster, died, seized of the manor of Hulland, and at that time the Bradbournes are mentioned as holding freehold estates here under him. John de Bradbourne made Hough, or Hulland, his principal residence and rebuilt the manor house. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Richard Vernon, Knt., and in conjunction with her, in 1485, founded a chantry in the chapel of his manor house, and endowed it with lands then worth £5 9s. 10d. per annum. A coheiress of the Bradbournes married Sir Humphrey Ferrer, of Tamworth, and the estate was purchased by that family in 1594. In the 17th century it came, by purchase, in the possession of John Borowe (as the name was then spelt), from whom it has descended to John Charles Burton Borough, Esq., the present owner. The old hall, the residence of the Bradbournes, is said to have been demolished during the Civil War; portions of the moat still remain, and within living memory were filled with water and kept in good order. The present Old Hall was built out of the ruins on another and higher site. It is now a farmhouse in the occupation of Mr. David Gregory; but though reroofed and restored a few years ago, some old oak wainscoting still remains as evidence of its former gentility. In close proximity is the Hall which superseded the above. It is a brick building, erected about 120 years ago, but much improved and enlarged from time to time, and is now the residence of Lieut.-Colonel John Edward Paget Mosley (late Bengal Staff Corps).

The village stands 4½ miles E. from Ashbourne, on an eminence about 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. The nearest railway station is Shottle, 3½ miles distant. A church, dedicated to Christ, was erected here in 1837, and a parochial district, embracing the townships above mentioned, allotted to it. The old chantry chapel was suppressed as a chantry in the reign of Edward VI., and its endowment confiscated, but it continued to be occasionally used as a chapel-of-ease to the mother church of Ashbourne as late as 1712. The present church is a plain Gothic building with an embattled tower at the west end containing one bell. Some of the windows are stained glass, memorials of members of the Borough family. The living is a perpetual curacy in the gift of trustees, worth £394, and in the incumbency of the Rev. Robert Leighton Barnett, M.A., St. Peter's College, Cambridge. The tithes were commuted in 1847, the rectorial for £122, and the vicarial for £9.

There are two Nonconformist chapels in the village belonging to the Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists respectively. The school is endowed with £400, given by the Borough family.

HULLAND WARD is a township comprising 1,559 acres, ratable value £2,950, population 392. The principal owners are J. C. B. Borough, Esq., Lord Scarsdale, R. W. Chandos Pole, Esq., Mr. Wallis, J. G. Crompton, Esq., Mr. George Travis, Mr. John Yates, Mr. J. B. Evans-Blackwall, Henry Swingler, Esq., Mrs. Travis, John Shaw, Esq., Mrs. Milnes, Mr. George Cooper, and Mr. George Thomas Webster White. The soil is mostly gravel and sand, and is chiefly laid down in pasture and grass. The district formerly embraced under the name of Hulland Ward was an extensive tract of open country mostly extra-parochial, which, at the enclosure, was divided amongst the eight adjoining parishes. Mansell Park, consisting of two farms, and Shuckton Manor are now added to this township for rating purposes, but ecclesiastically they remain in Mugginton, as before. The latter has been in the occupation of the Johnson family for many years. The house was rebuilt, in 1729, by Samuel Burton, Esq., and contains a fine oak cabinet of the time of Queen Anne. Ward Gate is a village in the township, and Cross-o'-th'-Hands is a hamlet so named from a public-house that formerly stood here. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here, built in 1831.

HULLAND WARD INTAKES is a township and small village comprising 452 acres of land belonging to J. C. B. Borough, Esq., Lord Scarsdale, the Vicar of Mugginton, and Mr. George Smedley. It is valued for rating purposes at £513, and had, in 1891, a population of 27. A chapel was founded here and endowed with 18 acres of land by one Francis Brown in 1723. It has never been consecrated, and consequently bears no dedication, but is popularly known by the soubriquet of "Halter Devil Chapel." Various versions of the origin of this curious name have been published, but the following is the story most generally current amongst the oldest gossips:—Brown once had occasion to make a journey after night-fall. The night was wild and stormy, and vivid flashes of lightning, accompanied by terrific peals of thunder, followed each other in quick succession. A servant boy was sent to bring his horse out of the field, but the boy, terrified by the thunder, was unable to catch the animal, and returned without it. Brown was a drunken, dissolute, devil-may-care man, and, taking the halter from the boy, he swore that if he couldn't halter the horse he would halter the Devil. Lantern in hand he went to the field, secured what he thought was his horse and brought it to the stable, where it vanished in a flash of lightning. From that time Brown became a changed man, and built a chapel and endowed it with 18 acres of land on condition that divine service be held therein once a month by the rector of Mugginton. The chapel adjoins the farmhouse, and was rebuilt on a little larger scale a few years ago, at a cost of £70. Previous to the rebuilding of the house, about 28 years ago, the following inscription was on a stone above the door:—

Francis Brown in his old age

and these additional lines were subsequently painted underneath:—

Who being old and full of evil
He one night haltered the devil.

The Mugginton registers record his death in 1731, but nothing further is known of him.

BIGIN is a small township containing 635 acres of land; ratable value £985, and population 112. The soil is various, but mostly clay and peat, and is chiefly in pasture. The principal owners are J. B. Evans-Blackwall, Esq., Mr. William Oliver Newton, Mrs. Sarah Pearson, Exors. of William Pearson, Mr. David Gregory, Exors. of Joseph Booth, Mrs. Allsop, Mrs. Hawkins, and Joseph Riley. The tithes were commuted in 1844, the rectorial for £101 and the vicarial for £2 6s. per annum. The township was, for several centuries previous to its severance in 1837, included in the parish of Wirksworth, and at a still earlier period it was part of the chapelry of Kniveton. It was then known as New Biggin, and belonged to Robert de Ashbourn, who, in the 13th century, obtained permission to establish a chantry in his chapel of New Biggin. Not a vestige of the building remains, and even the site is not now known. The village is small, and stands in a valley five miles S.W. of Wirksworth. On Lane End farm is a chalybeate spring, which is reputed efficacious in cutaneous diseases. Biggin is parcel of the manor and fee of Duffield.

IDRIDGEHAY AND ALTON.

Idridgehay and Alton form a joint parish and township, which also includes part of Iretton Wood. The total area is 1,945 acres; ratable value, £3,383; and population, 309. It is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division, county court district, petty sessional division, and rural deanery of Wirksworth, and poor-law union of Belper. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 Idridgehay and Alton elect five parish councillors and one rural district councillor.

The village of Idridgehay is pleasantly situated on the west bank of the Ecclesburn, three miles S. from Wirksworth, and 10 N. from Derby. Close by is a station on the Wirksworth branch of the Midland Railway. A church, dedicated to St. James, was erected here in 1844-5, at a cost of £2,400, and shortly afterwards a district, carved out of Wirksworth parish, was allotted to it.

It is a handsome edifice of stone in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, side aisle, and tower, with spire. There is accommodation for 240. The living, constituted a vicarage in 1867, was endowed with £1,500 by Robert Cresswell, Esq., who was also one of the largest contributors towards the erection of the church. It is worth £267 per annum, in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield, and held by the Rev. J. B. Crump, who succeeded the late Rev. T. V. Mellor in the early part of the present year. There are 39 acres of glebe. The parochial school is endowed with £25 per annum, left by Miss Cresswell in 1866.

Alton Manor, which forms part of the township, contains 480 acres. It was held by the Byrons for three or four centuries, and afterwards belonged successively to the Blackwalls, Iretons, and Mellors. From the latter it was purchased by the Hon. Anchetil Grey, whose relative, the Earl of Stamford, sold it in 1747 to the Wilmots, from whom it was purchased by the late James Milnes, Esq. The present owner is that gentleman's eldest son, who assumed the name of Walthall in lieu of Milnes under the will of his maternal grandfather. A handsome mansion, in the Elizabethan style, was built in 1846-7 by the late Mr. Milnes.

Ireton Wood is a small village, one mile W. of Idridgehay. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here, built in 1869, at a cost of £200.

Post and Money Order Office, Idridgehay; John Wm. Wayne, postmaster. Letters, via Derby, arrive at 5-30 a.m., despatched 7-25 p.m., Sunday included. KIRK IRETON.

This is a parish and township containing 1,920 acres. The ecclesiastical boundary encloses a larger area, including the whole of Ireton Wood, formerly a separate township, but now for all civil purposes parcelled out amongst the townships of Kirk Ireton, Idridgehay, and Alton. The ratable value is £3,750, and the population 514. The parish is in the Ashbourne union and rural district, petty sessional and county council division, county court district, and deanery of Wirksworth. The parish council consists of six councillors, and the parish elects one rural district councillor. The landowners are the Rev. Hamilton Gell, Winslade, Devon; H. W. Walthall, Esq., Alton Manor, Wirksworth; J. B. Evans-Blackwall, Esq., Joseph Matkin, John Matkin, Samuel Dean, Joseph Wheatercroft, Esq., Wirksworth; Moses Harvey, Isaac Slater, and Joseph Machin, Borrowash, Derby.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Hiretune (Kirk Ireton) was a berewick of Wirksworth, belonging to the Crown, and it subsequently passed with that manor to the Duchy of Lancaster, from whom it is held on lease. A portion of the parish lies within the manor of Hulland.

The village of Kirk Ireton occupies a pleasant situation on the side of a hill three miles S.S.W. from Wirksworth, 12 miles N.W. from Derby, and two miles from Idridgehay station, on the Wirksworth branch of the Midland railway. The church, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and western tower, containing a ring of three bells, and a small one which is rung immediately before the commencement of service. There was no church here at the time of the Domesday Survey, but one was erected soon afterwards, and a considerable portion of the original massive Norman work still remains. This may be seen in the round arches of the aisles, in the lower stage of the tower with its semicircular archway, and in the rounded doorway surrounding a later pointed one within the porch. The church was thoroughly restored in the Decorated style in the first half of the 14th century, to which belong the upper stage of the tower, the south porch, and the vestry on the north side of the chancel. The east ends of the aisles are a still later addition. On Sunday, May 12th, 1811, a terrific gale stripped the lead off the roof, and so injured the tower that it was found necessary to brace it with iron clamps on the west side. In 1873-4 the fabric was thoroughly repaired at a cost of over £600; the old west gallery was taken down, and the church reseated with open benches; and in 1891 a further sum of £200 was spent on the restoration of the organ. There are but few ancient monuments; a brass commemorates Agnes, wife of Robert Mellor, of Idridgehay, who died in 1580, and behind the communion table are two stones in memory of Thomas and Elizabeth Catesby, who died in 1663, and their daughter Ellen, wife of Robert Mellor, of Idridgehay. The east window, a very handsome one of the Decorated style, is a memorial of the late Rev. Charles Evans and his wife. The font is a memorial of the Rev. Robert Gell, late rector of the parish. The living is a rectory, valued in the King's books at £7 10s. 10d., now worth £350 net, derived from 70 acres of glebe and tithe rent-charge. It was formerly in the gift of the Bishop of Lincoln, but was transferred to the Bishop of Southwell after the establishment of that see. The Rev. William Hombersley, M.A., Oxon, is the present rector.

The Primitive Methodists erected a new chapel in 1875 at a cost of £500, to supersede one built in 1836, and now used as a Sunday school. There is a day school, with departments for boys, girls, and infants, attended by 130 children. The village feast is celebrated on Trinity Sunday.

Callow Moor, partly in this parish and partly in Wirksworth, was enclosed by Act of Parliament in 1803. Blackwall is a hamlet in this parish, comprising two farms. It was long the property and residence of the Blackwalls, who obtained possession of it in the 16th century, and are supposed to have given their name to the manor. The present owner, J. Blackwall Evans-Blackwall, Esq., is the eldest son of the late Rev. Charles Evans, by his wife Emma, daughter and heir of the late John Blackwall, Esq. He assumed the name of Blackwall in 1871. Anthony Blackwall was born here in 1674, and was educated at Emanuel College, Cambridge, where he took his degree of M.A. in 1698. He was for some time head master of the Derby Free Grammar School, from which he removed to take charge of the Grammar School at Market Bosworth, where he died in 1730. He was the author of several works, the most important being "An Introduction to the Classics," and "The Sacred Classics Defended and Illustrated."

CHARITIES.—John Storer, a native of the parish, in 1590, gave, by indenture, to the bailiffs and burgesses of Derby, the sum of £52, the interest thereof to be distributed as follows:—10s. to provide a godly sermon on Trinity Sunday in the church of Kirk Ireton, 12d. for the minister's dinner, and 12d. for the dinner of one of the said bailiffs or burgesses who accompanied the preacher to hear the sermon, and 40s. to be given to the poor of the parish. The attendance of a member of the Derby Corporation has long lapsed, and the sermon has been for many years past preached by the rector of the parish. John Hutchinson, by will in 1643, left a rent-charge of 20s. yearly to the poor. John Slater, by deed in 1686, left certain lands, called Nether Field and Blackwall Flat, the rents of which were to be appropriated as follows:—£8 per annum to a schoolmaster for teaching 16 poor children of Kirk Ireton, and the remainder to be given to the poor. This is now distributed at Midsummer and Christmas, in sums varying from 3s. to 21s. Robert Cooper, by will in 1728, gave to the poor his lands, called Side Wood, containing 12a. 1r. 27p., and a wood, containing 2a. 0r. 18p. The rent is distributed among the poor, together with the interest of £350 obtained by the sale of timber. William Miles, by will dated 1859, left £19 19s., the interest thereof to be given to the poor in sums of 1s. each, on Trinity Sunday, by the rector and churchwardens. Elizabeth Johnson, spinster, late of Burton-on-Trent, gave, by will in 1861, the sum of £500, to be invested in the three per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, the dividends to be annually expended in the clothing and education of six poor boys, being natives and residents of Kirk Ireton parish. The sum of £7 5s. is received from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's bequest, and is laid out in the purchase of flannel for the poor.

Post Office at Mrs. Selina Smedley's. Letters, via Derby, arrive from Idridgehay at 7-10 a.m., and from Wirksworth at 8-10 a.m. Despatch at 4-40 p.m. No Sunday business. Nearest Money Order Office and Railway Station, Idridgehay (two miles). Nearest Telegraph Office, Wirksworth (three miles).

KNIVETON.

This is a parish and township in the hundred of Wirksworth, county council electoral division of Hartington, petty sessional division, county court district, union and deanery of Ashbourne. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, the parish returns one member to the district council.

The total area is 2,040½ acres, ratable value £2,917, and population 269. The land belongs to several proprietors, of whom the most extensive are the Exors. of Messrs. William and Thomas Smith, Clifton, Ashbourne (lords of the manor); John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; William Hunter Baillie, Esq., 43, Norfolk Street, Hyde Park, London; Mrs. Emily Bell, Repton Heys, Stapenhill, Burton-on-Trent; Mr. F. C. Smith, Mrs. Toogood, Ashbourne; Mr. Frederick Jackson, Osmanton; Exors. of John Heathcote, Mrs. Jane Cartwright, Fenny Bentley; Rev. W. Dodd, John Hall, William Warrington, Joshua Hodgkinson, Henry Rowbotham, Robert Wigley, Adam Smedley, Mrs. Sarah Wigley, Sale, Manchester; W. and T. Challinor, John Melland, Atlow Wynn; J. B. Evans-Blackwall, Esq., John Charles Adams, Pethills; George Middleton Althorp, Henry Abell, George Peach, Sir W. Fitzherbert, and Mrs. Brittlebank. Limestone of superior quality abounds in the hills, and the stone used in the building of Osmanton Manor was quarried here. The soil is rich pasture land, and chiefly appropriated to dairy farming.

The manor of Chenivetun (Kniveton) belonged for several centuries to a family which took its name from the place. They had a mansion here which is supposed to have stood at Pethills. In the reign of Edward I. the elder branch settled at Bradley, and the younger one at Mercaston, in the parish of Mugginton. Sir Andrew Kniveton, Bart., suffered severely during the Cromwellian wars and sold a considerable portion of his property. This manor was purchased by one Lowe, and it afterwards passed to the Pegges, from whom it was purchased by Mrs. Meynell, of Bradley. It subsequently passed to Mrs. E. Stoddart and now belongs to the Exors. of Messrs. William and Thomas Smith, Clifton, Ashbourne.

The village stands on the Ashbourne and Wirksworth road, three miles from the former place and six from the latter. The church is a small ancient edifice, consisting of chancel, nave, south porch, and a low tower with short spire containing two bells. The exterior walls are cemented and pebble-dashed. There was a church here in Norman times, and probably earlier, part of which was retained when the fabric was rebuilt in a later style. The porch, which is entered by a plain semicircular arch, belonged to the Norman church, and a circular stone bearing a representation of the crucifixion, rudely carved, probably dates from an earlier period. This stone was found when the church was repewed in 1842, and is now built into the south wall and covered with glass to preserve it from further injury. The three-light east window is of Perpendicular design, and is filled with stained glass in memory of Harriet Stafford, who died in 1879; and there is a memorial window in the south wall of the chancel to George Stafford, who died in 1884. Here are preserved some fragments of old stained glass representing the quartered arms of the ancient family of Kniveton. The font is circular, and stands on a clustered shaft of eight pillars. It bears the date 1663, but Mr. Cox assigns it to the 13th century, and believes the figures "merely record the year in which it was restored to the church on the revival of episcopal doctrine."* The gold communion service was presented to the church by a Lady Kniveton. The registers date from 1594, and contain numerous early entries relative to the Hurd family, one of whom, in 1715, founded the school and endowed it with £9 per annum, and left 20s. yearly to the poor. The original dedication, according to Dr. Pegge, was to St. John the Baptist, but ascribed in later times to St. Michael. The living is a vicarage worth £72 net per annum, and held by the Rev. Robert Gray, B.A., Cambridge. Kniveton was originally a chapelry of Ashbourne, and was appropriated with that church to the dean and chapter of Lincoln, and was subsequently transferred to the dean and chapter of Lichfield. The latter, in 1549, granted the rectory house, glebe, tithes, &c., reserving only their ecclesiastical jurisdiction, to Thomas Gell, son of Ralph Gell,

* "Churches of Derbyshire," Vol. II., p. 507.

Esq., of Hopton, for £5 per annum. In 1796 this estate was sold by the trustees of Philip Gell to Mr. Evans and others, and the tithes were shortly afterwards sold to the respective landowners. John Harrison, Esq., of Snelston Hall, is the present patron.

The Primitive Methodists have a chapel here, erected in 1832, and thoroughly repaired in 1893 at a cost of £100.

The village feast is held on the first Sunday after the 11th of October, and recently the ancient custom of Well-dressing has been revived, and held yearly in June since 1891, and the day given up to festivity. The floral decorations and designs exhibit considerable artistic taste.

CHARITIES.—In addition to Hurd's annuity, above mentioned, the poor receive £5 10s. from the Rev. Francis Gisborne's bequest (see Bradley), and 20s. yearly left by Thomas Gaunt.

Post Office, William Mather, sub-postmaster. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive about 8-0 a.m., and are despatched at 5 p.m. Telegraph Office, Ashbourne, three miles.

LONGFORD.

This parish comprises the townships of Longford, Hollington, and Rodsley, situated in the hundred of Appletree, electoral division of Sudbury, poor law union, petty sessional division, and county court district of Ashbourne, and rural deanery of Longford.

The township of Longford comprises 3,006 acres; its ratable value is £4,903; and the population in 1891 was 361. A parish council consisting of five members has been assigned to it, and it also returns one councillor to Ashbourne rural district council. The principal landowners are the Hon. Henry John Coke, Longford Hall (lord of the manor); Miss Caroline Bradshaw, Welby Gardens, Grantham; Messrs. Henry and Thomas Holmes, Clifton Cottage, Ashbourne; Mrs. Hawksworth, The Spath; Arthur Benwell, Rolleston, Staffordshire; Rev.

T. A. Anson (glebe); Edward Smith; Thomas Gerrard; Joseph Vernon; Henry Salt; and John Sessions. The soil is a good rich loam, with some clay, and is chiefly in pasture. The first cheese factory built in England and worked on the American principle was opened here on the 4th of May, 1870. It is a large wooden structure, with appliance for working up the produce of from 500 to 600 cows. The proprietors are "The Longford Dairy Association," a company of farmers who combine to work up their produce into butter and cheese.

This manor, at the time of the Domesday Survey, appears to have been known as Bubedene, and was divided into two parts, one being held by Elfin under Henry de Ferrers, and the other pertained to the Bishopric of Chester, then recently removed from Coventry. Soon afterwards it came into the possession of the Longfords, from whom it took its present name. Bubedene was in time contracted into Bubden, and the name Bupton or Bampton Green is still applied to a farm and two houses in the township. The manor remained with the Longfords till 1610, when Sir Nicholas, the last male heir, died without surviving issue, leaving his two sisters coheiresses. One of them married a Dethick of Newhall, and their daughter and heiress conveyed the manor to her husband, a Reddiche, and one of their coheiresses married Clement Coke, Esq., sixth son of Lord Chief Justice Coke, who thus became possessed of the manor. Edward Coke, their elder son, was created a baronet in 1641. The title and estate passed in succession to his two sons, Robert and Edward, and the latter, on whose death in 1727 the title became extinct, bequeathed the estate to his relative, Edward Coke, Esq., brother of Thomas Coke, created Earl of Leicester. This gentleman, dying without issue in 1733, left Longford to his younger brother Robert, at whose death in 1750 it was inherited by his nephew, Wenman Roberts, Esq., who assumed the surname and arms of Coke, and was the father of Thomas William Coke, Esq., of Holkham, created Earl of Leicester, whose son, the Hon. Henry John Coke, is the present owner. The Hall is a fine old mansion of red brick, with stone dressings, surrounded by an extensive park and beautiful gardens and pleasure grounds.

The village of Longford is large and scattered, and is situated 7 miles S.S.E. from Ashbourn and 8 miles E. from Derby. The church, dedicated to St. Chad, was restored and rebuilt, with the exception of the north aisle, in 1893, at a cost of £1,800, raised by subscription and a legacy. It consists of spacious chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and a lofty western tower, the lower chamber of which is used as a vestry. The three stone stalls, in which the officiating priest and his attendants sat during certain portions of the mass, still remain in the south wall of the chancel, as also does the old piscina niche. The floor of the sanctuary and the steps at the communion rails are of alabaster. The nave is separated from the aisles by four pointed arches, springing from circular pillars, and the supports of its high flat oaken roof rest on stone corbels representing human heads. The east end of each aisle was formerly partitioned off by a carved oak screen, to form a chapel or quire. The one on the north side belonged to the Bentleys of Bentley, and that on the south to the Longfords. The church was renovated and re-pewed in 1843, by which 126 additional sittings were obtained, at a total outlay of £800. These pews were replaced by chairs in the nave and south aisle at the recent restoration. There are several beautiful and interesting monuments in the church. On the north side of the chancel is an ancient altar tomb, bearing the effigy of a priest in canonical vestments. It doubtless commemorates one of the early rectors, but there is no inscription by which he can be identified. The Longford monuments are now placed at the east end of the south aisle. There are five figures—four knights in armour and a lady. One lies on a raised altar tomb built into the south wall, under an arched recess, the others on the floor. There are also here the lid of a stone coffin and part of another. On the north wall of the chancel is a monument to Thomas William Coke, Earl of Leicester, surmounted by a bust beautifully executed in marble. He represented Norfolk in Parliament for the long period of 57 years, and died at Longford in 1842. The memorial was erected by subscription, at a cost of 300 guineas, as a testimony of the high esteem and regard in which he was held by persons of various classes and opinions. On the same wall is another beautiful and costly monument in white marble, on the entablature of which is represented, almost life-size, an angel bearing to heaven a lady and her babe. The inscription is:—"The offering of an attached husband to the memory of Anne Amelia, Countess Leicester, third daughter of Charles, 4th Earl of Albemarle. She married, first, Thomas William Coke, 1st Earl of Leicester, of Holkham, by whom she left four sons and one daughter, and secondly the Right Hon. Edward Ellice. She died 22nd July, 1844, aged 40. Her only child by her second marriage survived his birth a few hours, and is buried with his mother in the vault of the Coke family in this church." There are other monuments and brasses to the Coke family. There are also several memorials of the Peacocks, who were for upwards of a century seated at Rodsley. There are six bells in the tower. The registers date from 1538.

There were formerly both rectors and vicars of Longford, the latter serving the cure of souls, the former being probably non-resident. Since 1863 rectors only have been appointed. The present net value of the living is £457, with residence; patron, the Hon. Henry John Coke; rector, Rev. Thomas Anchitel Anson, M.A. (Jesus Coll., Cantab.) The rectorial tithe was commuted for £204, and the vicarial for £77 18s. 6d. The rectory house, gardens, and glebe occupy 106 acres.

New school premises, with master's house, were erected by the late Hon. E. Coke in 1875. There are two departments capable of accommodating 104. The Wesleyan Chapel, a brick building, was erected in 1874. A friendly society has been established in the village for upwards of a century. There are over 300 members, who meet in a commodious clubroom erected by the Hon. H. J. Coke in 1875 for the use of the society. The funds exceed £4,000.

Mammerton is a hamlet consisting of two farms, half-a-mile S. of the village, and Nether Thurstaston is another hamlet one mile S.E.

HOLLINGTON is a township and small village six miles S.E. from Ashbourne, containing 1,034 acres of land; ratable value £1,868; and population 181. The landowners are the Hon. H. J. Coke, who is also lord of the manor; John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; George Crompton, Esq., Stanton Hall, Notts; Rev. T. A. Anson, Longford; Mrs. Shirley; Mrs. C. Hayne; John Radford; John Yates, Brailsford; William Hall; William C. Beeston, Draycott; J. Wood's Trustees; and Mrs. Irvin. The Primitive Methodists have had a chapel here since 1847, and a National School was opened in 1876. At the inclosure of the common in 1819, an allotment of 100 acres was awarded in lieu of tithes.

Hollington elects one rural district councillor.

RODSLEY township contains 820 acres; ratable value £1,375. Under the new Local Government Act Rodsley has been added to Yeaveley for the election of a rural district councillor. The soil is fertile and chiefly in pasture. The principal owners are the Hon. H. J. Coke, lord of the manor; Etwall Corporation; Joseph Cooke, Ashbourne; Sir Peter C. Walker; Exors. of E. Bradley; Duke of Devonshire; George J. Peach, Clifton; and John Copestake, Edlaston. The village is small and scattered, and is situated five miles S.S.E. of Ashbourne. The Wesleyans have a chapel here.

CHARITIES.—Sir Robert Coke, by his will in 1687, founded and endowed an almshouse at Longford for six poor people, men or women, each inmate to receive 2s. a week for diet and 6d. for fuel, and one grey cloth gown yearly; he further directed that £10 yearly be paid to the vicar of Longford for reading prayers to the poor daily. Dame Catherine Coke, in 1688, gave certain lands in Rodsley, the rents thereof to be applied in the education of poor children. Joseph Holme, in 1768, left 20s. yearly for teaching poor children of Hollington township; and a rent-charge of 20s. a year is paid to the poor of Rodsley.

LONGSTONE.

This parish comprises the townships of Great and Little Longstone, and is situated in the hundred of High Peak; in the electoral division, poor law union, county court district, petty sessional division, and rural deanery of Bakewell. A ridge of limestone hills, called Longstone Edge, stretches from east to west along the northern side of the parish, sending off spurs between which there is some beautiful valley scenery. At the western extremity of this ridge is Monsall Dale, a secluded and picturesque vale, which has been termed, not inaptly, the "Arcadia of Derbyshire."

The township of Great Longstone contains 2,880 acres of land, exclusive of roads, wastes, and water, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Devonshire (who is lord of the manor), Mrs. Bullivant, Mr. James Orr, and Mr. Joseph Wager. The ratable value is £7,761, and the population 535. Great Longstone has the privilege of a parish council of six members, and elects one district councillor and guardian.

Both Longstones are mentioned in Domesday Book—the one as a berewick of Ashford, the other as a berewick of Bakewell, then part of the Royal demesnes. Both are written Langesdune, but are not otherwise distinguished. King John granted Ashford, including Great Longstone, to a Welshman named Wenunwen, whose son Griffin, in 1262, founded a chantry in the chapel of Longstone, and endowed it with two oxgangs of land in the township. The manor subsequently reverted to the Crown, and was given to Edmund Plantagenet, Earl of Kent, from whom it passed to the Hollands and thence to the Nevilles, and was purchased by Sir William Cavendish about 300 years ago. In 1629 the Earl of Devonshire gave two oxgangs of land in Great Longstone for the support of the curate, stipulating at the same time that if the curate absented himself without finding an efficient substitute, he should pay to the chapelwardens 5s. for the poor. The Wrights are said to have possessed lands here since the reign of Edward III. The Rowland family was seated here in the 14th century. Their lands passed by marriage to the Staffords of Eyam. In the Parliamentary Rolls of 1403 is a curious petition from Godfrey Rowland, who styles himself "a poor and simple esquire," and complains that Sir Thomas Wendesley, Knight, John Dean, vicar of Hope, and others, came to his house at Mikel Longesdon, and with force and arms broke into the said house, carrying off goods and stock to the value of 200 marks, and also the petitioner, whom they carried to the castle of the High Peak, where he was kept in custody for six whole days without meat or drink, and then cut off his right hand, to his perpetual injury and loss. He therefore prays for such proper and hasty remedy as Parliament may order.

The village of Great Longstone is situated in the midst of some wild mountain scenery, three miles N.N.W. from Bakewell, and half-a-mile from Longstone station on the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland Railway. Tourists and visitors will find every comfort and accommodation at the White Lion, a conveniently situated hotel kept by Mr. C. H. Buzzard. At the west end of the village is an ancient stone cross, and in another place may be seen the bull-ring—a relic of the brutal sport in which our forefathers delighted. The church, which is dedicated to St. Giles, is an ancient edifice of stone, in the Gothic style, consisting of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, south porch, and western tower containing five bells. This church has fortunately suffered very little from the efforts of modern improvers, and in the late restoration completed in 1873, and carried out under the direction of Norman Shaw, Esq., architect, all its ancient details have been reverently preserved or replaced by carefully executed copies. The most striking feature of the interior is the fine old roofs of chancel, nave, and aisles, with their moulded rafters, embattled cornices, and beautifully carved bosses. The east window of five lights is filled with stained glass in memory of the Wright family. The aisles are separated from the nave by six narrow pointed arches, and the east end of the south aisle is shut off by an old oak screen, on which are the arms of Eyre impaling Stafford, and an armed leg—the crest of the family. Within the enclosure is a black marble tablet, imbedded in which is a finely engraved plate of copper inscribed as follows:—

“Here lyeth Rowland Eyre of Hassope, Esq., and Gartrede, his wiffe, one of the daughters and coheireesse of Humfrey Stafford, Esq., by whoe hee had twelve children, eight sonnes and fower daughters, whoe hath given unto the Chappel of Greate Longsden for the maintenance of Divine Service XXs. yerely, and to the Chappel of Baslowe for the maintenance of Divine Service there XLs. yerely, to be paid by equall portions at the feasts of the Annuntiation of the Blessed Virgin S. Marie and St. Michaell ye Archangel, and also hath given unto the poore of the towne of Greate Longsden XXs. yerely, to be paid three days before Christmas and three days before Easter for ever. All which said several sumes are to be paid by Thomas Eyre, his sonne and heir apparent, and his heiress for ever. To whom I have given all my landes and rents in Tadington and Greate Longsden for ever for the true payment and performance of ye same,

Soe leavinge the miseries and troubles of this world with desire all may cease, I desire that all good Christians that read this will pray

Anno Dom. 1624.”

Above the inscription are the figures of a man and woman kneeling at desks face to face, and each holding a rosary in their hands. Between them is a representation of a skull and cross bones, but the crucifix that once surmounted them has been carefully obliterated, as has also the prayer for their souls at the end of the inscription. The Eyres were then, and still remain unshaken in their allegiance to the old religion; and though the above Rowland left two small endowments for the support of the churches of Great Longstone and Baslow, the crucifix and supplicatory prayer on his monument savoured too much of Popery for Protestant zeal to tolerate. The old oak pews were replaced by modern seats at the restoration. The old churchyard cross remains nearly perfect.

The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, is now a vicarage, in the gift of the Vicar of Bakewell, and held by the Rev. Giles Andrew, M.A. Its net value is returned at £192, with residence.

There is a small Wesleyan Methodist Chapel in the village, erected in 1842, and good National Schools, built by subscription in 1862. The village feast is held on the first Sunday after the 11th of September.

Holme is a hamlet, containing 476 acres, adjoining Bakewell on the north. It is included in the township of Great Longstone for all civil purposes, but is entirely detached therefrom by the intervening township of Rowland. The estate formerly belonged to Bernard Wells, Esq., who resided at Holme Hall, which he built in 1626. His daughter and coheiress married an Eyre.

Little Longstone is a township adjoining Great Longstone. Its estimated extent is 1,012 acres, ratable value £4,411, and population 145. There is the far-famed Monsall Dale, through which the river Wye winds its way in many a devious curve between green meadows or fern clad rocks and wooded banks, dotted here and there by rustic cottages almost hidden from view by the fine ash trees which surround them. The Midland Railway passes through the township, and is carried across the dale by a viaduct of five arches, 70 feet above the river. Monsall Dale Station is conveniently situated for those who wish to explore the beauties of the glen.

The descent of the manor of Little Longstone for three or four centuries after the Norman Conquest is very intricately involved and difficult to trace. Sir Thurston de Bower, who was living in 1392, is said to have been lord of the manor, and Walter Blount, Lord Mountjoy, died seized of it in 1474. Shortly after it was purchased by Robert Shakerley, and his descendant in the reign of Elizabeth sold the manor to the Countess of Shrewsbury, and it is now in the possession of her descendant, the Duke of Devonshire, who is also the principal landowner. The Rev. Hy. John Longsdon possesses land here which has been in the family since the reign of Edward I. Mr. E. E. Bullivant and James Orr, Esq., are also landowners.

Under the Local Government Act of 1894 Little Longstone with Brushfield elects one district councillor and guardian.

MAPPLETON,

Or more correctly MAPPLETON, is a small parish and township containing 786 acres of fertile land, lying on the eastern bank of the river Dove, and in close proximity to some of the beautiful scenery of Dovedale. The total ratable value is £2,000, and the population, in 1891, was 225. The principal owners are H. C. Okeover, Esq., J.P., D.L., Okeover Hall; Rev. Henry Buckston, Hope, who is lord of the manor; Sir Horace Blakiston, Bart.; Captain R. H. Goodwin-Gladwin, J.P., Hinchley Wood; Mrs. Goodwin; R. W. Hanbury, Esq., M.P., Ilam Hall; Exors. of the late C. Smith; Henry Maskery, Sandybrook; Rev. T. Greaves, and Mr. Robert Swindell. Mapleton is in the hundred of Wirksworth; electoral division, county court district, poor law union, petty sessional division, rural district, and deanery of Ashbourne.

The village is pleasantly situated on elevated ground by the river bank, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Ashbourne. The church, which is dedicated in honour of St. Mary, is a small oblong building surmounted at the west end by a dome and lantern, rebuilt on the site of an older one about the middle of last century. The west end is crossed by a gallery. The edifice possesses no architectural features worthy of notice. There are neat modern monuments to the memory of James Hawsworth, Esq., and Hannah his wife; Francis Goodwin, Esq., and Frances his wife; Henry John Goodwin, B.A., and Francis Heming, Esq. The living is a rectory consolidated with Ashbourne, worth £60 per annum.

The school is a good building of stone, erected in 1876 for the accommodation of 50 children. Close by is the teacher's house. In the village is an almshouse, founded by Rowland Okeover, Esq., in 1727, for three widows of clergymen of the Church of England. The number is now reduced to two, each of whom receives an annuity. The founder devised certain lands and premises at Atlow, the rents thereof to be distributed as he directed, but the Charity Commissioners have, within recent years, altered the application of the trust to suit the altered circumstances of the times. The sum of £20 yearly is paid to the organist, six boys and six girls receive clothes and other helps, and a fixed yearly sum to each of the almswomen, who reside in the almshouse.

The Manor House, pleasantly situated near the river Dove, is the property of H. C. Okeover, Esq., and the residence of Mr. George Wheeldon, who occupies the manor farm. Callow Hall, a handsome stone mansion in the Elizabethan style, stands midway between Mapleton and Ashbourne. It is the property of the Rev. H. Buckston. Hinchley Wood House is the seat and property of Capt. Goodwin-Gladwin, J.P., and the Cottage is the residence of the Dowager Lady Waterpark and the Hon. Susan F. Cavendish.

On the Staffordshire side of the river, contiguous with Mapleton, is Okeover Hall, a substantial mansion of brick with stone dressings, erected in the early part of last century. It is the seat of Haughton Charles Okeover, Esq., J.P., D.L., whose family is said to have been seated here before the base-born Norman set his foot on English ground. The house contains many valuable pictures by the old masters; amongst them is Raffaele's "Holy Family," which is almost of priceless value. Titian is represented by "St. Veronica and the Sacred Handkerchief," Rubens by "Christ meeting the Women in the Garden," and there are also many other genuine old pictures. The park is of considerable extent, and contains about 150 deer. There are a few vestiges of the old Saxon home of the Okeovers; the moat still remains, and the bridge which crossed it is still in situ. Near the hall is the Church of All Saints', originally built as a private chapel. It is a handsome structure in the Gothic style, and was thoroughly restored, in 1858, by the late Sir G. G. Scott, the eminent architect. The chancel is separated from the nave by a handsome carved oak screen surmounted by a cross. The nave is fitted with oak benches to seat 50 persons, and at the west end is a large square tower, in the lower chamber of which is a very fine organ. There are several handsome marble tablets and memorial windows to the Okeover family. The living is a donative, patron H. C. Okeover, Esq.

Post Office at Mrs. Fanny Grindey's. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 7-0 a.m., and are despatched at 5-40 p.m.; no Sunday business. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office, and Railway Station, Ashbourne ($1\frac{1}{2}$ miles).

MARSTON-ON-DOVE.

This parish comprises the townships of Marston-on-Dove, Hatton, Hilton, and Hoon, embracing a total area of 4,378 acres and 1,488 inhabitants. It is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral and petty sessional division of Sudbury, Burton union and county court district, and deanery of Longford. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, Marston-on-Dove with Hoon returns one councillor to Repton Rural District Council.

The township, which gives its name to the parish, contains 959 acres of land situated on the north bank of the river Dove; ratable value £3,080, and population 104. His Grace the Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and sole owner of the land, with the exception of the glebe.

At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Marston was held by the monks of Tutbury, under Henry de Ferrers. There was then a church on the manor, which seems to have been included in the gift. About a century later the tithes were appropriated to the monastery and a vicarage ordained. After the dissolution of religious houses, the rectorial manor and advowson of the church remained with the Crown, till Queen Elizabeth, in the first year of her reign, granted them to Sir William Cavendish, ancestor of the present owner.

The village consists of the church, vicarage, and a few scattered farms, nine miles S.W. by W. from Derby, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles N. from Burton-on-Trent, and $1\frac{1}{4}$ miles from Tutbury station on the North Staffordshire railway, which passes through the township. The church, which is dedicated to St. John, is a large edifice in the Early English and Decorated styles, consisting of spacious chancel, nave, two aisles, south porch, and west tower, surmounted by a lofty and graceful octagonal spire. The fine, old, massive lead-lined font, circular in shape and without any base, is undoubtedly Norman work, and probably belonged to the church mentioned in Domesday Book. It was relegated into the churchyard for some time as a piece of lumber, and bears evident traces of ill-usage. The south aisle is separated from the nave by three lofty pointed arches, springing from fourfold clustered pillars, and the north aisle by two arches. These arcades are the oldest part of the present fabric. The tower and spire belong to the Decorated period, 1300 to 1370, and are of excellent workmanship. Considerable structural alterations were effected in 1816, when, says Dr. Cox, "much havoc was made with this once fine church. The chancel arch was pulled down, a flat plaster ceiling given to the nave and chancel, the church re-pewed throughout, a 'three-decker' provided for minister and clerk, a heavy western gallery erected, and a debased east window inserted. The improvements also included the destruction of a fine stone porch, and the erection of one of brick. To effect all this £1,600 was squandered; and the churchwardens, having accomplished this mischief, termed it 'beautifying.' The north gallery was added in 1830, by which 96 additional sittings were obtained. The old-fashioned box pews remain in the nave and aisles. There are some 17th and 18th century monuments to the Woolley family, who possessed lands in this parish. There are also memorials of the Simpson and Beer families. In the south aisle are vestiges of a piscina, and it is probable that there was a chapel at the end of each aisle. A chantry was founded in this church in 1523 by Thomas Kinnersley and William Munyngs, clerk, and endowed with lands of the yearly value of £5 8s. 9d. for the maintenance of a priest. The tower contains four bells, one of which is believed to rank amongst the oldest in the county. It bears the Angelical salutation, "Ave Maria gra (gratia) plena dñs (Dominus) tecum" (Hail Mary full of grace, the Lord is with thee), inscribed in beautiful Lombardic capitals. The other three are dated respectively 1621, 1756, and 1654. The spire was repaired in 1893, at a cost of over £100. The registers date from 1654. The churchwardens' accounts begin in 1602, and contain many interesting entries. The clerk's salary was 4s. per annum, and wine was 6d. per quart. In 1635 the ringers received 4d. for ringing a peal in honour of King James' visit to Tutbury, and in 1638 the sum of 2d. was given to a "poore Viccar."

The living is a vicarage, present net value £191, in the gift of the Duke of Devonshire, and held by the Rev. Henry William Lamb, M.A. (Christ Church College, Oxon), who was inducted in 1890. There are 82 acres of glebe. The Duke of Devonshire, as lay rector, is the impropriator of the tithes and owner of the chancel.

The Old House, the residence of Henry Spurrier, Esq., J.P., was rebuilt in 1837 by his father. Its predecessor was one of the old-fashioned black and white timber and plaster houses, and was the manor house. The Spurrier family are said to have resided here about 400 years.

HATTON township comprises 885 acres of land, belonging chiefly to the Duke of Devonshire (who is lord of the manor), the Exors. of the late Mr. S. Faulkner, and the Shipton family. The total ratable value is £4,110, and the population in 1891 was 527. The river Dove is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge of five arches, erected in 1816-17 at a cost of £8,000. Near the bridge, and within this township, is Tutbury station, on the North Staffordshire railway. On this side also are the large glass works of Mr. J. T. H. Richardson. The village stands partly on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, 9½ miles W.S.W. from Derby. A Mission Church was erected here in 1886 at a cost of £800. Sunday school is held in it, and Church service every Sunday evening. The Wesleyan Chapel was built in 1868, and enlarged since by the addition of a Sunday school. There is accommodation for 100. This township is within the jurisdiction of the Hilton United District School Board, by whom a school was erected in 1879. There are 96 children in average attendance. Under the recent Local Government Act, Hatton becomes a parish with a council of six members, and it returns one district councillor to Repton Rural District Council.

HILTON township embraces an area of 1,757 acres of land; ratable value, £4,921; the population in 1891 was 805. The Duke of Devonshire, Rev. R. G. Buckston, Captain Drury, and A. N. E. Mosley are the principal landowners. The manor, at the time of the Norman Survey, was held by one Robert under Henry de Ferrers. Later, a branch of the ancient family of Beck held a part of it, and Ernulph de Beck, jointly with Thomas de Piru, founded a chapel here, in which Mass was to be celebrated on Sundays, Thursdays, and Saturdays. For this privilege they gave to the mother church at Marston three oxgangs of land, and the jurisdiction of that church was also guarded by a stipulation that the inhabitants of Hilton should on certain festival days attend the mother church. There are no remains of this chapel, nor is there any mention of it subsequent to the Reformation.

The village, which is large and straggling, stands on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, eight miles W. from Derby. The Wesleyans and Primitive Methodists have chapels. The former was erected in 1841, and the latter was rebuilt and enlarged in 1888. A school was founded here in the 17th century, and endowed with nine acres of land, to which an addition was made on the inclosure of the common. After the formation of the Hilton United District School Board, the school and its endowments were transferred to the Board, by whom the present premises were erected in 1882. There are two departments, and an average attendance of 150. Church service is held in it every Sunday evening. A Reading Room has lately been established in the village, chiefly by the efforts of a local gentleman, and is well supplied with papers and periodicals. There is a large flour mill, bakery, and biscuit factory, in the occupation of Messrs. Green-smith & Co., who manufacture the celebrated Derby dog biscuits.

Under the Local Government Act, Hilton has its parish council of six members, and it also returns one member to the rural district council.

HOON township consists of five farms, containing 773 acres of land, belonging to Mr. Thomas Orme, Mr. William Joseph Archer, Mr. William Henry Archer, Mr. George Ashby, and Mrs. T. B. Paget, of Welton Hall, Brough, Yorkshire. The soil is a gravelly marl on the hills, and a rich sand on the common. Ratable value, £1,862; and population, 25. At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor of Hoge (Hoon) was held by Sewall, ancestor of the Shirleys, under Henry de Ferrers, and it remained in the possession of this family nearly 500 years, when it was purchased by the Palmers. The next owners were the Staffords. A portion of the estate was purchased by the Woolleys early in the 17th century. The Pyes had also an estate and residence here. Hoon Hall, now a farmhouse, the property and residence of Mr. Thomas Orme, bears the date 1624. Hoon Mount occupies an elevated situation, from which there is an extensive view, including Tutbury Castle. The township pays a modus of £3, in lieu of tithes, to the Duke of Devonshire. Hoon has been added to Marston-on-Dove for the election of a district councillor.

CHARITIES.—Thomas Woolley, in 1667, left £50 for the benefit of the poor of Marston. This was invested in a rent-charge in Hoon, which pays £2 13s. 4d. yearly. Adam Woolley, by will in 1700, left £25. William Woolley, by will in 1726, added £25 to the £25 left by his father. This sum was invested in land, which now produces £46 per annum, which is distributed amongst the poor on Christmas Eve. John Debank left a rent-charge of £1 6s. 8d. to be distributed at Christmas and Easter. William Spurrier left a rent-charge of 10s., which is now paid by his descendant, Henry Spurrier, Esq., J.P. Arthur Harrison, in 1659, gave a rent charge of 30s., of which 20s. was for the poor and 10s. for the support of the school. Thomas Harrison, by will, left £40 to the poor of Hilton, this sum with £20 left by another person, is invested in the 3 per cent consols. The poor of Hilton also receive £3 10s. yearly out of a close of land left by Mary Astill in 1786. Miss Shemons, in 1826, left the interest of £40 to poor widows attending the parish church, and with this is distributed £1 18s. 4d. received from Brewin's charity.

MARSTON MONTGOMERY.

This is a parish and township containing 2,492 acres of land and 322 inhabitants. The soil is good clay and chiefly in pasture. Ratable value, £3,703. The principal landowners are Lord Vernon; Mrs. Landor, The Grange, Kennington, Bridgewater; Rev. Robert Rashleigh Duke, Berlingham Rectory, Pershore; Thomas Goodall Copestake, Kirk Langley; Arthur Bowyer, Cotwalton, Stone, Staffordshire; Edward Dumas, Charnwood Street, Derby; James Thomas Edge, Strelly Hall, Nottingham; Messrs. T. W. & W. J. Goodall; W. H. Oldham, Norbury; Henry Prince, Eaton; and Thomas Scarratt, The Hermitage, Ipstone, Cheshire, Staffordshire. The parish is in the Appletree hundred, petty sessional division and rural district of Sudbury, union and county court district of Uttoxeter, and deanery of Ashbourne. Under the provisions of the Local Government Act of 1894, it has a parish council of five members and elects one guardian or district councillor.

This manor is not specifically mentioned in Domesday Book, and is supposed to have been then and long afterwards included in Cubley. It received its additional name from its early owners, the Montgomeries, whose chief residence was at Cubley.

The village is pleasantly situated on elevated ground, 7 miles S.S.W. from Ashbourne, 14 W. by N. from Derby, and about 2 miles from Rocester station, on the North Staffordshire railway. The church (St. Giles') is an ancient edifice of stone, said to have been built before the Norman Conquest (A.D. 1066). It consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and a belfry containing three bells. It was repaired in 1824, at a cost of £400, and was again restored in 1877, when the present north aisle was built on the site of one which had been taken down at some previous restoration—probably in 1824. The chancel arch is semi-circular, and is said by Dr. Cox to be the oldest piece of ecclesiastical masonry in Derbyshire. The round-headed doorways are Norman, as also is the circular font. The arches of the nave are Gothic. The east window is a memorial of the late John Davys, Esq., and his wife Rhoda, erected by their daughter, Sarah Jane Humfrey. The living is a rectory held in conjunction with Cubley, worth £140 a year, derived from tithe rent-charge, and held by the Rev. Cave Humfrey, who resides at Cubley.

The Wesleyans have a small chapel in the village, erected in 1845. A School Board of five members was formed in 1876. The school is attended by about 50 children. Near the village are the factory and warehouses of the Marston Montgomery Dairy and Trading Co., Ltd., which were opened in 1889.

Waldley is a hamlet about one mile south of the village. A farmhouse here bearing the date 1632, was formerly the residence of the Bowyer family.

Abbotsholme is a handsome mansion occupied by Cecil Reddie, Esq., B.Sc., Ph.D., as a school in which the system of education is founded on a scientific basis. The principle of the system is to develop harmoniously all the faculties of the boy—to train him how to live, in fact, and become a rational member of society.

CHARITIES.—Arthur Bowyer gave a piece of land called Bolham's Piece, containing 1a. 1r., to the poor. Henry Jackson, in 1690, left 10s. yearly for ever; and a small sum is received yearly out of a meadow called Hollis Holme, left by Walter Copestake in 1715. There are 67a. 1r. 27p. of Parish land, the rent of which is applied to parochial purposes.

Post Office; Robert Oakden, receiver. Letters, via Derby, arrive at 8-30 a.m., and are despatched at 4-30 p.m.

MATLOCK.

This is an extensive and populous parish in the hundred of Wirksworth, containing 4,513½ acres of land; and 7,131 inhabitants, an increase of 1,037 since 1881. Its ratable value is £34,181, and the principal landowners are F. C. Arkwright, Esq., Willersley; W. S. Nightingale, Esq.; Rev. Woolley Dod; Edward H. Garton, Esq., Lumsdale; Exors. of William Lucas; Thomas Sellors; J. B. Marsden-Smedley, Lea; Timothy Taylor; Mr. John Taylor; Robert Parker; Mrs. Harris; Bonsall School Trustees; Mr. Joseph Hodgkinson; Exors. of Dr. Marshall; Mrs. Petchell, Hull; Thomas Cooper Drabble, Esq., and George S. Drabble, Matlock. Under the Local Government Act of 1894 (Parish and District Councils), Matlock has been divided into two parishes, viz., "Matlock," comprising Matlock urban district, and Matlock Bath, embracing that part of the parish of Matlock which is contained within the Matlock Bath and Scarthin Nick urban district. The former elects four guardians and the latter two. The scenery around is indescribably grand—a varied combination of hill, dale and cliff, and wood and river. Steep and lofty hills, clothed from base to summit with luxuriant foliage, rise on every side; stupendous cliffs overhang the narrow valley and impress the beholder with feelings of awe and wonder. At their base, in many a fret and curve, the Derwent flows in solemn majesty through a valley which is sometimes narrowed into a rocky gorge little wider than the river, and anon spreads out into smiling fields and meadows. There is perhaps no place in this country, or elsewhere, where so much romantic scenery can be seen within so limited an area. Here we have a veritable Switzerland in miniature, with scenes and objects as noble and as grand as are to be found in that famed Alpine country.

There is some doubt as to what name this district bore in the distant past. At the time of the Domesday Survey, Meslach (probably Matlock) was a berewick or hamlet in the manor of Mesteforde, which then belonged to the King. The situation of Mesteforde, or Nestesforde, is generally believed to have been at Matlock Bridge, where there was undoubtedly a ford previous to the erection of the bridge. Nestes, or Nestus, were the names originally applied to the rocky eminence now known as the Heights of Abraham; and the Rutland Cavern in this hill, formerly the Nestor mine, is still held under that title. The manor was afterwards given to William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby. On the attainder of Robert de Ferrers for high treason, the manor reverted to the Crown, becoming afterwards part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster. Charles I., in the fourth year of his reign, granted the manor to Edward Ditchfield and others, who shortly afterwards sold it to the copyholders of the manor of Matlock, and it is now divided into several small shares.

There is abundant evidence to show that the district was known to the Romans, and that the lead mines here were worked by them, or by the native Britons under their supervision. Several pigs of lead bearing Roman inscriptions have been found. The earliest of which any record has been preserved was found on Cromford Moor, near Matlock, in 1777. It weighed 127lbs., and bore the following inscription:—IMP. CAES. HADRIANI. AVG. MET. LVT. A second was discovered near Matlock, in 1783, weighing 84lbs., and inscribed L. ARCVCONI. VERECVND. METAL. LVTVD. Another pig, weighing 173lbs., was found on Matlock Moor, in 1787. On the top was inscribed, in raised letters, TI. CL. TR. LVT. BR. EX. ARG. Whilst a labourer was trenching a field on Mr. Hurd's farm (Portland Grange)*, in the spring of the present year (1894), at the depth of two feet his spade turned up a pig of lead weighing 175lbs. It had been cast in layers, and it lay with its face downwards. The inscription, which is well preserved, is, as expanded by Baron Hübner, of Berlin:—P(UBLI) RVBRI ABASCANTI METALLI LVTVDARES (IS), i.e., (from the works of) "P. Rubrius Abascantus, of the Lutudarian Mines." The discovery of this pig sets at rest the disputed interpretations of LVT and LVTVD in the other inscriptions, and confirms Mr. Thomas Bateman's suggestion that they are contractions of LVTVDARVM, the name of a Roman station, which, according to the anonymous geographer of Ravenna, was situated between Deva (Chester) and Derwentio (Little Chester.)

The Domesday Book mentions a lead works, which is believed to have been the Nestor Mine, now Rutland Cavern, on the Heights of Abraham.

*Mr. Hurd purchased this large tract of moorland from the Duke of Portland in 1886, and has since been reclaiming and cultivating it. He also erected a large mill for the manufacture of hosiery by steam power. This was unfortunately burnt down a few months ago, but it has since been rebuilt, and is now being refitted with machinery.

The old village of Matlock, or, as it is now dignified, Matlock Town, is situated on the sloping side of the High Tor, and still retains some of its quaint old-world appearance. The church, dedicated to St. Giles, stands on the verge of a precipitous rock, embosomed amongst a luxuriant growth of trees. The tower only is ancient, and is in the Perpendicular style of the early part of the 15th century. The chancel was rebuilt in 1859, and in 1871 the nave and aisles were taken down and rebuilt at a cost of £2,100, raised by private subscription, headed by a donation of £500 from Mr. Knowles, Knowleston Place. The church now consists of chancel, with organ chamber and vestry on the north side; nave, with north and south aisles; transept, and western tower. The style of the new portion is the Decorated, which prevailed in the early part of the 14th century. The nave is three bays in length, and is lighted by clerestory windows—four on the north side and six on the south. There are stained glass windows commemorating the families of Greaves, Leacroft, Knowles, and Wood. In the chancel floor is an early monumental slab, that was found when the chancel was rebuilt. On it is incised a cross, with a sword on the sinister side, apparently indicating the sepulture of a knight or man-at-arms. A small brass plate, on the south wall of the chancel, commemorates Henry Smith, a former rector of this parish, a man of many accomplishments—a divine, a doctor, and a musician. He died in 1640. There are some monuments of the Woolley family in the transept. One is an altar tomb, bearing the incised figures of a man and wife with their six children. Round the margin is inscribed:—"Here lyeth the bodies of Anthonie Woolley, and Agnes, his wyeffe, wch Anthonie dyethe iiij. daye of September, in the yere of our Lord mdlxxviij. (aged), lxxij., on whose soules God hath taken mercy on." On a black marble slab above this tomb is inscribed:—

"Near this place were interred the remains of Adam Woolley, of Allen Hill, in this parish, and of Grace his wife: he was born in the year 1558, married at the parish church of Darley on the first day of October, 1581, and, after continuing in wedlock with his said wife for the long period of 76 years, died in the month of August, 1657, in the hundredth year of his age. She was born in the year 1559, and died in the month of July, 1669, aged 110; and for the purpose of recording so extraordinary but well-authenticated an instance of longevity, and long continuance of the state of wedlock, their great, great, great, great grandson, Adam Woolley, of this parish, gentleman, caused this memorial to be erected in the year 1824."

Adam Woolley, the erector of the monument, died in 1827, and there is a tablet to his memory. He collected the materials for a history of Derbyshire, which he bequeathed to the British Museum. A mural brass in the south aisle records the death of Georgina, wife of Edwin Augustus George Jewitt, and daughter of William Henry Goss, Esq., F.G.S., in 1889.

The font is a handsome piece of sculpture, given by Mr. Arkwright. The ancient font of Early English date stands in the rectory garden, where also may be seen many carved stones that belonged to the original Norman church. Several funeral garlands—mementoes of a by-gone custom—are preserved in a glass case in the vestry. They formerly hung from the cross-beams of the old church, and had been carried at the funerals of young maidens.

The tower is a good example of the Early Perpendicular style, with battlements and pinnacles. It contains a peal of six bells, one of which dates from mediæval times, and bears the following invocation:—"Sca. Maria Magdalena o.p.n." (St. Mary Magdalen pray for us). The clock and chimes were presented in 1889 by Mrs. M. A. Bailey, in memory of her husband. The registers date from 1637.

The living is a rectory worth £290 per annum, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. J. W. Kewley. The patronage of the rectory was given at a very early period to the Dean of Lincoln, and it was exercised by the successive deans until recently transferred to the Bishop of Southwell.

Adjacent to the church is the village green, in the centre of which an aged tree still spreads its branches. A market for cattle is held at Matlock Green every alternate Thursday, and fairs on the 25th February, 2nd April, 9th May, and 24th October. The village feast is kept on the second Sunday in September.

An excellent educational establishment, Matlock Collegiate School, has been conducted here for some time by Mr. Robert Clough. The house is situated in its own grounds on the outskirts of the village, amidst the beautiful scenery for which Matlock is famous. The district is healthy, the air bracing, the sanitary arrangements excellent, and there is a copious supply of the purest water. Few places could be found better suited for a boarding school than Matlock.

The object of education is to train youth how best to act their part in the great drama of life, and this is the great aim of the system here pursued. The old fossilized methods, which in many ways tended to narrow and distort the intellectual and moral nature, have been discarded; the school is only a wider home, and influences kindred to those of home—love and sympathy—form the mainstay of its government. The boy is regarded as the man in miniature, whose intellectual, moral, social, and physical faculties require harmonious development and fatherly supervision, that he may be enabled to enter on the battle of life fully equipped for the conflict and fully cognisant of all his responsibilities.

The curriculum is broad and comprehensive; a thorough knowledge of English, its grammar, composition, and literature is imparted. Mathematics, elementary and advanced, for training the logical faculties, receive a considerable share of attention.

The modern languages are now recognised as an essential part of a thorough education, and are of more immediate and practical value than either Latin or Greek. Great attention is, therefore, given to the teaching of French and German, the most widely spoken languages of the continent.

The classics are cultivated to a less extent, as an excellent mental discipline, and an aid to the complete mastery of the English language.

The commercial part of the education receives its due attention, and the pupils are specially prepared for the particular pursuit in life which they may adopt.

Religion, too, is an essential element in the educational system here pursued, and particular care is bestowed on the moral training of the boys.

Provision is made for the physical training by various athletic games, and a workshop is provided where the boys may acquire some dexterity in manual labour, such as carpentry, &c.

It is a school par excellence for the sons of professional and mercantile men, and the pupils are prepared for the University local, preliminary law, medical, and other examinations.

A boarding school for young ladies is conducted by Mrs. and Miss Clough in a portion of the building, quite apart from the male school.

The fees at both establishments are as reasonable as they well can be.

MATLOCK BRIDGE, which takes its name from the bridge that here crosses the Derwent, has risen in a few years from an insignificant village to a little town with its contingent of neat villa residences, attractive shops, and commodious hotels. The Crown has long been a well-known hostelry, much frequented by tourists, visitors, and commercial men. A handsome Market Hall in the Gothic style was erected a few years ago, and a market is held every Saturday. The town is under the control of an urban council, whose district includes Old Matlock or Matlock Town, Matlock Green, and Matlock Bank. A great deal has been and is being done to increase the attractions and popularity of the place; and Matlock Bridge bids fair to become, in the near future, if indeed it is not already, a dangerous rival of Matlock Bath. The sanitary arrangements are excellent, the streets well paved and clean, and lighted with gas, and there is a copious supply of the softest and purest water. The town is of easy access, being on the main line of the Midland Railway between Derby and Manchester.

MATLOCK BANK, situated on the sloping side of a lofty eminence about half-a-mile to the east, is the creation of the second half of the present century. Fifty years ago a cottage or two were the only habitations on the hillside where now stand many palatial buildings and handsome villas. Here hydropathy, as now practised, had its earliest home. Its initial stage was on a very limited scale; but from this mean and insignificant beginning has arisen perhaps the largest and most magnificent hydropathic establishment in the world. John Smedley, its originator, whose name it still and probably will ever bear, was a hosiery manufacturer at Lea Mills, near Matlock. The worry and anxiety of business affected his health, which, in 1849, completely broke down. Having no faith in doctors' medicine he tried the cold-water cure at Ben-Rhydding, which restored him to health and vigour. He returned much impressed with the benefits of the water cure, and practised it in a milder form with marked success among his work-people. Shortly afterwards, in the year 1853, he purchased a cottage on Matlock Bank, and fitted it up with such baths as his experience had devised. His mild water treatment grew in popular favour, and necessitated from time to time additions to the original building. The speculation became an undoubted success, and he rebuilt the premises on an extended scale, at a cost of £20,000. After Mr. Smedley's death, in 1874, the concern was purchased by a limited company, who have spent about £70,000 on structural alterations and adornment.

The success achieved by Mr. Smedley stimulated others to enter the field in competition. Rock Side Hydropathic Establishment was erected by Mr. Charles Rowland, in 1862, and subsequently considerably enlarged. It is situated further up the hill at a height of 800 feet above the sea level, and can be reached conveniently and comfortably by the new cable tram. Prospect and Poplar Cottage Hydros were established by the Messrs. Davis, and shortly afterwards Mr. Barton opened Jackson House for the same purpose. Subsequently he erected commodious and handsome premises called Dalefield Hydropathic Establishment, in which he introduced many improvements suggested by his experience, and furnished it in first-class style. The house stands within its own grounds, and commands delightful prospects along the valley of the Derwent. The dining-hall, drawing-rooms, reading-room, &c., are all spacious, well ventilated, and handsomely furnished, and various indoor and outdoor amusements are provided. The heating arrangements are a special feature to ensure an equable temperature in winter and stormy weather. The establishment is not exclusively a sanatorium; it affords accommodation to families and others who desire to spend a holiday amidst the beautiful scenery of the English Switzerland, and it is also a delightful winter resort for those delicate individuals who dread the severities of our English climate.

It is the general impression that the water cure is applicable only in the summer time. This is, however, incorrect, for almost all diseases are quite as readily cured in the winter as in the summer; and here at all seasons both visitors and invalids will find a most comfortable home.

Malvern House, the property of Mr. Job Smith, is comfortably furnished for the accommodation of from 20 to 30 patients. The bathing arrangements are most complete. There are many other Hydros, Sycamore House, Rose Cottage, Chesterfield House, Belle Vue, Bridge Hall, at Matlock Bridge, &c.

The Derby and Derbyshire Convalescent Home is an exceedingly useful institution established here in 1889. The premises, which occupy a commanding situation on the slope of Lime Tree Hill road, have been adapted to the purposes of the Home and have accommodation for 36. The design of the institution is "to maintain in the County of Derby a Christian Home for deserving persons who are recovering from illness, or in need of rest and medical care." It is supported by voluntary subscriptions; each subscriber of one guinea is entitled to send one patient for three weeks at the low charge of 5s. per week.

Smedley's Memorial Hydropathic Hospital was established a few years ago to continue the philanthropic work which Mr. Smedley carried on at his own expense, at Lea Mills, for upwards of a quarter-of-a-century. The present hospital, located in rented premises formerly known as the South View Hydro, on Matlock Bank, is supported by voluntary contributions, and is under a committee of management.

A church, dedicated to All Saints, was erected in 1884. It is a handsome structure, in the Early English style of architecture, and consists of chancel, nave, with north and south aisles, and south porch. A tower will be added at some future time, and up to the present upwards of £5,000 has been spent on the edifice. It possesses two beautiful pictorial windows, one of which is inscribed "Lead Kindly Light," and the other "Till the Night is gone." The organ, a very fine instrument, was presented in 1886 by Joseph Cole, Esq., of Stockport, who also gave the pulpit. All seats are free. The living is a vicarage worth £95 per annum, in the gift of the Bishop of Southwell, and held by the Rev. Adam Lowe, M.A.

The National School, in which church service was held previous to the erection of the church, was built in 1875, and enlarged in 1893.

On the slope of a hill, within a short distance of Matlock Bridge station, is CAVENDISH SCHOOL, conducted by Mr. J. Allen, who is assisted by a thoroughly efficient staff of resident and visiting masters. The premises have been specially erected for the purposes of a first-class educational establishment, and contain spacious school and class-rooms, dining hall, play room, dormitories, bath rooms, &c. The ventilation is perfect, and all the sanitary arrangements have been carried out on the latest and most approved principles. From its elevated situation the school commands extensive views of the surrounding country.

The school curriculum, for the development of the intellectual faculties, is wide and comprehensive, embracing a thorough grounding in the English language, analysis and composition, writing, arithmetic and mental calculation, geometry, mensuration, algebra, history, Latin, French, the physical sciences, singing, elementary drawing, and technical instruction in the Sloyd system of carpentry, &c.

Particular attention is given to the commercial course which is specially adapted to meet the requirements of pupils intended for a business career, and includes French and English correspondence, the principles of bookkeeping, commercial arithmetic and geography, shorthand, &c.

The soundness and thoroughness of the instruction given in the school is shown by the high positions that have been gained by the pupils at the various public examinations, including those of the London University Matriculation, Cambridge Local, College of Preceptors, Civil Service, and professional preliminary examinations.

The moral training of the boys is a matter of constant supervision, and the most scrupulous care is taken to train up the boys as thorough gentlemen. A healthy social feeling pervades the whole school, and a strong bond of sympathy exists between pupils and master.

The physical training receives its due share of attention, large playgrounds with gymnasium are provided, and cricket, football, lawn tennis, and other healthy athletic games are encouraged.

The domestic arrangements are under the personal supervision of Mrs. Allen, and every attention is paid to the health and comfort of the pupils, with the endeavour to secure, as far as possible, the happiness of a home.

The moral and religious condition of Matlock Bank has kept pace with its material development, and numerous churches and chapels have been provided for public worship. In addition to the Church of All Saints, already mentioned, there is the Congregational Church, a handsome cruciform building, with tower, capable of seating 700 persons. The total cost, including the manse, was £5,230. The site was given by Thomas Stevens, Esq., Cambrian House, and the spire was built at the expense of the late Frederick Stevens. In connection with this church is a British School, held in the old chapel. The Wesleyan Chapel, on Bank road, is a neat Gothic edifice, capable of accommodating 700 worshippers. The cost of the building was £2,500, and it is proposed to add a steeple. The Primitive Methodist Chapel was built in 1865, at a cost of £716. It was enlarged and an organ loft and gallery added in 1886, at an outlay of £1,700, including the cost of the organ, £260. There are also a Catholic Chapel, a Methodist Free Church, and a Friends' Meeting House.

Not the least useful addition to Matlock Bank in recent years is the Steep Gradient Tramway, which was publicly opened on the 28th March, 1893, by Mr. George Newnes (now Sir George Newnes, Bart.). The inception of the scheme is due to Mr. Job Smith, and Mr. George Newnes, M.P., proprietor of "Tits-Bits," "The Strand Magazine," and other papers, and a native of Matlock, offered to finance the undertaking, but as several local gentlemen desired to have an interest in it a company was formed, with Mr. Newnes as chairman of the directors. The route selected is very steep, rising upwards of 300 feet in the half-mile length of the tram line. The cars are drawn by an endless cable, driven by a steam engine, and travel at the rate of $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles an hour. The trackway is single, except where the up and down cars pass each other. The cable—a wire rope of the best steel—runs in a channel below the surface in the centre of the trackway. This cable channel is wholly enclosed, except a narrow slot between steel rails laid $\frac{11}{16}$ in. apart. The cars are attached to the cable by a gripper, which passes through the slot. This gripper is under the control of the driver, who can by a simple contrivance loosen the grip and stop the car, and he can as easily in a moment start it again. Each car is provided with two of the most powerful brakes—one the ordinary working brake, the other the emergency brake—and so efficiently does this act that the car can be brought to a dead stop in a distance less than its own length. Cable traction has long been in use on gradients in the mining districts, but this is the first instance in this country where it has been applied to passenger traffic.

Another attraction, which will soon be an accomplished fact, is the erection of a Pavilion and Garden, for which a company has been formed and plans prepared.

A little south of Matlock Town is Riber Hill, a picturesque eminence, rising to a height of 860 feet above the sea level, and 600 feet above the Derwent. Here, in ages long past, the Druids used to perform the mysterious rites of their religion, and a few stones, part of a Cromlech, still remain. The summit of the hill is crowned by Riber Castle, a large, oblong structure, with lofty corner towers, built by the late Mr. Smedley. After having been unoccupied for a long time it is now being converted into an academy. Riber formerly belonged to the Woolley family. The last of this branch was Anthony Woolley, who died a bachelor in 1663, and was buried near many other members of the family in Matlock Church. His sisters and coheirs sold the estate to Thomas Statham, from whom it was purchased by the Rev. John Chappell. In 1724 it was divided between two coheirs of Chappell. Subsequently one moiety was purchased by Mr. Wall, to whose descendants it still belongs. The other moiety has passed through several hands. Riber Hall, once the seat of the Woolleys, is now divided into two farmhouses, occupied respectively by Mr. John Wall and Mr. George Beardsley. In the farmyard of the latter is a stone chair, which was preserved by Mr. George Wall when the Cromlech was ruthlessly demolished, some years ago, for fencing stones.

A little beyond Riber Hill to the north west is the High Tor, a huge mass of limestone rock rising abruptly from the edge of the Derwent to the height of nearly 400 feet. Its sloping base is covered with a dense tangle of underwood and trees, and above these, for 180 feet or so, is seen the naked face of the perpendicular rock. It is, beyond doubt, the most imposing piece of rock scenery in the district, and the boast and glory of Matlock. The Derwent, which flows at its foot, winds through a narrow rock-pent valley of unparalleled beauty, of which it has been truly said that no pencil can adequately portray nor pen describe its varied characteristics. A gorgeous wealth of woodland margins the stream on either side; above the foliage rise bold, steep and romantic cliffs, and at every bend of the sinuous dale new beauties unfold themselves.

Opposite the High Tor the river is spanned by a little wooden bridge leading to the Grotto, or cavern, which penetrates the stupendous rock. Though less extensive than some of the other caverns in the district, the perfection and profusion of its crystallisations make it well worth the inspection of every lover of the beauties of nature. The roof and sides of the grotto, which is a natural chasm in the rock, are covered with beautiful crystallisations that sparkle and glitter with gem-like lustre when the cavern is lit up. The rock above the cavern is tunnelled for the railway, and the passing of a train produces a rolling noise like the rumbling of distant thunder. The grotto is of easy access, and can be explored without the least difficulty. The grounds of the High Tor are now enclosed and converted into Pleasure and Recreation Grounds.

Limestone is the great geological feature of Matlock. According to Mr. Farey there are four limestone strata varying from 150 feet to 200 feet in thickness, and separated from each other by an intervening stratum of toadstone from 60 to 90 feet thick. The limestone is extensively quarried near the railway, where the cliffs may be seen stretching from 500 to 600 yards. The quarries are the property of W. E. Constable & Co., who carry on an extensive trade as lime burners and manufacturers of asphalt paving and patent concrete paving stone. The limestone is also quarried in Harvey Dale, where powerful machinery is employed to crush or break the stone into any size required. Job Greatorex & Son, proprietors.

At Farley and Bentley Brook, on the edge of Matlock Moor, the gritstone crops out and is extensively quarried by Mr. T. C. Drabble, whose business has attained gigantic proportions. The quarries lie within Darley Dale, and under that name the stone has gained a celebrity far and wide amongst builders.

This sandstone grit possesses great cohesive power, and hardens by exposure to the air; consequently it suffers very little from the disintegrating effects of the atmosphere. As it absorbs very little water, it is comparatively unaffected by frost; and when subjected to fire it remains intact for a longer time than any other variety of stone. These qualities place it in the first rank as a building material, and it is now largely used in the erection of municipal and other costly buildings in all parts of the country. Of these we need only enumerate a few that have been built, either wholly or in part, of stone from Mr. Drabble's quarries:—The magnificent Hotel Métropole, near Charing Cross; the Savoy Palace Court, Kensington; several Metropolitan Theatres; and Claybury Asylum, London; Lewis's immense premises, and the Eye Hospital in Birmingham; the Albion Congregational Church and the Municipal Buildings in Nottingham; Smedley's Palatial Hydropathic Establishment at Matlock Bank; the Mechanics' Institute, the Deaf and Dumb Institute, and the Royal Infirmary, Derby.

The reputation of the stone is not confined to this country; its qualities are known and appreciated in our far-off colonies in the southern hemisphere. Large quantities of it have been exported to Australia, and some of the finest edifices in that country are built of stone from these quarries.

Another and not the least important property possessed by this stone is its capability of resisting those climatic influences which effect so seriously almost every other kind of stone; on the contrary this gritstone improves and hardens by exposure to the air. This quality also adapts it for artistic purposes, and inscriptions and the most intricate carving retain their sharpness for an indefinite length of time.

The Darley quarries are on a scale of magnitude surpassing any others in the county, and give employment to a large staff of skilled workmen. The most improved machinery and appliances have been introduced, which enable Mr. Drabble to turn out work with a finish surpassed by none. In the extensive yards may be seen columns, capitals, and dressed stones in every stage of preparation.

MATLOCK BATH.

This parish comprises that portion of the old parish of Matlock contained in the Matlock Bath and Scarthin Nick urban sanitary district. The area included within the boundary is about 2,000 acres, and the number of inhabitants about 1,500. The landowners are included with those under Matlock parish. The scenery around is exquisitely beautiful, indeed there are few places either in England or elsewhere that can compete with Matlock for grand and magnificent scenery. Whether entered from the north or south, the effect is imposing. A deep narrow valley winds between lofty hills and precipitous rocks; at the bottom, over its stony bed, flows the majestic Derwent, fringed on either side with luxuriant woodlands that extend almost to the summit of the lofty steep. There is here a happy combination of all the charms that form the ideal landscape. The dale winds tortuously from Matlock Town to Cromford, a distance of three miles, through some of the most beautiful scenery the eye ever beheld. The hills rise abruptly from the river bank, showing in places an escarpment of naked rock, and culminate in the huge mass of Masson, opposite the High Tor, which reaches a height of 803 feet above the level of the sea. The view from the summit embraces a wide range of country. On the side of the hill is the Great Masson Cavern, which is undoubtedly one of the sights of Matlock. A portion of it is an old Roman lead mine, 400 yards in length, and some years ago in following a vein of lead a natural cavern was discovered 220 feet in length, 90 feet in height, and varying in width from 12 feet to 50 feet. The sides and roof are covered with fossil shells, and encrusted with large and beautiful crystals of dog-tooth and fluor spar, which sparkle like gems in the gaslight with which the cavern is illuminated. The various mineral ores, combinations of lead, copper, and other metals, to be seen here, will prove an unfailing source of interest to the geologist and excite the admiration of the ordinary sight-seer. The cavern is easily traversed, and the visitor emerges, without retracing his steps, at a height of 700 feet above the river. Both the lead mine and the cavern are the property of Messrs. Greatorex & Son, the former having been in the possession of the family for at least two centuries.

A little further on, but of diminished altitude, are the Heights of Abraham, less rugged in character than the High Tor, but equally beautiful. Cottages cluster, tier upon tier, along its steep sides, and its summit is crowned by a tower whence there is a magnificent panoramic view of the river, dale, and town at the foot. A small charge is made for permission to scale the heights and explore the famous Rutland Cavern. This cavern, originally known as the Old Nestor Mine—a name by which it is still held under the Duchy of Lancaster—was worked as a lead mine as far back as the time when the Romans were masters of this country. Below, on the road leading along the bank of the Derwent to Matlock Bridge, is the Long Tor Roman Fluor Spar Cavern, where again are to be seen marbles and sparry crystals in nature's laboratory. Other subterranean cavities worthy of attention are the Cumberland Cavern, the Devonshire Cavern, and the Speedwell Mine. The Cumberland Cavern is geologically interesting as exhibiting the dislocations of the strata and other effects of that mighty volcanic force which upheaved these giant hills. This cavern was discovered about 150 years ago when following a vein of lead, and to reach it the visitor traverses some of the old workings of the mine. The cavern extends about 1,000 yards into the bosom of the hill, and consists of numerous chambers or cavities, each of which bears a fanciful name. In some of these there is a magnificent display of rock scenery; huge blocks lie scattered about in chaotic confusion; one of these masses of limestone, supposed to be about forty tons weight, when detached from the roof has poised itself on two points of the adjoining rock. The various beautiful spars and veins of lead are also worthy of notice.

Matlock Bath is a place of modern date, and owed its origin to its medicinal springs rather than to the romantic beauty of its surroundings. These springs appear to have been known only since the latter half of the 17th century, and it was not till about the year 1690 that their curative properties began to attract attention. The only habitations in the dale at that time were the huts of the lead miners. In 1698 the first bath was erected—a very humble structure of wood lined with lead. A more substantial structure, together with a lodging and boarding-house, was built by the Rev. Mr. Ferns and Mr. Haywood, of Cromford, and this was ultimately purchased by Messrs. Smith and Pennel, of Nottingham, who erected two commodious buildings. In process of time other springs were discovered, and additional baths and lodging-houses built to accommodate the increasing number of visitors. Amongst others who came to drink its waters were Defoe, Sir Walter Scott, and Lord Byron; but Matlock was not then so easily accessible, and Defoe writes, "This bath would be much more frequented than it is if a bad stony road which leads to it, and no accommodation when you get there, did not hinder." The construction of the Manchester and Derby branch of the Midland Railway placed it within easy reach of the Metropolis and the large manufacturing towns of Lancashire, and thus secured its future prosperity.

These thermal springs, whatever their origin may be, have a temperature of 68° Fahrenheit, or about 14° lower than those of Buxton, and are said to resemble those of Clifton and Bath. They are considered efficacious in cases of chronic rheumatism, gout, consumption, pulmonary and nervous disorders, and when drunk freely they have proved beneficial in dyspeptic and nephritic affections. Being highly charged with carbonic acid gas, the waters in passing through the strata dissolve a considerable portion of lime which is held in solution as carbonate of lime; on exposure to the air a portion of the carbonic acid gas escapes, reducing the solvent power of the water, and the excess of carbonate of lime is consequently deposited. Thus, through ages before the discovery of the springs, the escaping waters deposited the immense beds of tufa found here. This petrifying property of the water has been made a source of income, and all kinds of articles, moss, fruit, leaves, birds' nests, &c., which have been exposed to the petrifying process can now be purchased.

The town is built along the lower slope of the ridge, and scattered about the steep hill sides are villas, mansions, and hotels. The principal street is fringed with fine shops, in which are displayed beautiful vases and ornaments of Blue John, spar, and alabaster, manufactured at various places in the town, where the process of turning the spar, &c., may be witnessed.

The town is under the jurisdiction of an urban council, the streets remarkably clean and well-lighted, and the sanitary arrangements as perfect as modern science can make them. Numerous improvements have been effected in recent years, and many attractions provided in addition to the scenic beauty of the surroundings. In 1884 about 15 acres of land on the hill-side were laid out in gardens, shrubberies, rockeries, promenades, &c., and a handsome Pavilion erected, at a total cost of £21,000. It is a light and elegant structure, standing at a considerable elevation above the valley, and contains a spacious assembly-room and concert hall, refreshment saloons, reading-room, promenade galleries, &c. From the terrace in front there is a magnificent view of the valley and the hills beyond. At a considerable height above the Pavilion is the entrance to the Speedwell Cavern, and a little below this the limestone cliff has been rent by some mighty convulsion of nature, and huge fragments of the rock stand in an upright position. The space between the detached cliffs and the parent rock is little more than sufficient to permit visitors to pass in single file. The rocks, beautifully draped with mosses, lichens, and creeping plants, rise to a great height, and shroud the narrow passage in so deep a gloom that our forefathers appropriately named them the Dungeon Tors. The Victoria Promenade, another modern improvement and addition to the attractions and conveniences of Matlock Bath, was constructed in 1887, in honour of the Queen's Jubilee. The walk extends along the banks of the Derwent, and is bordered on the other side by a green lawn with parterres and flower beds. An ornamental girder bridge spans the river, giving access to the Lovers' Walks, which wind in devious zig-zags through the wooded steepes on the opposite bank. The total cost was something over £1,500.

Handsome hotels and boarding-houses have been erected for the accommodation of visitors. The Old Bath Hotel, which stood near the first bath-house, has given place to a magnificent Gothic structure, erected in 1878, and re-named the Royal Hotel, to which a suite of hydropathic baths has since been added. A second tepid spring was discovered, over which a handsome hotel was erected, and called the New Bath Hotel. The premises are extensive, and furnished in luxurious style. Attached are pleasure grounds, twelve acres in extent, and beautifully laid out in lawns, shrubberies, and terraces. A third spring supplies the Fountain Baths, opposite the fountain in the Victoria promenade. These baths, which are public, and unconnected with any hotel, were remodelled in 1882, and are now replete with every convenience. There are hot, tepid, and shower baths. The swimming bath, 50 feet long by 22 feet wide, is supplied with water direct from the spring at a temperature of 68° Fahrenheit. The daily flow averages 600,000 gallons, which replenishes the bath about 18 times in 24 hours. The following analysis of the thermal springs was made by Dr. Dupré, F.R.S., lecturer on chemistry at the Westminster Hospital:—

Holy Trinity Church is a handsome cruciform edifice in the Decorated Gothic style, erected in 1842, at a cost of £2,250. In 1874-5 the chancel was lengthened, and a south aisle added, at an expense of about £700. The tower is surmounted by a crocketed spire, 129 feet high. The chancel window and the reredos, of Derbyshire marble, were the gift of Mrs. Clarke, of Masson Lodge. The living is a vicarage worth £260 per annum, in the gift of five trustees, and held by the Rev. Charles Baker.

The Congregational Chapel, situated near Masson Mill, was built in 1777 by Sir Richard Arkwright, as a residence for his partner, Mr. Need, whose son-in-law (Mr. Abney) converted it into a chapel. Shortly afterwards it was offered for sale, and was purchased by Lady Glenorchy, then visiting Matlock Bath, for a chapel for the use of the Independents. On the death of Lady Glenorchy, this chapel was devised to Captain Scott, who gave up his commission in the dragoons and ministered here. It was subsequently placed in the hands of trustees. The Rev. T. M. Newnes held the pastorate for some years, and it was here George Newnes, Esq., M.P., the enterprising editor of "Tit-Bits," "The Strand Magazine," and other papers, was born. The Wesleyan Methodists have a handsome chapel on Derwent Parade, built at a cost of £2,000; and another at Scarthin, erected in 1810, enlarged in 1840, at a cost of £400, and renovated about twelve years ago at an expense of £300. The Primitive Methodists have a chapel at Scarthin, and there is also a Mission Room in connection with the Parish Church.

Willersley Castle, the seat of F. C. Arkwright, Esq., J.P., C.C., is situated on the confines of the parish, adjoining Cromford. It is a large quadrangular mansion, with embattled parapet, erected in 1788, from the designs of Mr. W. Thomas. The house occupies an elevated position, from which grassy lawns slope to the bank of the Derwent. A wooded eminence forms the background, and immediately behind the castle rises an immense range of perpendicular rocks, adorned with trees, shrubs, lichens, mosses, and creeping plants. The extensive and beautiful grounds are thrown open to visitors at certain times. The builder of the castle and the founder of the family was Sir Richard Arkwright, the humble barber and itinerant hair merchant of Preston. He was a man of inventive genius, and his first experiments in mechanics was an attempt to solve the problem of perpetual motion. He afterwards devoted his attention to the improvement of machinery for spinning cotton, and in this he achieved a decided success. His invention revolutionized the cotton trade, and contributed essentially to render this branch of manufacture the most considerable in the world. His first patent for his spinning machine, which ultimately became the "water frame," was taken out in 1769; and as the Lancashire cotton operatives were opposed to the introduction of machinery, he removed from Preston to Nottingham, where his invention was taken up by Messrs. Need and Strutt, who entered into partnership with him and erected a mill. The business proved very successful, and in 1771 a second mill was erected at Cromford, in which the machinery was worked by water power. The validity of his claims to the invention was disputed, and on the clearest evidence it was shown that the principle of his spinning machine had been applied by Thomas Highs, of Leigh, two years previously, and that Arkwright had induced Kay, an ingenious clock-maker, who had assisted Highs in the construction of his machine, to make him two models of it, and his patent rights were annulled. Though much of the laurel was thus stripped from his brow, the manner in which he conducted his business and the immense wealth he accumulated, are evidence of his energy and enterprise; and there can be no doubt that he was a man of great mechanical ingenuity and adaptive skill, and that he perfected the machine and applied it to practical purposes. He introduced many improvements into his machinery; conducted an extensive business with skill, energy, and indomitable perseverance; and held the premier place in the cotton industry of the country. In 1782 he purchased the Willersley estate; erected the mansion which, with the ambition of the parvenu, he styled Willersley Castle. He was High Sheriff of Derbyshire in 1787, and received the honour of knighthood the same year from George III. He died at the age of 60, and was buried in Cromford Church, where a monument, by Chantrey, is erected to his memory.

MIDDLETON-BY-WIRKSWORTH.

Middleton-by-Wirksworth is a modern parish, carved out of Wirksworth, and consists of the township of its own name with those of Idle and Ironbrook Grange, containing an area of 2,678 acres and 1,173 inhabitants. It is in the hundred, electoral and petty sessional division, county court district, and rural deanery of Wirksworth, and union of Ashbourne.

Middleton township, which adjoins Wirksworth, contains 990 acres of land under assessment; its ratable value is £2,117, and the population 1,007. Seven parish councillors have been allotted to Middleton-by-Wirksworth, and it elects two rural district councillors and guardians. The principal landowners are H. C. Pole-Gell, Esq., Hopton; Mrs. E. Walker, Middleton; Mr. Wm. Gratton, Middleton; Killer Brothers, and Mr. J. B. Clayton.

The scenery is delightfully varied by hill and dale, with a fair amount of woodland. The beautiful road named the Via Gellia is partly within this township. This road winds through a narrow valley, with steep sides, rocky in places, and thickly wooded. The lily of the valley and other flowers bloom here in wild profusion, and the scene about Whitsuntide is indescribably beautiful. Lead mining was formerly the staple industry, and some few years ago there were about thirty mines in operation. The mineral rights belong to the Duchy of Lancaster, and are leased by the Exors. of Peter Arkwright, Esq., but the mines are laid in. Limestone is abundant, and is extensively quarried by Killer Brothers and the Hopton Wood Stone Company, Limited. The stone is of excellent quality, hard and crystalline, of a fine and compact texture, and very durable. Under the chisel it can be worked into the most elaborate and delicate ornamentation, and is largely used by architects both for indoor and outdoor purposes. There are extensive works, where the stone is cut by steam saws, and immense pillars turned and smoothed in lathes. Fossil marble is also quarried at several places, and is in considerable demand for ornamental purposes.

The village is situated on the slope of a hill, one mile N. by W. from Wirksworth, and nine miles N. E. from Ashbourne. A branch of the Wigley family was seated here for several generations. Tradition retains the memory of an old hall that stood at the upper end of the village, and near the site is a barn where cocks were trained when the brutal sport of cockfighting afforded our forefathers superlative pleasure. A church was erected here about 1840, and a district was shortly afterwards allotted to it. The edifice, which is dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a plain oblong building, with small bell turret. Its cost was £1,200, which was raised by subscriptions, and it has since been restored, re-seated, and a new organ added, at a further expense of £800. The chancel is divided from the nave by a fine iron screen of artistic design. The font is a piece of good work in Hopton Wood stone. On the south wall is a tablet to the memory of Captain F. Simes Attree, of the 31st Regiment, who was killed in the trenches before Sebastopol, September 8th, 1855; and on the east wall is another to the Rev. F. Town Attree, B.A., sometime incumbent of Middleton. The living is a vicarage, worth £270 per annum, with residence, in the gift of the Vicar of Wirksworth, and held by the Rev. E. C. Harward, M.A., since 1875.

Nonconformity is an important factor in the religious life of Middleton. The Congregational (formerly Independent) Chapel was built in 1785, and for 50 years was the only place of worship in the village. It was established by Captain Scott, evangelist, under the auspices of Lady Glenorchy, then a visitor to Matlock Bath. The black oak pulpit was formerly in the chapel of the celebrated Dr. Doddridge, at Northampton. The Primitive Methodist Chapel was erected in 1846, and rebuilt in 1874. It will seat about 300. The Wesleyan Chapel dates from about 1820. It was rebuilt in 1874, and will seat 400.

IBLE is a small township containing 422 acres of land, belonging chiefly to H. C. Pole-Gell, Esq., Hopton; George Travis, Robert Elliott, Benjamin Elliott, Joseph Marchington, and J. S. Saunders, Esq. The land is chiefly in pasture; ratable value, £561. The village is situated on a bold elevation, four miles N.W. from Wirksworth. The Primitive Methodists have a small chapel here, built in 1825. Under the Parish and District Councils Act, Ible is added to Hopton, the united parish electing one district councillor and guardian.

GRANGE MILL, also called IRONBROOK GRANGE, is another small township in this parish, containing 412 acres, belonging solely to the Right Honourable and Rev. Lord Scarsdale. Its ratable value is £398, and the population in 1891 was 34. The village is situated in a valley, four miles W.N.W. from Wirksworth. Cheese-making on the American system is carried on here by the "Ironbrook Grange Dairy Association." The premises are fitted with the most modern machinery. About 19 cheeses are made daily in the season.

Grange Mill belonged to the Abbey of Bildewas, in Shropshire, till the dissolution of monasteries at the Reformation. Henry VIII. granted it to Edward Grey, Lord Powis, from whom it has descended through the Ludlows and Vernons of Stokesley to Lord Scarsdale, the present owner, and lord of the manor.

For purposes of the Parish Councils Act, this township has been added to Aldwark, and the united parish, Aldwark-with-Ironbrook Grange, elects one rural district councillor and guardian.

MONYASH.

Monyash, formerly a chapelry under Bakewell, now an independent parish, contains 3,146½ acres, ratable value £2,984, and population 402. It is in the High Peak hundred, county council division of Tideswell, petty sessional division, county court district and union of Bakewell, and deanery of Buxton. It has a parish council of five members, and returns one rural district councillor.

Rake Farm, the property of Mr. William Finney, carries with it the manorial rights; the other landowners are the Duke of Devonshire, James Bagshaw (Monyash), H. H. Morton, Esq. (Sheldon), William Andrews, Rawson's Exors., James Briddon, Mrs. Furness, Miss Blackwell, Mrs. Critchlow, Stephen Melland, Esq., Exors. of J. Housley, junr., Bakewell Poor Trustees, Monyash School Trustees, Exors. of S. Needham, Mr. Henry Bowman, Benjamin Mellor, and J. E. A. B. Dutton.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Maneis (Monyash) was one of the berewicks of the Royal manor of Bakewell. About the year 1200, Robert de Salocia and Matthew de Eston held the manor jointly, and founded a chantry chapel here, which they endowed with lands for the celebration of Mass on Sundays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, the inhabitants undertaking that every message should contribute one farthing yearly for finding lights. A little later the Lynfords possessed the mineral rights, and in 1340 William de Lynford obtained a grant of a weekly market on Tuesdays, and a three days' fair at the festival of the Holy Trinity. This market was granted to encourage the development of the lead mining industry, and for a long period a miners' court was held at Monyash for the High Peak. Subsequently the manor passed into the hands of the Talbots, Earls of Shrewsbury, and on the death of Earl Gilbert in the early part of the 17th century, this and other estates were inherited by his three daughters, coheiresses, the Countesses of Pembroke, Kent, and Arundel. These shares afterwards passed, by sale, into other hands, and were eventually purchased by Edward Cheney, Esq., in 1735. The mineral rights belong to the Duke of Devonshire as lessee under the Duchy of Lancaster.

The village of Monyash is situated on the Bakewell and Longnor Road, five miles from the former, and the same distance from Millers Dale station on the Midland railway. The market has long been abandoned, but the old Market Cross still stands in the centre of the village. It is eight feet high, and rests on a base formed out of the old stocks. The church, dedicated to St. Leonard, underwent a thorough restoration in 1886-8 at an expense of £3,300, and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles and transepts, and west tower surmounted by a lofty octagonal spire. Some traces of the original chantry chapel remain, but that structure appears to have been almost rebuilt in the Decorated style during the 14th century. The most interesting feature in the interior is the Early English triple sedilia and piscina under semicircular arches with characteristic tooth ornament, showing that the chapel founded by Robert de Salocia and Matthew de Eston was of considerable dimensions and for more general use than a mere chantry chapel. This privilege was granted in consequence of the distance from the mother church, and the inhabitants contributed 12 acres of land to the endowment. In 1280, Archbishop Peckham ordained that the inhabitants keep the chancel in repair, provide a chalice and missal and add one mark, in addition to the 12 acres before given, to the priest's stipend, and that the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield should contribute the remainder. The font also belonged to the early church. It is octagonal in shape, two of the sides being ornamented—one with a quatrefoil and the other with a shield of arms. Another chantry was founded within the chapel, in the reign of Edward III., by Nicholas Congson and his brother, who endowed it with lands in Sterndale, Chelmorton and Monyash, producing a yearly rental of five marks. This chantry was valued, in the reign of Edward VI., at £3 3s. 6d. There are three bells in the tower, one of which bears an abbreviated pre-Reformation legend, Sca Maria o.p.n. (Holy Mary pray for us). In the lower chamber is preserved a remarkably old chest, belted with iron bands every three or four inches. It is 88 inches long and 19 inches wide, and is believed to have been used when the church was first built, nearly seven centuries ago, for holding the church plate and vestments. There are monuments to the memory of the Cheney, Goodwin, Palfreeman, Barker, and Sheldon families, but all of modern date. The living is a vicarage, to which the rectorial tithes have been transferred by the Duke of Rutland, worth £214 per annum, in the gift of the Vicar of Bakewell, and held by the Rev. W. H. Ford, B.A.

The Society of Friends have had a meeting and burial ground here since 1711, and there is also a chapel belonging to the Primitive Methodists, built in 1888. A school was erected here in 1750, which was endowed with land now producing about £30 a year. A new school was built in 1871, and enlarged in 1890. There is an average attendance of 72.

One Ash is a farm and manor of about 800 acres in extent, situated about one mile S.E. from Monyash. It belongs to the Duke of Devonshire. The manor, written Aneise in Domesday Book, originally formed part of the Haddon estate, and was given by William Avenell to Roche Abbey in Yorkshire. The monks had a grange here, where a few members of the order constantly resided. Near is Lathkill Dale, a narrow glen hemmed in by precipitous cliffs and rugged hills, and abounding with picturesque and romantic scenery. At a little distance is Ricklow Dale, a wild, secluded ravine bounded by "lifeless walls of naked rock" and craggy headlands. Along the bottom are strewn huge fragments of rock that have fallen from the heights above. Here are extensive quarries of grey marble. In the Brick quarry between Monyash and Flagg, marble of a dark blue ground marked with numerous small fossil forms is found. The hills in the district, chiefly of limestone formation, are bleak and treeless, and stone walls take the place of hedgerows. Lead was formerly worked here, and one exhausted mine forms a cavern half-a-mile in length.

There are also some natural caverns in the rocks, where fossils and fine specimens of Derbyshire spar may be obtained.

A few small charities have been left to the poor of Monyash by the Goodwins, Palfreymans, and others.

Letters, via Bakewell, are delivered at 9-30 a.m., and are despatched at 4-40 p.m. Receiver, Wm. Palfreyman. Nearest Post, Money Order, and Telegraph Office, Bakewell (five miles).

NORBURY.

This is a small parish consisting of the township of Norbury-with-Roston, containing 2,240 acres of land, lying in the valley of the river Dove, where is to be found some of the richest meadow land in the county. It is valued for rating purposes at £4,184, and had in 1891 a population of 414. The North Staffordshire Railway passes through the parish, and has a station here. The principal landowners are S. W. Clowes, Esq., J.P., Norbury Hall (lord of the manor); John Harrison, Esq., Snelston Hall; Exors. of John Orpe, A. C. Duncombe, Esq., the Trustees of Cossall Hospital, Mr. F. Whitgreave, Messrs. Henry and Edwin Appleby, the Rector in right of his church, Joseph Harrison, Esq., Mr. James Clulow Sillito, Mr. John Pakeman, Mrs. Mary Ann Smith, Reuben Gallimore, James Turner, Mrs. Tomlinson, Exors. of William Evans, William Coxon, T. G. Copestake, Isaac Smith, and J. B. M. Smith.

The parish is in Appletree hundred, petty sessional and county council division and deanery of Ashbourne, county court district and deanery of Uttoxeter, and Sudbury rural district. It has a parish council of five members, and elects one district councillor.

At the time of the Domesday Survey, Norbury had a church and a priest. The manor, and also that of Roston, formed part of the vast estates of Henry de Ferrars, and a few years later the church, tithes, and manor of Norbury, were given by him to the priory which he founded at Tutbury. This grant was confirmed by his grandson Robert. In 1125 the prior of Tutbury conveyed the manor in fee-farm to William Fitzherbert, subject to a yearly rental of 100s., and it was also stipulated that the said William Fitzherbert should give in lieu of the tithe of the lordship, 5s. annually to the prior. Subsequently Nicholas Fitzherbert in 1442 redeemed these yearly payments to the priory by a grant of land in Osmaston, Foston, and Church Broughton, and Norbury has since then been tithe free. The estate remained with this family till 1881, when it was purchased from Basil Fitzherbert, of Swinnerton Park, Staffordshire, by Samuel William Clowes, Esq., J.P. The Fitzherberts resided at the Old Hall, or as now called, Old Manor House, till the death of Sir John Fitzherbert without issue in 1649, when the estate passed to the Swinnerton branch of the family. The Fitzherberts remained devotedly attached to the Catholic religion, and in the reign of Elizabeth, had to suffer unparalled persecution for conscience sake. Sir Thomas was for years confined in the tower and cruelly persecuted for no other crime than his refusal to adopt the reformed religion. The hall, after the removal of the Fitzherberts, was occupied as a farmhouse by the Maskery family for fully 200 years. The present tenant of the farm, Mr. W. H. Oldham, is a nephew of the late Thomas Maskery, and resides at the New Manor House. The old one has been recently restored and is intended for a museum.

Norbury Hall, the seat of S. W. Clowes, Esq., was erected by the present owner, on the site of the old rectory, and completed in 1874. It is a handsome mansion built of red sandstone, quarried on the spot, and relieved by courses of Stanton stone. The gardens and pleasure grounds, which are very tastefully laid out, lie on each side of the road over which have been erected rustic bridges. Mr. Clowes is the eldest son of the late William Legh Clowes, Esq., of Broughton Old Hall, Manchester, and was formerly Lieut.-Colonel of the 3rd Dragoons. He represented North Leicestershire in Parliament from 1868 to 1880.

The village of Norbury, small and scattered, stands on the east bank of the river Dove, four miles S.W. by W. from Ashbourne, and 16 miles W. from Derby. The church, which is dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, is a handsome edifice of stone, rebuilt in the latter half of the 14th century, and consists of chancel, nave, north aisle, and two chapels, one on each side of the tower, which stands midway on the south side of the nave. There are three bells and a clock in the tower, the latter placed therein at the expense of S. W. Clowes, Esq., in 1890. The chancel, which is unusually large in proportion to the rest of the building, is separated from the nave by a carved oak screen, and is a very fine specimen of the late Decorated style. Nearly the whole of the east end is occupied by a noble window of five lights and traceried head, filled with ancient stained glass representing the apostles and other saints. In the tracery lights are six coats of arms showing alliances of the Fitzherbert family. This glass was taken from various windows in the church in 1842, when the fabric underwent extensive repairs and alterations, at a cost of £1,200. There are eight large pointed windows in the side walls, four on each side, which are only separated from each other by the width of the buttresses that support the walls. These windows retain the greater part of their original glass, exhibiting various shields of arms, dating from the 14th century. In the south wall are three sedilia and piscina, but the former are without canopies. In the centre of the chancel is the monument of Sir Henry Fitzherbert, who was knight of the shire of Derby in 1298. He is represented in the armour of a Crusader with the legs crossed at the knee. On the south side of the chancel stands a very fine altar tomb of alabaster to Sir Nicholas Fitzherbert, bearing an exceedingly well executed effigy of the knight in plate armour. The sides are divided by slender pillars into panels, with crocketed canopies, under which are the carved figures of his several children. He was twice married, and died in 1473. On the opposite side of the chancel is another Fitzherbert monument, in excellent preservation. It is the tomb of Sir Ralph, and Elizabeth, his wife, who died in 1483. The knight is represented in plate armour, his feet resting on a lion, and the lady in a close-fitting bodice and gown and a mantle. On the sides of the tomb, under canopies, are their seven sons and eight daughters. In the floor of the chancel is a large blue stone bearing the brasses of Sir Anthony Fitzherbert, and Maud his second wife, but the brasses have unfortunately been mutilated. On one is a long Latin epitaph, and round the margin remain a few words of another inscription in English. Sir Anthony was a Justice of the Common Pleas, and the author of a celebrated work on the law. He died in 1538. Another slab in the floor, with partially legible inscription, is that of Henry Prince, who was rector of the church from 1466 to 1500, and constructed the present flat roof of the chancel. He is represented, under a canopy, in eucharistic vestments with a chalice in his hand. There are several other ancient slabs, much worn, and some quite illegible. These monuments do not now occupy their original positions, but were removed hither from other parts of the church at the restoration.

The south-east and south-west chapels had each an altar; another altar stood at the east end of the north aisle, and in each case the piscina remains. The two windows of the former chapel retain their ancient stained glass, but now partly obliterated. There is a plain altar tomb of alabaster and marble, with brass, in the south-west chapel to John Fitzherbert, who died in 1531, and in the north aisle to the Mason and Bowyer families. The registers date from 1686. the living is a rectory, worth about £400 yearly, in the gift of S. W. Clowes, Esq., and held by the Rev. Douglas Adamson, M.A. (Immanuel College, Camb.) There are 80 acres of glebe land. Snelston was, until recently, a chapelry under Norbury. A new rectory house was built on another site, about one mile south of the church, in 1870, by S. W. Clowes, Esq.

The old National school, built in 1852, has been superseded by new premises, more conveniently situated in Roston. The cost of erection, close upon £1,000, was defrayed by Mr. Clowes, and the interior furnishings were provided by subscription. It is a neat, grey, brick building, with stone dressings, with accommodation for 94 children, and was opened 4th September, 1894. The bequest of Thomas Williams, consisting of land left in 1687 for the support of a schoolmaster, and now producing £22 per annum, is applied to this school.

ROSTON (Roschintone in Domesday Book) is a considerable village and separate manor, five miles south-west from Ashbourne, and forms a joint township with Norbury. John Harrison, Esq., of Snelston Hall, is the principal owner. The common was enclosed in 1818, and the tithes were commuted in 1844 for £210. The Primitive Methodists erected a small chapel here in 1847, and another was built by the Wesleyans in 1867. The Lecture Hall, on Roston Common, is also used for Divine service. Birchwood Park is a large estate one mile east from Roston. The substratum is limestone, which is quarried to some extent.

CHARITIES.—Robert Bill, about 1728, gave certain lands in Roston for the benefit of the poor. There are no documents relating to this charity, of which the Maskerys have been successively trustees. Mr. W. H. Oldham, nephew of the late Thomas Maskery, is the seventh of the family that has held this trust. S. W. Clowes has been a co-trustee since 1886. The rents amount to £14. There are three small rent-charges, amounting to about £3, which are paid by the rector.

Post Office at Mr. John Prince's (sub), Roston. Letters, via Ashbourne, arrive at 9.15 a.m. Roston box cleared at 3.40 p.m.; Norbury box cleared at 4.0 p.m. No Sunday delivery or despatch. OSMASTON.

This is a parish and township containing 1,267 acres of land, belonging solely (glebe excepted) to Sir Peter Carlaw Walker, Bart., who is also lord of the manor. The soil is a variable mixture of sand and gravel, with clay in some parts, and is chiefly in pasture. The gross rental is £2,673, ratable value £2,386, and the population 264. Osmaston is in Appletree hundred, county council and petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district, and deanery of Ashbourne. For the election of a district councillor Osmaston is united with Yeldersley.

The manor of Osmundestune, as the name was known in Saxon speech, was held with Brailsford by Elfin, under Henry de Ferrers, at the time of the Norman Survey. A few years later this Elfin (or Alfin) de Brailsford gave the town and two parts of the tithes of his lordship of Osmaston to Tutbury Priory, and subsequently the prior and convent obtained possession of the manor, which they held till the dissolution of monasteries at the Reformation. It was then granted to the Knivetons, and Matthew Kniveton died seized of the manor in 1562. His descendants possessed it till 1655, when Sir Andrew Kniveton, impoverished by his loyalty to Charles I., sold it, with Bradley, to Francis Meynell. It was purchased from this family by the late Francis Wright, Esq., and again passed by sale, after the death of that gentleman, to Sir Andrew Barclay Walker, father of the present owner.

Osmaston Manor, the family seat, is a magnificent mansion built by the late Francis Wright, Esq., in 1846-9, at a cost of upwards of £80,000. The building, which is in the pure Elizabethan style, is 330 feet in length by 192 feet, and is surrounded by four beautiful terraced walks. It is built of dark-coloured mountain limestone from Kniveton, with dressings of Stanton stone. The house, gardens, and pleasure grounds cover 36 acres, and these are surrounded by a park of 400 acres. Many alterations and improvements have been effected by the present family. A high stone tower, which stood in the centre of the garden and did duty as a chimney for the whole mansion, has been taken down. An addition, containing several rooms for the accommodation of eight young gardeners, has been recently made, and new stables, comprising fifteen loose boxes for hunters, store-rooms, gig-house, lofts, saddle room, wash-house, and stud-groom's house have just been completed. These splendid stables were designed by A. Macpherson, architect, Derby, and the work was executed by Messrs. Ford & Co.; Robert Cutler, foreman of the bricklayers, and Charles Henson, foreman of the masons. The house is lighted throughout by electricity. The engine is 20-horse power, by Marshall, of Gainsborough. There are two dynamos, one for lighting the premises direct from the dynamo, and the other for charging the accumulator. There are upwards of 400 lamps, each 16-candle power. Richard Williamson is the electrical engineer.

The house fronts the south-east, and commands a magnificent view of four large ornamental lakes and the picturesque sloping woods that fringe their shores. Along part of the south-east front an arcade of seventeen arches stretches to the conservatory—a splendid structure 70 feet by 40 feet. The lower part is built of stone, and all the upper framework is cast-iron. There are extensive vineries, peach-houses, and other glass structures for the growth of decorative plants and the forcing of fruits and vegetables. The palm-house is a beautiful imitation of natural rockwork, and the "rock garden," laid out at an enormous expense—the huge blocks of stone being carted from Ballidon—is a veritable Dovedale in miniature. The pleasure grounds are rich in ornamental trees and shrubs. A portion of the park has just been enclosed with iron railing, 6 feet 6 inches high, for the reception of twenty American elk, purchased in Wyoming, and safely delivered at Osmaston on the 21st of October, 1893.

The village is situated $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Ashbourne, and 11 miles N.W. from Derby. Most of the inhabitants are employed on the estate and live here in trimly kept cottages, some of which still bear their old-time covering of thatch. The Church, which is dedicated to St. Martin, was erected by the late Francis Wright, Esq., in 1845, at a cost of £8,000. It is in the Decorated style of the 14th century, and consists of chancel, nave with side aisles, south porch, vestry, and western tower containing a clock and five bells. The dilapidated edifice that previously occupied the site was a chapel under Brailsford, and is said, but apparently without any authority, to have been commenced A.D. 1400, but not finished on account of the unsettled state of the country, till 1600. The present church is a handsome edifice of dark mountain limestone relieved by light coloured freestone. The aisles are separated from the nave by four pointed arches springing from clustered columns. The chancel was beautifully decorated, and painted windows put in by Sir A. B. Walker, Bart., in commemoration of Her Majesty's Jubilee, 1887. Below the east window, inlaid in the wall, is a very fine representation of the Last Supper, after Da Vinci, and the same beautiful inlaid work representing the vine is carried down the wall on each side of the communion table. The floor is an exquisite piece of mosaic work executed by Italians. The pulpit, desk, and interior furnishings are all of oak, except the lectern, which is an exquisite piece of brass work presented by Sir A. B. Walker. The same gentleman also gave the organ, which cost over £500. The communion plate was the gift of Lady Frances Kniveton about the middle of the 17th century. It bears an inscription in which the name of the parish is spelled Asmoustou. The registers date from 1606.

The living is a vicarage worth £130 per annum, in the gift of Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., and held by the Rev. Lancelot Nicholson. The tithes were commuted in 1837 for a rent-charge of £137, and there are about 21 acres of glebe. A vicarage house was erected in 1881-2, at a cost of £2,200, the principal part of which was subscribed by the Wright family.

The school and master's house were erected at the same time as the church, at a further cost of about £1,000, and a reading-room and library was subsequently added to it by the generous founder.

CHARITIES.—Edward Pegge, in 1666, left £5 4s. yearly to be distributed in bread every Sabbath—one half to Ashbourne and the other half to the poor of Osmaston. Thomas Kniveton, in 1712, left a rent-charge of 20s. to be given to eight poor families on St. Thomas's Day. In 1782 the sum of £50 (poors' money) was invested in the purchase of Gospel Greave Close, containing 1a. 3r. 32p. The rent of this, paid by Sir P. C. Walker, is distributed by the vicar and churchwardens on St. Thomas's Day.

PARWICH.

Parwich is a parish and township containing 3,264 acres and 498 inhabitants. It is valued for rating purposes at £3,775. The principal owners are Mrs. Curtis and Mrs. Lewis, ladies of the manor; Miss Brownson Brownson and others; S. Grindey, Mayfield, Staffs.; Isaac Grindey, Gratton Dale, Elton; Mrs. Dale, and Lord Hindlip, and the overseers and churchwardens for the time being own about 60 acres on Parwich Moor. The parish is situated in the hundred of Wirksworth, electoral division of Hartington, petty sessional division, county court district, union, rural district, and deanery of Ashbourne. It has a parish council of five members, and elects one district councillor.

Parwich (Pevrewic in Domesday Book) formed part of the ancient Crown lands, and together with Ashbourne was granted, soon after the Conquest, to the Ferrers, Earls of Derby. Robert de Ferrers, the grantee's son, took a prominent part in Montfort's rebellion, and his lands were seized by the king. Edward I. conferred the manor upon his brother, Edmund Crouchback, Earl of Lancaster, and it thenceforth became an appendage of the Duchy of Lancaster, under which it was held by the family of Cokayne. It was purchased by Thomas Levinge, Esq., in 1561, and remained in the possession of this family till 1814, when it was sold by Sir Richard Levinge, Bart., to William Evans, Esq., of Allestree Hall, and now belongs to Mrs. Curtis and Mrs. Lewis.

The village is situated in a valley amidst hills, seven miles N. from Ashbourne. The houses are built of the local limestone, and stand chiefly around an open green, through which runs a stream of clear water. The old Manor House, at the west end, built by Sir Richard Levinge, Bart., is now occupied by the vicar. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was rebuilt in 1872, at a cost of £4,500, by Thomas William Evans, Esq., afterwards Sir Thomas William Evans, Bart. It is a handsome edifice in the Norman style, built of limestone with yellow sandstone dressings, and consists of chancel, nave, north and south aisles, and western tower surmounted by a six-sided spire. The previous edifice dated from the 12th century, and two or three of its most interesting features have been preserved in the present structure. One of these is the old Norman tympanum from the south doorway, which has been rebuilt over the west entrance of the present church. This stone is covered with rudely incised figures, unfolding in allegory the mystery of the Redemption. On one side is a lamb bearing a circular-headed cross, symbolizing Christ as the Lamb of God; above the head of the lamb is a dove, typifying the Holy Ghost. The central figure is a hart, representing the Christian convert or true believer; and under the feet of the hart and lamb are two serpents with protruding tongues, emblematic of the Evil One. Above is the swine into which the Unclean Spirit entered, and the remaining figure is a wolf, with tail expanded into a trifolium or shamrock. The latter is the emblem of the Trinity, and the wolf is represented as devouring one of the leaves, symbolizing the denial of the Divinity of Christ by the Jews. The western arch of the present tower is another relic of the old church. It was the chancel arch of that edifice, and is a fine example of Norman work, richly ornamented with zig-zag moulding. The font, too, is Norman work, and of unusual shape. It is round at the top, but a few inches below it tapers down into sixteen sides, and stands on a circular shaft. This church is perhaps one of the best lighted in the country. In the clerestory, above each arch are three small lights, geometrically designed and enriched with two carved pillars, and in each aisle are four double-light windows, another at the west end of each, and the south aisle has also one at the east end. The chancel window comprises three lights, and is filled with stained glass to the memory of Sarah Critchlow, who died in 1862; James Swindell, died 1858; and others. Above the communion table is a reredos of carved stone; the pulpit is also stone-work, and is ornamented with seven carved pillars. The chancel arch is lofty and pointed, but the four arches on each side of the nave separating it from the aisles are semicircular, resting on cylindrical pillars. The only ancient monuments in the church are three slabs, built into the south wall below the west tower. One bears a cross fleury and a sword incised, and is supposed to have been the tombstone of a Crusader. The church is seated with open benches of pitchpine to accommodate nearly 300. The living, formerly a chapelry to Ashbourne, is a vicarage, worth £260 yearly, in the gift of the ladies of the manor, who are also the impropiators of the tithes, and held since 1881 by the Rev. Ernest Horatio May, M.A., Trinity College, Cantab.

The school was erected by T. W. Evans, Esq., in 1861. It is a neat building of limestone, with sandstone dressings, and harmonises with the church. There are two departments, with 118 names on the books. The Wesleyan Methodists have had a chapel in the village since 1849.

About one mile west of the village is Parwich Leys, an extensive farm in the occupation of John Heathcote & Sons.

CHARITIES.—William Beresford, in 1695, left certain lands in Parwich, the rents thereof to be used for the performance of Divine Service according to the Church of England, the education of eight children of the poorest families, and the residue to be distributed amongst the poor. Thurstan Dale, in 1653, left 10s a year to the poor; and George Dakeyne, in 1757, left a rent-charge of 20s per annum for the same purpose. Francis Johnson, in 1800, left £150 for the benefit of the poor; and they also receive a sum yearly from Allsop's charity.

ROWSLEY AND ALPORT.

Rowsley and Alport form a joint township containing 671 acres of land, belonging solely to the Duke of Rutland, who is also lord of the manor. The ratable value is £2,017, and the number of inhabitants 301. It is in the hundred of High Peak, electoral and petty sessional division, poor law union, county court district, and rural deanery of Bakewell. The township occupies the tongue of land between the Derwent and the Wye, and possesses a fertile soil, which is chiefly in grass. The scenery is varied and beautiful—a combination of wood and water, and hill, dale, and meadow.

The village is delightfully situated at the confluence of the river Wye with the Derwent, on the main road, 3½ miles S.E. from Bakewell, 21 from Derby, and near the station of its own name on the Midland railway. It stands amidst beautifully picturesque surroundings, and is a favourite halting place for tourists and visitors. It is conveniently situated for Chatsworth (which is only four miles distant), Haddon Hall (1½ miles), and many other places of interest are within easy reach. There are two large and well-appointed hostelrys—the Station Hotel and the Peacock—where tourists and visitors can obtain every accommodation. A handsome church was erected here, in 1854, by the Duke of Rutland, and dedicated to St. Catherine. A parish was subsequently allotted to it, comprising 1,357 acres, with a population in 1891 of 502. The edifice is in the Norman style of architecture, and comprises a chancel, nave, north aisle, south porch, and bell turret. All the windows of the chancel are filled with stained glass. The east one—of three lights—representing the Resurrection of our Saviour and the Raising of Jairus's Daughter, is a memorial of Catherine Louisa Georgiana, wife of Lord John Manners, who died in 1854, aged 23 years. The chancel arch was erected and the tessellated pavement laid by John C. Browne, Esq., of Bufton Lodge, Desford, Leicestershire, in memory of Jane, his wife. The roof of the church was also decorated by the same gentleman, and two memorial windows placed in the south wall. On the north side of the chancel, and separated from it by small arches resting on columns of Derbyshire marble, is a monumental chapel. Here is a handsome marble monument to the memory of Catherine Louisa Georgiana, Lady Manners, who died in 1854, and Edith Katherine Mary, her infant daughter. The lady is represented in a winding-sheet, with the infant on her left side. At the head of the monument are three angels. The porch was erected by Mrs. Barker, of Rowsley, and the bell in the turret brought from Haddon Hall. The living is a vicarage, worth £175 per annum, in the gift of the Duke of Rutland, and held since 1885 by the Rev. E. C. Parmenter, M.A.

The school, a Gothic structure, with teacher's house, was built by His Grace the Duke of Rutland in 1840, and is attended by close on 100 children.

Alport is a village in this township, situated at the confluence of the river Bradford with the Lathkill. The river flows through a deep valley, the sides of which are well wooded and richly carpeted with velvety turf; and close by commences Lathkill Dale, which can boast of some charmingly beautiful scenery. The village is much frequented by visitors and tourists, for whose accommodation there is a first-class hotel and several lodging houses. Lead mining was formerly carried on here to a considerable extent by the Alport Mining Company, and there were also furnaces for smelting the ore, but both these industries have been discontinued.

Under the Parish and District Councils Act five parish councillors and one district councillor and guardian have been allotted to Rowsley.

SCROPTON AND FOSTON.

Scropton and Foston form a joint township and parish, containing 2,735 acres of land lying on the north bank of the river Dove, which separates it from the adjoining county of Stafford. It is in the hundred of Appletree, electoral and petty sessional division of Sudbury, county court district and poor law union of Burton-on-Trent, Repton rural district, and deanery of Longford. The total ratable value is £7,865, and the population in 1891 was 512. The North Staffordshire Railway passes through the parish, but the nearest station is at Tutbury, two miles distant. The soil is a good light loam on gravel, and is chiefly in grass and pasture. Henry Jack Cumming, Esq., 2, Cambridge Square, London, is lord of the manor and one of the principal landowners. The other proprietors are Messrs. Robert, William, John, George, Joseph, and Thomas Shipton; David Allen, Arthur John Woolrich, the Duke of Devonshire, Thomas Orme, E. E. Orme, William Orme, and Agnes Orme.

Scropton and Foston were two distinct manors, held at the time of the Domesday Survey by Henry de Ferrers. They subsequently formed part of the possessions of the Duchy of Lancaster. The Agards, whose seat was at Foston, held lands in both places from a very early date. Walter Agard was living at Foston in 1275, and five generations of the family had held the lands before him. Arthur Agard, born at Foston in 1540, held the office of deputy chamberlain of the exchequer for 45 years. He wrote a treatise on the Domesday Book, and also some tracts on antiquarian subjects. In conjunction with Sir Robert Cotton and other eminent men he founded the original Society of Antiquaries. He died in 1615, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The Agards held the manor as early as 1310. They were also patrons of the church; and John Agard, of Foston and Sudbury, by will dated 1515, appropriated the tithes of the parish to the endowment of a chantry within the church of Scropton. After the dissolution of the chantry the Agards obtained the tithes again, either by purchase or grant from the Crown, and they remained in the possession of the family until 1675, when they were sold, together with the manor, to Richard Bate Esq., of whose descendant, Brownlow Bate, Esq., they were purchased by the Broadhursts in 1784. The late John Broadhurst, Esq., married the youngest daughter of General Sir Henry Cumming, and, dying without issue, left the estate to his brother-in-law, Sir Arthur Cumming, K.C.B., father of Henry Jack Cumming, Esq., the present owner.

The village of Scropton is situated on the north bank of the river Dove, seven miles N.W. from Burton-on-Trent, 11½ miles W.S.W. from Derby, and 2½ miles E. from Sudbury. The church, dedicated to St. Paul, is a good stone edifice, erected in 1856, on the site of an old one which dated from Saxon times. The style is Gothic, and the plan comprises a spacious chancel, with vestry on the north side, nave, south porch, and west tower containing three bells and a clock. The latter was the gift of Admiral Sir Arthur Cumming. The communion table and reredos are of carved dark mahogany. The latter is divided into 12 panels, on which are paintings of the Apostles. The painted glass in the windows of the chancel was inserted in memory of Catherine, the wife of John Broadhurst, of Foston, Esq., M.P., who died in 1856; there is also a brass to the memory of her husband, who died in 1861. A monument of polished granite on the south wall of the chancel commemorates their son, John Broadhurst, Esq., who died in 1874, and Florence Georgiana Foscan, his wife, who died in 1878. A single-light window in the nave filled with stained glass is a memorial of Admiral Sir Arthur Cumming, K.C.B. Under the west tower is a tablet to Elizabeth Eld, who died in 1885, and left by will £300 for the benefit of the poor, and a further sum of £20 yearly to increase the vicar's stipend. There are also tablets to other members of the same family. Here also stand a few ancient monuments from the old church. One is an altar-tomb bearing the life-sized recumbent effigies of a knight in plate armour between his two wives. The shields on the front of the tomb are uncharged, nor is there any inscription to show whom it commemorates. Another sepulchral slab bears the figure of a man incised upon it, and a Latin inscription asking a prayer for the soul of William Schower (Shore), merchant, of London, who died in 1494. There is also a monumental slab to Mrs. Barbara Newton, who died in 1693, relict of the Hon. Col. Samuel Newton, of South Wingfield. This monument was erected by Richard Bate. The living is, and has been from the earliest times, a donative, in the gift of Henry Jack Cumming, Esq., and held by the Rev. Horatio Charles Moor, M.A. (St. Catherine College, Cantab). The present net value is £94, exclusive of Miss Eld's legacy of £30 yearly.

The school, built in 1850, at an expense of £450, exclusive of the site, which was given by Mr. Broadhurst, was taken over by the School Board in 1870. There is accommodation for 90 children, and an average attendance of 67. The Wesleyans have a small chapel here, built in 1861.

Guinea Farm is the property and residence of Mr. Joseph Shipton. The name is of modern origin. The late Mr. Thomas Shipton, the present owner's father, purchased a box at a sale at Marston-on-Dove, for a trifling sum, and on examining it a secret drawer was found, in which were forty guineas (crown and spade-ace). A law suit was instituted for the recovery of the hidden treasure. The case was carried to the Court of Appeal, when Lord Justice Bramwell decided in favour of the defendant, Mr. Thomas Shipton, who thereupon gave his farm its present name. At Ivy House farm Mr. Blunt keeps his well-known stud of shire horses.

Foston village is situated on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, 11 miles from the former and seven from the latter. The estate was formerly a distinct manner. The Agards were long resident here. Their old hall was destroyed by fire in 1836, and the only portion remaining is the stables. The present hall is a large mansion of red brick with stone dressings, surrounded by an extensive park. The pleasure grounds are beautifully laid out, and a large sheet of ornamental water adds to their picturesqueness. The park is entered through a handsome lodge on the Derby and Uttoxeter road. The hall is the property of Henry Jack Cumming, Esq., and residence of the Hon. G. Allsopp, M.P.

SHIRLEY.

This is a parish and township, embracing an area of 1,630 acres. The townships of Stydd and Yeaveley were formerly included in it, but these have by recent legislation been constituted a separate parish. Shirley is in the hundred of Appletree, the electoral division, county court district, petty sessional division, union, rural district, and deanery of Ashbourne. The soil is a fertile loam with a little gravel; about one-fourth is arable; ratable value £2,773, population 240. The principal landowners are Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., Osmaston Manor; Mrs. Philippa F. E. Shirley (lady of the manor), Wyaston House, Oxford; Rev. Thos. C. Brown, Mr. Timothy Gelsthorpe, and Mr. William Maskrey.

The manor of Scirelei, according to Domesday Book, was held at the time of the Survey by various tenants under Henry de Ferrers. A few years later another family became identified with the place, and took from it the name which still they bear. Their ancestors were lords of Nether Etingdon, in Warwickshire, long before the "base-born Norman" set his foot in England, and Sewall, from whom they claim direct descent, occurs in Domesday Book as holding estates in the counties of Warwick, Lincoln, Northampton, and Derby, though feudal service to Henry de Ferrers, a Norman adventurer, was the condition on which he held his patrimonial lands. Fulcher, his son, was the first of the family who possessed land in this parish; and another Sewall, Fulcher's son and heir, established his residence here, and styled himself De Shirley, which became the family name. Sir Thomas Shirley was a valiant commander, who distinguished himself in the French wars under Edward III. His son, Sir Hugh, was slain fighting for Henry IV. at the battle of Shrewsbury. He was one of the four knights who, to deceive the enemy, habited themselves as the king and displayed the royal arms. Sir Ralph, son of the above, was one of the chief commanders at the battle of Agincourt. Another Sir Ralph Shirley was made a knight banneret for his valour at the battle of Stoke. George Shirley, his descendant, was created a baronet at the first institution of the order in 1611. Sir Robert Shirley, the great grandson of the latter, was declared, in 1677, Lord Ferrers of Chartley, by virtue of his descent from one of the coheiresses of Robert Devereux, last Earl of Essex of that family, and in 1711 he was created Viscount Tamworth and Earl Ferrers. Mrs. Philippa F. E. Shirley, the present lady of the manor, is the widow of the late Rev. Walter Waddington Shirley, D.D., whose son is heir presumptive to the Earl of Ferrers.

The village of Shirley stands amidst some pretty scenery, $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. by S. from Ashbourne, and 10 miles N.W. from Derby. It was a place of some importance in early times, and had its church and priest at the time of the Norman Survey. The dedication is usually said to be to St. Michael, but Dr. Cox, in his "Churches of Derbyshire" (vol. iii., p. 272), gives St. Matthew as the patron. The last relic of the Norman church, a semicircular arch between the nave and the chancel, was removed at the restoration, which took place in 1842. The present edifice dates from the 14th century, and consists of spacious chancel, nave, side aisles, south porch, and west embattled tower containing three bells. The north aisle was added in 1812, and at the same time the tower was taken down and rebuilt, but the foundations of the latter proving defective it was taken down in 1861, and rebuilt on a more substantial basis. The chancel was restored by the late Sir A. B. Walker, Bart., in 1886. The nave is separated from the aisle on each side by two pointed arches supported by an octagonal pillar. The font is ancient, and a portion of the old churchyard cross remains. No ancient memorials are in existence. On the wall of the north aisle is a large monument to the memory of the late Right Rev. Walter Augustus Shirley, Bishop of Sodor and Man, and for six years vicar of this parish, who died in 1847; and also a mural brass cross in memory of Walter Waddington Shirley, D.D., professor of ecclesiastical history at Christ Church, Oxford, son of the above, who died in 1866. The registers commence in 1658. The communion plate is pre-Reformation, and is the only one of that date in the diocese. In the churchyard is a gigantic yew tree which measures 16 feet 7 inches in circumference at the base. It lost some of its longest branches during a gale in March, 1876.

The church of Shirley was given by Fulcher de Ireton, so named from the place of his abode, to the abbey of Darley about 1230, and a few years later the rectory was appropriated and a vicarage ordained and endowed. At the Reformation the living was valued at £6 13s. 4d., present worth £240 with residence and nine acres of glebe. The tithes were commuted for £153. The Rev. W. B. Linton, M.A., Corpus Christi College, has held the living since 1887; patron, Mrs. Shirley. Sir P. C. Walker, Bart., is owner of the chancel.

The National School, with teacher's house, was erected in 1844, and enlarged by the addition of a class-room in 1893. There are 62 names on the books. There is a reading-room and library for the use of the parishioners. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. It is a neat brick building, erected in 1855, with accommodation for about 70. The only object of interest in the parish is the Old Hall, once the residence of the Shirleys. A considerable portion of the moat remains, and one room still retains its oak wainscoting and the arms of the Ferrers carved in oak over the fireplace.

CHARITIES.—Edward Pegge left 20s. to the poor of Shirley. He was owner of the impropriate rectory, and the money is paid out of the Old Rectory farm by the present lay rector, Sir P. C. Walker, Bart. There are also three small rent charges amounting to about 12s.

Post Office at Mr. Thomas Strong's. Letters, via Brailsford, arrive at 8-30 a.m., and are despatched at 5-30 p.m. None on Sundays. Nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office, Osmaston (1½ miles). Nearest Railway Station, Ashbourne (4½ miles).

SNELSTON.

This parish consists of the township of its own name, containing 2,121 acres of land under assessment; ratable value £3,829, and population (1891) 287. The parish lies on the east bank of the river Dove, and the soil is a rich alluvium characteristic of the land near that river. It is chiefly in pasture. The North Staffordshire railway passes through the parish and occupies about ten acres of ground. Snelston is in Appletree hundred; in the electoral division, poor law union, county court district, petty sessional division, rural district and deanery of Ashbourne. John Harrison, Esq., is lord of the manor and principal landowner; Samuel William Clowes, Esq., Norbury Hall; Capt. Duncombe, Goodall's Trustees, and J. Gallimore, have estates here.

The manor of Snellestun (Snelston), at the time of the Domesday Survey, belonged to the Abbot of Burton and Henry de Ferrers. From this time very little is known of its descent till 1699, when, as appears from a marble tablet on the wall of the vestry, Robert Docksey was lord of the manor. His descendant sold the estate about the year 1780 to Mr. William Bowyer, whose daughter and heiress married for her second husband the Rev. Thomas Langley, but dying without surviving issue the estate reverted to her father's sister, wife of Francis Cole, Esq., whose daughter conveyed it in marriage to Edmund Evans, Esq. Elizabeth, the only surviving child of the latter, married John Harrison, Esq., father of the present owner. The hall is a large mansion, of Stanton stone, in the Elizabethan style, standing in a park of 350 acres. The gardens and pleasure grounds are extensive, and are tastefully laid out. There is a large quantity of glass. There may be seen the rarest exotics, whilst ferns, heaths, and Alpine plants find a home in the Rock Garden. The park is studded with a great variety of trees—a perfect arboretum—but what attracts the most attention is a group of auricarias (monkey puzzlers), 80 in number, each tree reaching nearly 50 feet in height, and of perfect form. They are, without doubt, one of the finest collections in England. The hall is the seat of John Harrison, Esq., J.P., D.L., High Sheriff of Derbyshire in 1883-4.

The village is pleasantly situated on the banks of a small brook, 16 miles W. by N. from Derby, 3 miles S.W. from Ashbourne, and 1½ miles from Clifton, the nearest railway station. The church, dedicated to St. Peter, was, with the exception of the tower, wholly rebuilt, remodelled, and spoiled about 70 years ago. It now consists of chancel and nave, with flat plaster ceilings, vestry on north side of chancel, and west tower containing a clock and three bells. The tower is a fine specimen of 15th century work, surmounted by an embattled parapet with pinnacles at the angles. There is an ancient font believed to be over 500 years old. The pews are of the old-fashioned box type, and will accommodate about 200. There are tablets to the memory of members of the Wright, Sadler, and Gallimore families. The living, formerly a perpetual curacy, is now a rectory, worth about £320 per annum, in the gift of the Rev. Duncombe Shafto, and held by the Rev. Arthur Evans, M.A., Pembroke College, Oxon. There are 46 acres of glebe.

The village school is a neat brick building, the property of, and supported by, Mr. Harrison. There are about 40 children in attendance.

Darley Moor is a small hamlet of scattered houses, one mile S.S.E. from Snelston.

From Catlow Hill, an eminence in this parish, an extensive view of the surrounding country can be obtained.

CHARITIES.—Robert Docksey, in 1704, gave to the poor of Snelston 40s. yearly, out of Townsend Croft, to be distributed in coal. Henry Bold, who died in 1804, by deed dated 17th February, 1804, conveyed an estate at Darley Moor to five trustees, to receive the rents and profits thereof, and after paying expenses of repairing and improving the same, to distribute the remainder of such rents and profits yearly amongst the industrious poor inhabitants of the parish, at the discretion of the trustees for the time being.

SOMERSAL HERBERT.

This is a small parish containing 656 acres, lying between Sudbury and Doveridge. The soil is chiefly strong marl, with a little sand and gravel. The total ratable value is £1,098, and the number of inhabitants 85, who are chiefly engaged in agriculture. Lord Vernon, the Marquis of Ormonde, Major Fitz-Herbert, and the Rev. R. H. C. Fitz-Herbert, are owners of the land, and the first named nobleman is lord of the manor. The parish is situated in the hundred of Appletree, electoral and petty sessional division of Sudbury, poor law union and county court district of Uttoxeter, and rural deanery of Longford. For purposes of the Local Government Act of 1894, Somersal Herbert has been added to Sudbury, forming a united parish, styled Sudbury-with-Somersal Herbert, returning two guardians, or rural district councillors, and six parish councillors.

At the time of the Domesday Survey there were two manors in Somersal, which were held by Alcher and Alric, under Henry de Ferrers. One of these manors came into the possession of the Fitz-Herberts at or before the beginning of the 13th century, and from them it obtained the addendum to its name. It was also known as Church Somersal. The estate remained in the possession of this family till the death of Richard Fitz-Herbert, Esq., the last heir male, in 1803, when it passed by bequest to his only surviving sister, Mrs. Frances Fitz-Herbert, and on her death to her nephew, the Rev. Roger Jacson. Subsequently Lord Vernon and Lord St. Helens (Alleyne Fitz-Herbert) purchased an estate which included Somersal Herbert; and afterwards, on a division, this estate was taken by Lord St. Helens. That nobleman left it to his nephew, Sir Henry Fitz-Herbert, Bart., of Tissington. The late Colonel Richard Henry Fitz-Herbert, of Somersal, was the second son of Sir Henry, and father of the present Major Fitz-Herbert and the Rev. R. H. C. Fitz-Herbert, rector, who are half-brothers.

The other manor, Hill Somersal, belonged to the Montgomeries, and passed through them to Lord Vernon. Hill Somersal is now in the parish of Sudbury.

Somersal Hall, the seat and property of Major W. H. M. Fitz-Herbert, is an ancient half-timbered mansion, standing within its own grounds, a little east of the church. Two oak slabs in the inside are inscribed, "Anno Dom. 1564, John Fitz-Herbert and Ellen his wife, I.H.S." This date indicates an addition made to the hall, which was probably erected 150 years previously. The west end was built in 1712, and alterations and additions were made in 1840, and again in 1873.

The village is small, and is situated amidst picturesque scenery, nine miles S. by W. from Ashbourne and $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles from Uttoxeter station on the North Staffordshire railway. The name is also written Somersall and Somershall. The church, which is dedicated to St. Peter, consists of chancel and nave, with a porch of the time of Queen Anne, and a bell turret containing one bell. The body of the fabric was rebuilt in 1836, at a cost of £340. It was again rebuilt, with the exception of the porch, in 1873, in the Perpendicular style, at a cost of £1,000. The font is Norman, and is supposed to date from the 12th century. It is circular in shape, and the bowl is ornamented with an arcade of semicircular interlacing arches; and above this is a border of interlacing circles and lozenges. Another relic of days long past is the effigy of a priest in vestments with a chalice, which formerly blocked up the north window of the chancel, and now lies on the floor. Though the Fitz-Herberts were undoubtedly buried here from an early period, only one of their monuments now remains, that of John Fitz-Herbert and Mary his wife, dated 1601. On the north side of the chancel arch is a brass inscribed, "In loving memory of Ellen Margaret, daughter of James Hepburn, of Tovil Place, Esq., and first wife of Richard Henry Fitz-Herbert, born at Tangore, East Indies, 16th January, 1818, died at Halifax, Nova Scotia, 21st May, 1845, aged 27, leaving one son and two daughters; and of the above Richard Henry Fitz-Herbert, of Somersal Herbert, 2nd son of Sir Henry Fitz-Herbert, of Tissington, Bart., born in London, 29th October, 1809, died at Somersal Herbert, 2nd September, 1885, aged 75." Susan, the second wife of Col. R. H. Fitz-Herbert, died the 2nd of May, 1894, aged 69. The east window is of five lights. A one-light window in the west end is filled with stained glass in memory of Thomas and Elizabeth Robotham, of Ley Hill, Doveridge. In the churchyard is the shaft of an ancient cross, standing on a square base reached by three steps. The shaft is octagonal, and tapers upwards. It is about 12 feet high, and dates from the middle of the 15th century. The registers commence in 1537, the year in which registers were first ordered to be kept. All the entries, from the commencement to the year 1663, were transcribed by the Rev. John Thacker, rector.

The living is a rectory valued in the King's Book at £4 18s. 10d., and now worth £188, with residence, in the gift of Major Fitz-Herbert, and held by the Rev. R. H. C. Fitz-Herbert, B.A. (St. John's Coll., Camb.), since 1885. There are 23 acres of glebe.

STANTON-IN-PEAK-WITH-BIRCHOVER.

This is a joint ecclesiastical parish comprising the township and chapelries of Stanton and Birchover. It is in the hundred of High Peak; petty sessional division, poor law union, county court district, and rural deanery of Bakewell.

Stanton township contains 1,960 acres, of which upwards of 400 are woodlands and plantations. The ratable value is £3,841; and the population, in 1891, was 826. Under the Parish and District Councils Act, six parish councillors have been allotted to Stanton, and it also elects one district councillor and guardian. Major McCreagh Thornhill is lord of the manor and principal owner. The Duke of Rutland, Mr. Samuel Holmes, Mr. Walter S. Holmes, and the Exors. of E. M. Wass, Esq., have also estates here. The soil is light and encumbent on gritstone. The latter is extensively quarried by Messrs. John Prince & Co., who do a large home and export trade. This stone is of excellent quality, and is considered by many to be in every respect equal to that obtained from the neighbouring quarries of Darley Dale. It is extensively used for building purposes, and is manufactured into superior grindstones.

The manor of Stanton was one of the many given by William the Conqueror to Henry de Ferrers. It afterwards belonged to the Foljambes, and Sir Godfrey Foljambe died seized of it in 1377. The Bache family were possessed of lands here from the early part of the 16th century; Ann, the niece and heiress of Raphael Bache, married John Thornhill, Esq., of Thornhill, in the parish of Hope, in 1696. The Hall, long the residence of the Baches, was rebuilt in 1799, from the designs of Linley, of Doncaster. It is surrounded by an extensive park, and is sheltered from the north and east by high grounds and plantations.

The village of Stanton, often designated, by way of distinction, as Stanton-in-the-Peak, is picturesquely situated on the slope of a well-wooded eminence, overlooking a beautiful green valley through which the little river Bradford winds its way to join the Wye. It is distant four miles S.E. from Bakewell, 1½ from Youlgrave, and four miles from Rowsley station on the Midland railway. There was anciently a chapel here, but not a vestage remains to mark the site where it stood. The present church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, was erected by the late W. Pole Thornhill, Esq., in 1838, at a cost of £3,000. It is a neat edifice of stone in the Perpendicular Gothic style, comprising chancel, nave, north and south transepts, and a tower with hexagonal spire, containing six bells. There is a handsome marble tablet, erected in 1855, to the memory of Colonel William Thornhill. The living is a perpetual curacy worth £250 per annum, in the gift of Mrs. McCreagh Thornhill, and held by the Rev. J. E. Jagger, M.A., who resides at Birchover.

The Wesleyans, Wesleyan Reformers, and Primitive Methodists have places of worship in the village. The National School was built by the late Mrs. W. P. Thornhill, and is attended by an average of 93 children. There is a good inn in the village named Flying Childers, after the celebrated race horse. On the summit of a hill at Stanton Wood stands a small square tower, erected in 1833 to commemorate the passing of the Reform Bill.

A rocky ridge, upwards of a mile in width, extends southward through the parish. This was formerly an uncultivated waste, but in the early years of the present century the greater portion of it was enclosed and planted with fir, larch, and chestnut. Scattered over this ridge, known as Stanton Moor, are numerous relics of by-gone ages. Not the least interesting of these is a Druidical circle, about 35 feet in diameter, formed of nine upright stones of various shapes and sizes, and locally known by the name of Nine Ladies. About 34 yards westward from this is another stone, measuring from seven to eight feet each way, called the King Stone, bearing on its eastern face a carved coronet with the date 1826. Near the circle are several cairns, or barrows, most of which have been opened, when urns, burnt bones, glass beads and other remains of antiquity were found. On the eastern side of the moor are three remarkable stones standing about 400 yards apart. One of these, called the Cat Stone, stands on the edge of a precipice; the second one, known from time immemorial as the Gorse Stone, which the learned tell us is only a slightly modified form of the British words Gorsed dau, an elevated place, whence the Druids promulgated their laws. Another, called the Heart Stone, measures 83 feet in circumference. Standing in a walled enclosure on the western side of the wood is the Andle Stone, a huge monolith 15 feet in height, that appears from the regularity of its outline in some parts to have been shaped by art. On one side are two modern inscriptions recording the deaths of the Duke of Wellington and Lieut.-Colonel William Thornhill. Major Rooke asserts that this was a rock idol, but its original purpose will probably ever remain a matter of conjecture.

About two miles S.E. from the village is Stanton Woodhouse, an old Elizabethan house, situated on a wooded declivity commanding extensive prospects. It was formerly the property and residence of the Allens, but now belongs to the Duke of Rutland, who occupies it as a shooting-box.

Stanton is in the Bakewell electoral division. The village feast is held on the nearest Sunday to All Saints' (November 1st).

BIRCHOVER, a small township and chapelry adjoining Stanton, contains 848 acres, rateable value £1,100, and the population in 1891 was 76. The landowners are Major McCreagh Thornhill, lord of the manor; the Duke of Rutland; Mr. Joseph Greator, Winster; Job Smith, Esq., Matlock; Miss S. A. Bradley; Miss M. S. Robinson, Stanton; and Mr. Henry Taylor, Stanton. The soil is light, with some clay, and is encumbered on gritstone. It is chiefly in pasture. For purposes of the Local Government Act of 1894, Birchover has been added to Winster.

The village is small, scattered, and somewhat primitive in its appearance. It is situated 1 mile N.W. from Winster, 3 miles S.E. from Yowlgrave, and 4 miles from Rowsley station, on the Midland railway. A chapel was erected by Thomas Eyre, Esq., of Rowtor, who died in 1717, and endowed by him with £20 a year for the maintenance of a minister or chaplain, "who shall read and use the service of Common Prayer by law established in the Church of England twice every day, and administer the Sacrament every Sunday in the year." The church is dedicated to St. Michael and All Angels, and in 1869 it was enlarged by the addition of a chancel, and otherwise altered and improved, at the sole expense of the late W. P. Thornhill, Esq. It is a plain Gothic building, with a small bell-turret at the west end containing one bell. The living is a perpetual curacy united with Stanton, and under the same patronage. There is no memorial of the Eyre family visible in the church, but there is said to have been one which is now covered up.

The Primitive Methodists and the Wesleyan Reform Union have each a chapel in the village, the former built in 1867 and the latter in 1851. There is an infant school, attended by about a score of children. The Feast is held on the Sunday preceding October 11th.

At the lower end of the village are the famed Rowtor Rocks, an assemblage of gritstone blocks, extending from 70 to 80 yards in length, and piled one above another to the height of 40 or 50 yards in a most irregular and confused manner. A tunnel-like passage, necessitating in some places a stooping posture, winds amongst the rocks to an open platform, where this ridge of huge gritstone blocks of wild and grotesque shapes is seen. Caverns have been excavated in some of the rocks, one of which produces a peculiar echo. Another intricate passage leads to a second platform, with its range of rocks, and a little higher are three seats carved out of the solid rock, in imitation of arm-chairs, upwards of a century ago, under the direction of Mr. Thomas Eyre, of Rowtor Hall. Near the eastern end of this ridge is a huge block of stone, supposed to weigh about 50 tons, usually denominated a rocking-stone, which Pilkington, who wrote in 1789, describes as "so exactly poised upon one end that a child might easily give it a vibrating motion." This stone was senselessly forced from its equilibrium by a party of young men, assembled for the purpose, on Whit-Monday, 1799, and is now immovable. There are other two ponderous stones which, it is said, may be moved by the pressure of the hand. At the foot of the ridge is a little public-house, kept by the guide who conducts visitors over this rocky pile.

About a quarter of a mile distant is another rocky ridge, similar in character to Rowtor Rocks, called Bradley Tor, or Bradley Rocks, from a former owner of the land. Here is another rocking-stone, 32 feet in circumference, which rests on two blocks of stone having a passage between them.

Rowtor estate formerly belonged to a branch of the Eyre family, from whom it was purchased by John Bradley, gent., to whom there is a memorial tablet in the chapel. He died in 1795, leaving the estate to Joseph Hodgkinson. It was subsequently purchased by the late Mr. Thornhill, who pulled down the Old Hall in 1870, and built a parsonage house on the site.

Many relics of the Ancient Britons and Romans have been found on Stanton Moor, and are now in the possession of Mr. Heathcote. These include a quern, or hand mill, an urn, incense cup, and a cinerary urn. His cabinet also contains a great number of geological specimens from the gritstone strata.

The Ancient Order of Druids have a lodge here, which is held at the Druid Inn. The village feast is held on the Sunday preceding October 11th. Birchover is in the Winster electoral division.

STONEY MIDDLETON.

This parish comprises the township of that name, containing 1,141 acres, ratable value £1,571, and the population in 1891 was 423. It is in the hundred of High Peak; county council division of Baslow; petty sessional division, county court district, and union of Bakewell; and deanery of Eyam. It is in the Bakewell rural district, and elects one district councillor. A parish council of five members has been assigned to it. The Duke of Devonshire is lord of the manor, and his Grace, Lord Denman, Robert Hutchinson, Esq., Samuel Furness, and James Harrison are the principal owners.

The manor at an early period belouged to the Bernakes, of Upper Padley, from whom it was purchased in the reign of Edward I. by the Furnivals. From this family it passed by marriage to John, first Earl of Shrewsbury, whom Shakespeare styles "the scourge of France." He fell at the siege of Chatillon, in 1453. Gilbert, the seventh earl, dying without issue, this manor passed to the Countess of Pembroke, one of his coheiresses, thence to the Savilles. It again fell to an heiress, the Countess of Burlington, and thus came to the Cavendish family.

The village of Stoney Middleton is a quaint picturesque place, "as if built," observes Mr. Croston, "with studied irregularity. The houses stand on shelving ledges of limestone rock one above another, sometimes in spots seemingly inaccessible, or scattered along the base of the steep acclivities." There is a goodly number of boot and shoe makers in the village, but the inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and mining. The latter industry has been for sometime on the wane. The lead mines are idle; the two cupolas in which the ore was smelted are in ruins, but barytes is still obtained in considerable quantities and manufactured. Limestone is quarried to some extent. The mineral royalties belong to the Duke of Devonshire, the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, and Sir H. J. Tufton, Bart. Thomas Shimwell, of Great Longston, is the barmaster.

Stoney Middleton was formerly a chapelry to Hathersage, from which it was separated by the intervening parish of Eyam. The church, dedicated to St. Martin, was partially rebuilt in 1759, when the old nave and chancel were taken down, and the present octagonal body, in a quasi Grecian style, added to the old 15th century tower. Within are eight semicircular arches. The tower is low, and contains three bells. The church was re-roofed in 1861, at which time also the gallery was taken down. An ancient font stands in the churchyard. The living is a perpetual curacy, worth £160, in the gift of the Vicar of Hathersage, and held since 1888 by the Rev. J. B. Riddlesden, M.A.

The Wesleyan Reform Chapel is a small plain building. The National School was built in 1835, and enlarged in 1845. There is accommodation for 126 children, and an average attendance of 90.

Middleton Hall, the seat of Lord Denman, stands just beyond the village. It is a picturesque old stone mansion, and previous to coming into possession of Dr. Denman, was used as a parsonage. The building was greatly improved by the late Lord Chief Justice Denman, who principally resided here after his retirement from the bench. Near the house are baths, which are supposed to have been known to the Romans, who had a station at Brough. The springs are of a tepid character, slightly warmer than those of Matlock, and are reputed efficacious in certain diseases. They were dedicated to St. Martin, and connected with them was a well-chapel of the same dedication, which subsequently became the parochial chapel.

On the west side of the village is Middleton Dale, a narrow rocky chasm through which winds the road to Tideswell. On one side the dale is bordered by rugged weather-beaten crags that rise to a height of 300 or 400 feet, presenting a face of perpendicular rock. The scene is extremely gloomy and depressing. The lower parts in some places are partially covered with brushwood, and a few hardy trees struggle for existence; but the upper portion is naked rock, beetling over in places, and in others projecting upwards like turrets and buttresses, presenting the appearance of a range of natural ramparts. Near the entrance of the dale a rocky cliff, rising almost perpendicularly to a considerable elevation, bears the name of the Lover's Leap. From the summit of this cliff, about the year 1760, a damsel of the name of Baddeley, in a frenzy of disappointed love, threw herself into the chasm below, and, incredible as it may appear, she sustained very little injury from her rash attempt at self-destruction. She lived three or four years after this occurrence. Near this rock is a deep cavern, coated with beautiful crystallizations.

CHARITIES.—Thomas Whyte, by will in 1692, gave his lands and premises at Booths, in the parish of Hathersage, to five trustees and their heirs, on trust, that they should pay out of the rents, £6 yearly to the curate of Stoney Middleton, provided he came into the cure with the consent of Benjamin Ashten and the majority of the trustees; otherwise the £6 was to be applied to charitable purposes. He also directed that 10s. should be paid to the clerk, one sixpenny brown loaf and a shilling's worth of flesh meat to each of twenty poor persons resident in the chapelry, on the Feast of the Purification, and again on Easter Eve; and that 10s. should be paid yearly to the person who should provide and distribute the loaves; the remainder of the rents and profits to be divided equally amongst the trustees. The estate consists of 32 acres of old enclosed land, to which, at the inclosure in 1808, nine acres were allotted. Robert Turie, by will in 1720, left a rent-charge of £3 for the education of poor children. Ashton's Dale, amounting to £10 yearly, is distributed amongst the poor in sums varying from 2s. to 10s. The sum of £5 10s. is also received from the Flannel Charity.

SUDBURY.

This is an ancient parish containing an estimated extent of 3,546 acres, ratable valuable £6,677, population 530. It is situated in the hundred of Appletree, petty sessional and electoral division of Sudbury, poor law union and county court district of Uttoxeter, and deanery of Longford. Under the Local Government Act of 1894, the management of parochial affairs is vested in six parish councillors. Somersal Herbert is united with Sudbury for the election of two rural district councillors. The parish lies on the north bank of the river Dove, and possesses a rich loamy soil, which is chiefly in pasture. The North Staffordshire railway passes through the parish, and has a station on the Staffordshire side of the river, about one mile south of the village.

Lord Vernon is lord of the manor and principal owner. At the time of the Domesday Survey the manor belonged to Henry de Ferrers, under whom it was held by one Alcher. Soon afterwards one of the Montgomeries obtained a grant of free warren over his manors of Sudbury, Cubley, and Marchington. The last of this family was Sir John, who died in 1513, leaving three daughters, coheiresses, one of whom, Ellen, brought Sudbury to her husband, Sir John Vernon, son of Sir Henry Vernon, of Haddon; and the estate still remains with the family. The Vernon pedigree extends beyond the Conquest to one William de Vernou, who took his name from the town of Vernon in Normandy, of which he was proprietor. His two sons accompanied the Conqueror to England, and Richard, the eldest, created a baron by Hugh Lupus, Earl of Chester, was the ancestor of the present family. The present peerage dates from 1762, when George Venables Vernon, Esq., was created Lord Vernon, Baron of Kinderton, county Chester. Sudbury Hall, the property of Lord Vernon and residence of John Gretton, Esq., is a commodious mansion in the Elizabethan style, erected by Mrs. Mary Vernon in the early part of the 17th century. It stands in a park of 600 acres, well wooded with oak and other trees. About 100 head of deer are kept, and nestling amongst the trees near the centre of the park is an ornamental deer cote, built in imitation of an ancient ruin, and jocularly referred to as the residence of "My Lord Buck." The principal front faces the south-west, overlooking the terraces, pleasure grounds, and lake. The latter is an ornamental sheet of water nearly half-a-mile in length, supplied from the river Dove, and spanned by a stone bridge of five arches. The pleasure grounds are adorned by a profusion of rare shrubs and trees, and contain miles of beautiful walks. From the terraces charming views are obtained, including Needwood Forest, in Staffordshire. The lawns cover about 15 acres. The gardens are extensive, and contain many choice and rare plants. In the American garden all the plants are natives of the New World. On the walls grow two Westeria Sinensis, whose large clusters of mauve bloom resemble in shape bunches of grapes. A sweet scented white magnolia is also worthy of notice, as also are the tree peony and the tulip tree. The glass includes conservatories, vineries, ferneries, orchid and palm house, &c., &c. The Dowager Queen Adelaide resided here from 1840 to 1843.

The village of Sudbury is pleasantly situated on the Derby and Uttoxeter road, 13 miles from the former, five miles from the latter, and ten miles S. from Ashbourne. The church, dedicated to All Saints, stands within the hall grounds. It is a handsome edifice of stone, comprising chancel (with side chapel), nave, side aisles, organ chamber, south porch, and a low western tower containing six bells. The church of Sudbury is mentioned in Domesday Book, but the edifice was subsequently rebuilt in the Decorated Gothic style, which prevailed in the 14th century. It was enlarged and "beautified" in 1827, and was thoroughly restored by the late Lord Vernon, at a cost of about £8,000. The work was commenced in 1872, and included the re-roofing of the nave, chancel, and south aisle; the insertion of new clerestory windows, and windows of the Perpendicular style in the south aisle and chancel; the extension of the Vernon chapel, and the reseating of the church in oak. The same material has been used in the wood-work throughout. The east window is a handsome one of six lights, representing twelve scenes in the life of Our Lord. It was erected by H.M. Queen Victoria and H.R.H. Prince Albert, in memory of George Edward Anson, Esq., C.B. (son of the Rev. Frederick Anson, rector of Sudbury), for many years keeper of the privy purse to Her Majesty. A two-light window in the south side of the chancel, representing St. Cecilia and St. Margaret, was inserted by the Rev. Frederick Tufnell, in memory of Margaret his wife, daughter of Augustus Henry, Lord Vernon. The reredos is a very beautiful piece of work in white marble, representing the Crucifixion, with figures of Our Lady, St. John, and angels on either side. It is encased in a frame of carved oak. On a brass is inscribed, "To the glory of God, and in memory of Augustus Henry, 6th Baron Vernon, born February 1st, 1829, died May 1st, 1883. The restoration of this church, in which he was greatly interested, and to which he had largely contributed, has been completed as a mark of affection and esteem for his high character and useful public life. The reredos and chancel seats having been added by 151 of his personal friends, the window in the Vernon chapel by the tenants on the estate, and the stone carvings by the rector, the Rev. T. H. Freer." The west window is also a memorial of the same nobleman, "erected by his friends and neighbours," and one in the south aisle is the affectionate tribute of his children. There are also stained glass memorials of Hugo Lawley and the Rev. Frederick Anson, canon of Windsor, and for 41 years rector of Sudbury. The Vernon family are also commemorated by many beautiful monuments in the chapel, which was for many generations their place of sepulture. Against the north wall is the monument of John Vernon, Esquire, grandson of Sir John Vernon and Hellen, one of the daughters and coheiresses of Sir John Montgomery, through whom the manor of Sudburie and divers other lordships and landes came to the Vernons. The said John Vernon died at Upton, but was buried here in 1600. On the monument is a full-length recumbent figure in plate-armour. Under this is the effigy of Mary, his wife, and a long inscription setting forth how, by "her prudent endeavours," she redeemed her husband's estates, and placed them again at "his disposing;" and that he (having no issue himself) left the lordships of Sudbury and Aston to her for life, with remainder to her three sons by her first husband, Walter Vernon, Esq., of Houndhill. There are many other monuments to various members of the family in the Vernon chapel and under the west tower. The stone effigies of two females, placed in the Vernon chapel at the late restoration, and which was probably their original resting place, are supposed to represent two ladies of the Montgomery family, and probably date from the 13th century. The font is modern, and an excellent piece of work. It rests on a shaft, round which are clustered eight small pillars. The registers date from 1673.

The living is a rectory, in the gift of Lord Vernon, net value £530, derived from 119 acres of glebe and the tithes, and held by the Venerable Archdeacon Freer, M.A. (Trinity College, Cantab), canon of Southwell; curate, Rev. Stephen Bousfield, M.A. (St. John's College, Cantab).

There are excellent schools, with residences for the master and mistress, supported by Lord Vernon. There is an Institute and Reading Room for the benefit of the villagers, well supplied with daily and illustrated papers. In connection with it is a good library. A carving class is held here, and a room is provided for the members to work in. A Young Men's Friendly Society meets in the Boy's School, and the Lord Vernon Lodge of Oddfellows (M.U.) is held at the Vernon Arms.

The Kennels of the Meynell Hunt are situated on the Ashbourne road, about one mile from the village. They were erected in 1873, on land purchased from Lord Vernon. The buildings include, besides the kennels, stabling for 34 horses and residences for the huntsman and stud groom. The sanitary and feeding arrangements are as perfect as this scientific age can devise, and the pack of 50 couples is one of the finest in the country. The dogs hunt four days a week (Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday), two days being given to Staffordshire and two to Derbyshire. The pack was previously located at Hoar Cross, in Staffordshire, and was named the Meynell Hunt from Hugo Charles Meynell, Esq., who was master from the commencement in 1818 till 1841, when he was succeeded by Hugo Francis Meynell Ingram. From 1872 to 1878 Lord Waterpark and W. Clowes, Esq., were joint masters, and the former was master till 1881, when he was succeeded by Reginald Chandos Pole, Esq. From 1886 to 1888 H. Bass, Esq., was associated with Mr. Pole, and still holds the mastership. During the whole existence of the Meynell Hunt, the post of huntsman has been held by the same family.

Aston is a hamlet half-a-mile E. of Sudbury village. It is entered in Domesday Book as a separate manor. Hill Somersall is a hamlet two miles N.W. Mackley is an extensive farm, one mile N.E. of the village, in the occupation of Mr. Hellaby. Oaks Green is another small hamlet near the village. Potter Somersall, $2\frac{1}{4}$ miles N.W., receives its name from a pottery once carried on here.

The Feast is held on the Sunday nearest November 5th. The Stocks are still preserved here. They stand near the post office, and will accommodate two persons.
